Roy Miller, advertising director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, sets the pace for others with his display on Nazimova's Salome. He wrote some striking copy and then Hub. Robinson contributed a sketch that supplements the text. There is nothing here about the dance; nothing to convey a false suggestion of nudity. Instead Mr. Miller seeks to interest in the character of the star, the opening lines carrying the main idea. If you sell the dance, you are going to get in bad with your patrons, for the dance is nothing to write letters about, but if you interest them in the character study of the dancer you are selling them goods you can deliver, and interest will extend to the play and not be centered upon the one feature which will fail to please. We like best in this display the portion just above the title, in which the reader is urged to come—at the matinees, if possible, but to come anyway. This is a distinct improvement upon the old urge to attend the matinees to avoid the rush. It says that, but it says still more, and in this Mr. Miller has made a contribtuion to standard copy. In the past few months Mr. Miller has offered a succession of capital displays, but he has done nothing that is better than this for all around effect. We are coming to the belief that Mr. Miller could even advertise Mae Murray without showing her bare legs.

Makes Rule Work Get the Attention

These two designs from the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, will serve to show how the theatre uses rule work to get the same attention that cuts would command when the cuts are not available. The first is the opening announcement for Tess of the Storm Country, and this is set in the form of an announcement card and its envelope, with the house signature as the design on the envelope flap. This is not drawn work, for if you will look closely you will see that the rule does not meet on the right hand corner of the envelope, but this is the only poor join in an intricate job. This took a space five inches across three, and gives real distinction above that carried by the cut. It also served to give the mental impression that this is an event and not just another picture. The second design was a follow ad; a book design with the text on the cover. This is also rule work and very simply done in that it involves no elaborate bent work, though it is no simple matter to get a good lockup on this type of work. It carries remarkably good copy on the production, much better than the average, and carries along the general suggestion of the unusual. With these designs more is done than could be accomplished with double the space and the usual cuts. Cuts are common. This handling suggests the unusual, and it gets over much better than would a more commonplace form. Probably the house used this form because cuts were not handy, but in doing this they lifted the attraction into a class by itself. Rule work as a regular thing is apt to become even staler than cuts, since there is less variety to be had, but a special design for a single attraction now and then will get more attention than cuts if for no other reason than it is different, and if the work is cleverly done, there is the additional appeal to be derived from this fact. We hope that some compositor got a couple of passes on this job. He assuredly deserved them.

page vest pocket programs covering each an entire month, as is possible with a three-day billing. The page size is 2¾ by 4¾, a very handy size for both men and women. Time was when there were hundreds of houses using this most effective advertising form, but the present users are few simple because the V. P. went out of fashion for no good reason. Why not a revival?

Mr. Prendergast also sends along a printed form letter on behalf of a series of one-reel nature pictures, eighteen in number, made in Great Britain. The sales angle is the supposed response to a demand for better educational films, and his copy for this letter is extremely good. Evidently the good short subject is also appreciated abroad.

Stock Cuts Help to Sell Dr. Jack Seats

Here is another example of the use of stock cuts for Dr. Jack. This comes from the Regent Theatre, Blackwell, Okla., which modestly rides at the bottom of the text to give star and title the right of way at the top of the space. The star and title are the chief factors in the sale, but these sprightly cuts help to clinch the sale with their suggestions of lively action and funny situations. Very little text is used in this, and that matches the idea of the cuts.

Gets Big Display by Avoiding Blacks

One of the best laid advertisements for Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" yet turned out comes from the Pershing Theatre, St. Louis, in the form of this 75 lines by 6. It might have been a little better had the two cuts matched each other better in tone, for either one is too black or the other too light; it does not matter which. Our personal preference would be for a lighter tone for the sketch of Doug himself rather than a darker ground for Miss Bennett. Either, however, would yield a better balance, though this is more a matter of artistic appeal than pulling power; though the artistic advertisement, other things being equal, always has the greater strength. The better feature is the combination of type and hand lettering, in which hand work is used to gain the display in a lighter face than most artists would consider necessary, and yet which is more inviting and better calculated to get attention, for that reason, than a display in which the blackest possible ink was slung over the page. Dropping down to type and then reverting to hand lettering again gives a change which enhances the display values of all three sections. "Robin Hood" is a superior attraction and should be handled with greater care than the average program picture, for you make the greater impression if you convey the idea that extra care has been used in the layout because of the extra importance of the picture. This has been done here, and done exceedingly well. It is a nice display, and is early enough to serve as a model to others. It is much superior than the best work even Pete Smith was able to wrest from the Pittsburgh compositors.

Being Different Dominates a Page

This script advertisement is only 50 lines by two, but it stands out on the crowded page of the Chicago Sunday paper like a twenty-four sheet in a mass of ones. There are larger spaces taken by other picture houses, but this one hundred line investment yields a better return than some more than double the space, merely because it is different. This attraction is sold mostly on the title, and the two lines will sell the title better than most arguments, so there is no loss of selling talk and a large gain in publicity through contrast. In a small town where there are only two or three dramatic displays and space runs around twenty cents an inch, the matter of display is less important, though display never is unimportant. Where the line rate is often double the inch rate in the small town, more care must be exercised if money is not to be wasted, and a simple, and not highly original expedient has given the Randolph the run of the page at a smaller cost than others meet for less effective work. It cannot be done every week, nor can it be applied to all plays, but now and then this is a valuable device. Try it sometime if you have an engraver at command. It will be worth the cost of having a cut made, even though you do not, as a rule, go to this expense. But do not make the mistake of using script type unless you use one of the modern faces with character to the letter instead of the monotonous spencerian script. A clear, but not too elegant pen copy is the best, and a marking crayon is better than a pen. Size a card ten times the measurement of the space you intend to fill, then use a heavy crayon and bear down hard. In the reduction the roughness will disappear while the bold effect will remain.

A Weber and North Release

CARDIGAN. (7,000 feet). All star cast. When you run this one, tie up with the schools. A truly wonderful historical production. Plenty of action. Beautiful scenes. Used six, three, one, slide, lobby; attendance was poor on account of very cold weather. Big city, draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

JAN OF THE BIG SNOWS. (4,549 feet). Curwood production. Just an ordinary program picture for me. Scenery good; story rather weak. Had fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Palcerville, California.

SHATTERED IDOLS. (5,850 feet). All star cast. This picture gave splendid satisfaction for us, and while it has no box office appeal, it can be exploited into a winner. It's a big picture, spectacular and interest ing. At the price we paid for it we were delighted with it. The cast, huge production, color are advertising slants. Attendance fair. City of 14,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Everyone enjoyed this exceptional picture. On account of book, exploitation angles are very good. Attendance very good. City of 32,000. Admission 10-25-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

Associated Exhibitors

LURE OF EGYPT. Featured cast, from novel by Norma Lorimer. Here is one of the most perfectly photographed pictures I ever run. The print was perfect and the story exceptionally good. Used one and three sheets to get good attendance. Town of 600, draw mill help. Admission twenty cents. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

WOMAN, WAKE UP. (6,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Our first Vidor. Everybody liked this one. Hope the rest of the Vidors we have booked will be as good. They might have used more light on the interior sets. Used posters and slides for fair attendance in town of 4,500, drawing better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

F. B. O.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. (6,136 feet). Featured cast. Excellent production from every standpoint. F. B. O. is to be congratulated for this achievement. Everyone well pleased. Used twenty-fours, sixes, threes, street ballyhoo, stunt cutout. Attendance good in small town. Jack W. Ogilvie, Lyric Theatre, Fairview, Oklahoma.

SEVEN YEARS' BAD LUCK. (5,000 feet). Star, Max Linder. Absolutely a roar all the way through. Usual advertising brought good attendance in small town drawing general type. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

First National

ALL FOR A WOMAN. (5,873 feet). Star, Emil Jannings. A great picture for those who understand the story of the French Revolution. The acting was wonderful. Some of our audience did not like it because they did not understand it, there not being enough explanation of the Revolution at the start of the picture. The print of this picture was fine and the price right, so we could make money. Used three sheet, slide and posted bills. Attendance fine. Town of 2,800, draw mostly working people. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BOND BOY. (6,902 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Good. Used window cards, billboards, newspapers, had good attendance. Town of 9,237, draw general class. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

COURAGE. (6,000 feet). Sydney Franklin special, with Naomi Childers. A good picture, one that every showman should put on. Many a tear shed during the showing of picture. I had a rainy night. Used one three, three ones, teasers, big newspaper ads. Fair attendance. Town of 2,000, draw residential class. Admission 10-25. W. E. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

COURAGE. (6,000 feet). Sydney Franklin special, with Naomi Childers. This production was wonderfully well acted, but there could have been a little more comedy relief. Playing old pictures like this, as we sometimes do, should cost us about one-half. Usual paper, with poor attendance (very cold). Town of 460, draw families and merchants. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). Mack Sennett Funmakers. I played this on Christmas; purposely picked out a fast moving comedy-drama and it was very well liked. It was ridiculously funny at times and my audience, preferring a "laugh show" to a "sobster," ate it up. If you want to analyze this picture it won't stand it, but if you want to be entertained and are not too critical this one will both thrill and amuse. It's a mixture of everything, comedy predominating. Can't give you no idea of drawing power, for I played it on a holiday and everything goes then. Usual advertising, with excellent attendance. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Filled house first night, turned them away second. And now it looks good for a week's run. Usual advertising got above result. City of 52,000, draw white people only. Admission 20-30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

DINTY. (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. It probably was a good picture before age overtook it. The print we got was terrible; four breaks in one reel, continuity gone, the kind that makes the manager and projectionist nervous. Worst of all, we charged special prices—22-39 cents—had to on account of rental; and I know most of our people were aggravated. Exchange promises an adjustment, but that don't square us with the patrons. Booked for two nights and played but one on account of condition; also had no light power in village until twenty minutes before show. And then people will wonder why exhibitors turn gray headed overnight! Attendance fair. Town of 500, draw rural type. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. (5,192 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. As usual, Katherine MacDonald does not draw here. Had poor attendance. City of 12,000, draw mixed patronage. Admission 10-20-30. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. This one only pleased about half. I was much surprised, as I thought it was going to clean up. We hardly got by on it. The first night killed the second. It might go big in other towns, but it certainly fell flat here. Used every possible means to exploit, with poor attendance. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission for this 15-35, usually 10-22. E. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi

EAST IS WEST. (7,737 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Fine picture, the best the star has put out. Should please all classes. Used newspapers, photos, slide, with good attendance. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Star cast. They didn't seem to care much for it. "Go and Get It" is only Neilan hit here yet; that one was a real one. Town of 4,000, draw family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Star cast. A good crook melodrama that pleased the majority here. It keeps you guessing and has some real good comedy running through the story. The name will draw, but do not advance your admission. Used twenty-four, sixes, threes, slide, photos, with good attendance. Town of 4,800, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. Fine picture for the higher class and for the readers of the book. If you are catering to lower classes, lay off of it. Fine classic, very well produced. School tie-up is advertising slant. Attendance fair. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. This is a wonderful picture, but only suited for the houses catering to high class trade. Better class will say "great!" Use window cards, newspapers. Attendance big. City of 17,000, draw family trade. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

MY BOY. (4,967 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. I guess we exhibitors know that Jackie's salary is above par without the press agent yarns that use up the headlines; nevertheless, I'd rather see the "kid" get the money than some of the over-rated female luminaries whose chief distinction is their physical attraction plus (?) clothes. "My Boy" may not be a world beater and in any other hands would be very commonplace, but Jackie gets everything out of it that is possible. We didn't do much business on "Peck's Bad Boy" or "Trouble," but did well on "My Boy." Warning, film exchanges: don't get the idea "Oliver Twist" is going to be worth any more to us on this account. Used a little extra advertising for good two-night attendance. Town of 300, draw rural class. Admission 20-30, Specials 22-39. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

NOT GUILTY. (6,823 feet). Stars, Sylvia Bremer, Richard Dix. The kind of picture I like to report. Not a great big million-dollar toot, but a right down, genuine exhibitors' picture, showing brains in the making that furnished a little different twist that keeps the interest up to the finish a hundred per cent. This kind brings them back. Used three sheets, had good attendance. Town of 600, draw mill help. Admission twenty cents. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

OLIVER TWIST. (5,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Very good and drew well; ran it four days. Used three twenty-fours, three sixes, fifty cards, newspaper, and had very good attendance. City of 12,000, draw mixed type. Admission 10-20-30. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. (6,137 feet). Constance Talmadge. If we were to say what we actually thought of this picture we would be arrested for bad language. Constance Talmadge could have better occupied her time in taking a good sleep. Certainly this would-be production will hurt her. She is a big card here, but was "all wet" in this one. Gives me the shivers to think of it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

RED HOT ROMANCE. (5,000 feet). Emerson-Loos Production. Could not see any excuse for this picture at all. Got it for one day and sure glad we did not have to run it for three as our franchise calls for. It has satire and humor, but goes over the heads of movie audiences; they take it seriously and do not get the burlesque. Not worth bothering about. City of 14,000, draw general type. Ben L. Morris, Elk Grand and Temple theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

RED HOT ROMANCE. (5,000 feet). For me, absolutely "rotten." I'd lay off. Did a fair business, but it caused more knockers for the theatre than any picture in the last six months. Usual advertising. Town of 2,000; admission 10-15, except for specials. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

ROSE OF THE SEA. (6,037 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Along the usual Stewart lines; if they like the star it will go over. Not much comment, as it lacks something. Usual advertising drew fair attendance. Town of 1,100, draw steel workers and family trade. Admission 10-20, on specials 25-40. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

SCRAP IRON. (5,000 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Fairly good picture, pleased majority. Nothing to rave about; showed ones, threes, sixes, photos, local paper and drew fairly good attendance. Town of 1,500, small town and country draw. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, for F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Marcia Manon, etc. An excellent drama of a crook's reformation. If your town likes these, get this; it's a fine picture. It should do business. Hook it up with the American Legion; that will boost business. Heralds and mailing list pulled good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SONG OF LIFE. (6,920 feet). Featured cast. For me, poor. Smallest attendance in three months. Used newspaper, window cards and billboards. Town of 9,237, draw general class. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ohio.

STAR DUST. (5,600 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Some of the boys have been panning this one, but my people liked it. Whether or not it followed the book is the least of my worries; methinks that about ninety-nine per cent of this hullabaloo was press agent stuff. Good attendance. Town of about 2,000, draw from town and country. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

TROUBLE. (4,800 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Very good. However, the kids get more enjoyment out of Coogan than the grown-ups, but he pleases both. Used ones, heralds, newspaper, in small town; had fair attendance. P. S. Nielsen, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Film-flu! Any of your prints have that? It's a wide-spread disease, according to reports.

Symptoms—careless inspectors in exchanges know them well—torn sprocket holes, scratches on the emulsion, and so on. Develop in time to serious mutilation—that's the acute stage of film-flu.

Serious diseases need drastic remedies. It may come to a time when the exhibitor will book by footage based on the ORIGINAL footage statement of the producer; and there's a law about measurements and weights.

Cure the disease before it gets where it needs the harsh measures.

Exhibitors—tack this sign up in your projection room: "Taking cuts from film is theft! Don't do it. Keep film in as good condition as it comes."

Exchanges—tack this up in front of that girl who runs over the film: "See that damage to film is not overlooked. Keep film in perfect condition. The five dollar man of today may be the fifty dollar man next year." VAN.

Fox

ANY WIFE. (4,597 feet). Star, Pearl White. Great picture, where Miss White certainly is at her best. Used newspaper, three and one sheets, had big attendance. Town of 4,000, draw mixed type. Admission 15-30. Gus Frank, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,400 feet). Star cast with John Gilbert. Ran this to good business. Title drew. Picture did the rest. Good program picture. Used threes, ones, photos, for good attendance. Draw mixed small town type. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

BEYOND PRICE. (5,000 feet). Star, Pearl White. A dandy. Pearl took well in a regular Society picture. Used 11x14 and slide. Attendance fair. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

BOSS OF CAMP FOUR. (4,235 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. Jones is fairly knocking on Mix's heels. This picture is 100 per cent and very, very thrilling. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide, with good attendance. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. (8,291 feet). All star, from Mark Twain humorous book. Did well on this one. Farce, rather than comedy, with lots of action and thrills. Full house. This should go over anywhere. Used extra threes, ones, six, etc. Very good results. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. (8,291 feet). Star cast, from book by Mark Twain. This one had them all laughing; like one of the sub-titles says, "It brought down the house." The film was not in any too good condition, but we fixed it so we could run it. Used threes, slides and bills with good attendance. Town of 2,800, drawing all classes for this one. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CRUSADER. (4,780 feet). Star, William Russell. A fairly good program picture that wasn't thought of as being much here. It will please where they are not too discriminating. A fair program picture that is worth what you consider a fair program picture to be worth in your town. Usual advertising. Good (Saturday night) attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FIGHTING STREAK. (4,888 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Another good Mix picture that pleases them all. Great stuff for the Mix fans. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw high class in large city. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

FIGHTING STREAK. (4,888 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good Mix picture; pleased about eighty per cent. Have played some better, but will please Mix fans. Used one, three, photos, slide, program. Good attendance. Town of 992, draw mixed class. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7,000 feet). Stars, Lewis Stone, Estelle Taylor. Very good vampire picture. Not even in good shape. Used special printed one sheets, throwaways. Attendance good. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. Here, for me, is a "lemon." Can't see why Fox puts Jones in this dress suit stuff. Give him to us in the Western pictures. Attendance was very good. Town of a thousand. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

FOR BIG STAKES. (4,378 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Come on, Tom Mix—give us a picture! The fans are kidding your stuff. Wildly improbable. Mix is killing too many at one shot to suit even the short grass Kansans. Usual advertising pulled fair attendance. Town of 2,850, draw R. R. transients, tourists, farmers. S. H. Blair, Majestic Theatre, Bellville, Kansas.

GET YOUR MAN. (6,408 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. Western picture, with nohing either to recommend or to condemn. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GREAT NIGHT. (4,346 feet). Star, William Russell. A good comedy-drama that will please nearly everyone. Usual advertising got fair attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse "Tony." This is one picture where Tom Mix takes a back seat and gives his horse a chance to make one of the best pictures of Tom's career. Used ones, threes, photos, window cards. Good attendance. Town of 1,700, pull from town and country. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Taft, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse "Tony." The best one Tom has ever made, but most of the credit should go to his horse; if you can't put this one over and make money on it there is something wrong with you. Used posters and mailing list. Pull from small town, with good attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Featured cast. Not a picture for family theatres; might go big in some houses, certainly not in better class. Used cards, newspaper. Attendance poor. City of 17,000, draw family class. Matinee admission 10-17, night 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTS OF THE DESERT. (4,809 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Star well liked here, but the picture is not up to standard, nor as good as some of her others. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Iklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MIXED FACES. (4,400 feet). Star, William Russell. A very clever story of love and politics with lots of comedy and action of the class in which Russell is at his best. A very good pasttime picture for a one day house. Will please patrons, but will cause no great amount of comment. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

THUNDERCLAP. (6,745 feet). Star, Mary Carr. This was our second engagement on this one and it is a genuine knockout wherever they like melodrama. It has several big scenes, a good story and a sterling cast. If you can buy it right you can make money, as it is a real picture. Advertising slants, the race scene and rescue from waterfall. Attendance good. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

VIRGIN PARADISE. (9,000 feet). Star, Pearl White. Entertaining, but the impossible for a story. Held interest all the way through. You see more of the star in this picture than in any other of her pictures. Paid price of Special. Should have been program. Used five ones, set photos, slide to pull average attendance. Town of 2,147, draw all types, both races. Matinee admission ten cents, night 15-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, William Farnum. A good one. Farnum at his best. Give us more like this one. Attendance good. Town of a thousand, regular type. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

Here Are the Late Ones

Exhibitors are sending in reports on some pretty recent subjects. These are mighty well liked. Send something on your own show, Mr. First-and-Second-Run Exhibitor.

FLAME OF LIFE. (Univ.-Priscilla Dean). The best picture she has made for a long time. Folks who come to see Priscilla in "glad rags" will be disappointed, but not in the picture itself. The mine explosion is a peach. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon. (5,780 feet).

BELLBOY 13. (First Natl.-MacLean). Would class this as an ordinary program picture, not good and not bad; proves to be fair entertainment. A. Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico. (3,940 feet).

FURY. (First Natl.-Barthelmess). A real good sea story, a trifle too long, but the action in the last few reels makes up for it. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon. (8,700 feet).

JAZZMANIA. (Metro-Murray). It is a knockout picture. I consider it about the most perfectly produced picture from an audience-pleasing standpoint that I have ever played during my twelve years as an exhibitor. Ross D. Rogers, Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas. (8,500 feet).

Goldwyn

ACE OF HEARTS. (5,883 feet). Stars, Chaney, Bowers, Leatrice Joy. I'd stay away. A money loser. One of the worst I have had from Goldwyn. Usual advertising got fair attendance of regular small town type. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A great picture. I think this is Chaney's masterpiece. Admission 25-40. Used big newspaper display, special lobby display, to get very good (down-town) attendance in large city. Jas. D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR WIFE. (5,574 feet). Not much of a picture. The title drew a good house. The pictures they make now make this look very poor. Gertrude Atherton story. Town of 1,100, draw second and third class at admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

GOLDEN DREAMS. (4,618 feet). All star cast. For me, N. G. (meaning no good). Regular advertising pulled poor crowd, and glad of it. Town of 1,200, draw town and country class. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

GOLDEN DREAMS. (4,618 feet). All star cast. Ran one day to a poor business and can't say much for the picture, as it is a Zane Grey picture—about the poorest Zane Grey. Booked eight pictures from Goldwyn, this is the only poor one. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. Good light comedy-drama. Star overacts a little and the ending is rather abrupt; but it will please most audiences. Town of 800, draw farmers and miscellaneous class. Admission 10-25. Al C. Stewart, Empire Theatre, Waitsburg, Washington.

MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK. (4,804 feet). Special cast. A very pleasing picture. No kicks registered on this one. Advertised as usual. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Hodkinson

HEADLESS HORSEMAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. Star's best. A picture that will please most any audience and you can buy it right. I talked it up a little and packed my house. Used ones, six, photos, slide, window cards, etc. Town of 1,500, regular draw. H. Wall, Ozark Theatre, Barryville, Arkansas.

HEART'S HAVEN. Can't say anything good about this picture. Christian Scientists no doubt would like it. Used two papers and ones, also threes, with poor attendance. Town of 2,400, draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER. (6,000 feet). Stars, Robert McKim, Claire Adams. I judged from "Consensus of Opinion" in World that this would be a weak Zane Grey, however, it drew big for me, and pleased. It's best feature, in my estimation, is some fine cowboy humor. The final handshaking and hugging at the end is awfully ordinary. If we must have such endings, let's have a little more originality to them. Used handbills, hook-up with book store, monthly program, slide, one sheets. Excellent attendance. Town of 300, draw farmer contingent. Admission 15-25, occasionally 20-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

Metro

BROADWAY ROSE. (7,277 feet). Star, Mae Murray. This picture pleased. Well produced, handsomely gowned and directed intelligently. It's not the best the star has had, but it will please. If you don't have to give a "King's Ransom," show it and go after it hard, and your front rows will be also well filled. I used heralds, ones, threes, photos and slide, appealing to health seekers and tourists, secured good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. Not good for small town. "Hands of Nara" killed this star. With me, first day poor—second day, 28 adults, ten kids. (Came in to see the comedy). Lost money. Used photos, slide, 3,000 programs, one, three sheet. Draw small merchants and workers in town of 5,000. W. Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. A very good production, but this star does not pull at this class of theatre. Booked for three days and pulled after one day of poor business. Used front with Italian flavor, ones, threes, sixes. Transient trade in big city. Admission 17-20. J. L. Stallman, Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Nice little program picture. Drew good crowds as star usually does. Everyone seemed to like it. Usual advertising and street stunt pulled good business. Draw high class trade in large city. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

GLASS HOUSES. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A good comedy-drama that pleased a hundred per cent. Kept the audience in good humor throughout. Her pictures fail to draw, however, as we have had so many bad ones of late. Used slide and posters, got poor attendance. Town of 4,200, drawing neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

GREAT REDEEMER. Print so bad we couldn't run it. Refunded money and closed the show. Exchange made no adjustment. We got the "razz." Advertised regular way. Town of about 3,000, usual small town class. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

IDLE RICH. Star, Bert Lytell. Picture well liked. Nothing extra, but people liked it. Film good. Used three, ones, stills, newspaper, heralds, slide. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

SEEIN'S BELIEVING. (4,500 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Nothing to rave about; a good program picture. W. E. Tragsdorf's Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Rex Ingram Production. Very good. Patrons spoke very well of this picture. Advertised with regular newspaper, for mixed patronage, attendance was very good. J. F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

WOMAN'S HATE. A very poor picture; everybody disappointed here. Alice Lake well liked here, but picture not up to date. W. Ventura, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. (8,000 feet). Star cast. All the good I could say would not adequately express my opinion on this one. Book it, and boost it!—and then meet your patrons as they come out. This is a small town, and I had good attendance. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

Paramount

ANNA ASCENDS. (5,959 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Only an average program picture for me. I wouldn't want to pay too much for it. As good as the average Brady picture, however. Advertising angles are poor, so was my attendance. Town of 7,500, drawing better class. Admission 10-17-22-35. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

BACK PAY. Stars, Mat Moore, Seena Owens. Just one more long-drawn-out dress parade. Unwholesome story. In advertising slants there are plenty of possibilities, but wouldn't advertise it too strong. Attendance average. Regular small town of 2,500. Admission 5-10 and 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queens, Arkansas.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Well, to be frank, our patrons said, "Why!" They did not like it as well as the "Sheik." Used heavy exploitation, window display, etc. Attendance was good in town of 7,000, drawing general class. Jno. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

CLARENCE. (6,146 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Played this to packed house both nights. People who had never been inside the house came to see Wallace Reid in this, and everyone went away pleased. Nothing but the most favorable remarks made. My only regret is that I have only one more Reid picture, "Thirty Days," left to play. Reid has made me more money than any one else and will live in the memories of my patrons for years to come. Used six, three, ones, cards, newspaper. Small town, drawing neighborhood type. Admission 10-25. E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, South Dakota.

Report On Shorts

Don't forget, folks, that the one and two-reel subjects mean a lot to the man who is making up his show. If you have room on your blank, sing out about the short ones as well as the features. The knockout two-reeler may save a weak show from flopping.

CRADLE OF COURAGE. (5,000 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Holds one's interest throughout. Very good program picture. Used heralds, photos and ones for good attendance. Harry Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

EBB TIDE. (7,336 feet). Stars, James Kirkwood, Lila Lee. Very good picture which is produced in eight reels. Same old story—the producers ask too much money. Used good advertising for fair attendance. Town of 7,500, draw better class. Admission 10-17-28-35. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

FOOL'S PARADISE. (8,000 feet). Star cast, Cecil DeMille production. One of the best pictures we have ever run. Should please them all. Enough pictures like this will help bring business back. Used photos, six, ones, heralds. Attendance good. Draw town and country class in town of 2,000. Admission 19-25-35. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

GREAT MOMENT. (6,372 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A fair picture, and that's all. Used two ones, 11x14 to get fair attendance. City of 14,000, draw working class. Admission 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

GHOST BREAKER. (5,130 feet). Stars, Wallace Reid, Lila Lee. This picture pleased. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOOD PROVIDER. (7,753 feet). All star. As good as "Humoresque." A perfect gem of a picture. Shown in connection with Chaplin's "Pay Day" and an especially good issue of Pathe News; it made a truly fine program. Bought right this picture ought to do well for any house. My advertising angle was, same cast, author and producer as "Humoresque." Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw merchants, farmers, workers. Average admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HELL DIGGERS. (4,277 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A good picture. We shall certainly miss Wallace Reid. He was always a prime favorite with our patrons. Attendance good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

LOVES OF PHAROAH. (7,352 feet). Foreign cast. A massive foreign production. Pleasing story, well acted, but absolutely no drawing power for me as the stars are unknown. Usual advertising. Fair attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35-40. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Thomas Meighan and star cast. The best of Paramount's so-called "Famous Forty-one" (although they only released thirty-eight). A real picture with a very interesting story plot, excelllent cast and good direction. Contains no padding. For me it was the only successful Special that could be called so of the entire group. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Thomas Meighan and star cast. Best I ever ran. Will please all classes. Book it and boost it. Used ones, threes, photos, window card, twenty-four, for good attendance in town of 2,300. L. C. Hamiter, Bonita Theatre, Marion, Alabama.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Thomas Meighan and star cast. Very good picture. Tom does very good work in this. Used regular advertising, had good attendance. Thomas J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Thomas Meighan and star cast. As a box office attraction it can not be beaten and as a picture it is all that can be said and then some. Push this to the skies and you will not go wrong. Used extra advertising for good attendance. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Cecil De Mille production. Excelent, and a picture that will not only draw but will please a hundred per cent. I wouldn't pay too much for it and I'd say clean up. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

MAN UNCONQUERABLE. (5,795 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good. An interesting tale of the South Sea pearl fisheries. Star does splendidly. Advertised with slide, photos, posters, newspapers. Attendance, great, Xmas day. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admissions, 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not as good as Meighan's recent pictures. Story runs along on two plots of what might have happened. Just an ordinary picture, not worthy of an extended run. Good cast, but poor story value. Big city, neighborhood draw. Admission 10-17. Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison street, Chicago, Illinois.

MORALS. (5,000 feet). Star, May McAvoy. This is a fine little program picture; sent everybody home laughing and they want to see May again. The title is a little misleading, but they came just the same to see it. Used slides and billboards, had good attendance. Country and small town of 800 to draw from. Admission varies. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

MY AMERICAN WIFE. (6,061 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A great and pleasing picture; good enough for any theatre and in any city or town. No kicks registered on this one. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NICE PEOLE. (6,244 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Picture very good. Wallace Reid draws very well here. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. (4,470 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An exceedingly interesting picture. Should please the majority. Advertised to small town patronage with slide and paper, drawing fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NORTH OF RIO GRANDE. (4,770 feet). Stars, Jack Holt, Bebe Daniels. Here is a good Western with two well-known stars. It's only in five reels and should be sold as a program and not as a Special. Pleased them all. Lobby and six sheet brought good attendance. Draw all classes. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Theodore Roberts in star cast. Here's a feature with a kick in it. If you don't make money on it you have yourself to blame. Advertise the star, story and title. Attendance was good. Town of 5,000, mixed types, all nationalities. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Theodore Roberts in star cast. For medium sized towns, up to 100,000, this is the best bet of the first "41" of Paramounts. Attendance was big. City of 50,000, draw better class. Admission 35-50. Claude E. Cody, Gladwin Theatre, Lansing, Michigan.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,056 feet). Featured cast. An epic in film. An old favorite that lives again. Memories of past stage glories revived. A picture that lends dignity to the screen and brings in new business. A really great story with every angle of audience appeal. Attendance was good City of 15,000, draw general class. Admission, ten to thirty. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED. (6,000 feet). Although this picture was released some time ago, we received a brand new print. The picture pleased about seventy-five per cent., mostly the men, as it does not end according to the taste of the women D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ONE A MINUTE. (4,510 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very good picture, full of laughs. Paramount prints from Wilkes-Barre have all been in good shape. Advertised with 11x14s and slides. Town of 1,700, drawing mixed class. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY. (5,100 feet). Once upon a time there came to my theatre a five-reel picture; they call it "One Glorious Day." They said it was a Paramount Picture with instructions If It Is a Paramount It Is the Best Picture In Town. Well, I took their word for it and got busy; put up a big front in advertising and in calling the attention of my friends as they passed by, "Boys, come tonight, we are lined up for a glorious night." Well, they took my word for it and did come. But oh, My! My! when the show started! Right after the first reel I told my projectionist not to turn on the lights, for I did not want them to see me; I was pale through a chill; slipped over to my ticket taker, gave her the keys, told her "Have the boys lock up when the show is over." I could not face the music, which I knew was coming. And it did come! Boys, I'd stay off this one. Listen to a man who knows and paid the penalty. They said advertise it big, I'd do a smashing business. Well, I did come near getting smashed up, I tell you. Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

ON THE HIGH SEAS. (5,050 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Reviewers were not very favorable to this on account of ending. Our people thought it was great, and the ending leaves a good taste. Improbable finishes do not mar a picture in the eyes of the regular movie fan. As a sea story it is top notch. Holt is most pleasing and looks his part. Pleased immensely for three days. Attendance, capacity. City of 15,000, draw general type. Admission, 10 to 30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Olympic, Elk Grand theatres, Bellarie, Ohio.

ON THE HIGH SEAS. (5,650 feet). Stars, Dorothy Dalton, Jack Holt. Very good picture of its kind. Work of stars excellent. If you book it let them know what you have. It has a real good surprise finish. Business only fair. Used special display advertising methods. Town of 6,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

Worst Now Best

J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Oklahoma, has built his bad day into a good day—this is his report on the film that did it:

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL. (Univ.-serial-Acord). Have played seven chapters with good features and turned my weakest day into the best of the week. By playing up the educational part it's bringing in lots of people who otherwise would not see a serial.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. (6,634 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A good program picture with this star. Too long in seven reels; could have ben cut to advantage. Used posters and slides; had poor attendance (big snow storm). C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. (6,634 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A fine picture by a star who always draws for me. Also, the work of Theodore Roberts is especially worthy of mention. Consider this a good picture for a small town. Good advertising possibilities. Advertised with ones, three, slide, post cards. Small town, draw all classes. Attendance, good. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

OUTCAST. (7,309 feet). Star, Elsie Ferguson. A good picture, but a bad print. Patrons' opinions divided; some liked it, some disliked it. Will pass where star is known. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

OVER THE BORDER. (6,837 feet). Star, Betty Compson, Tom Moore. This feature, starring the pair named, is a real Northern. Wonderful scenery and a great picture from all angles. Deals with hootch activities on the Canadian border and its results. It is one of the most beautiful pictures we have ever seen from the angle of the magnificent snow scenes. Advertise with photos, inserts, 22x28 photos, threes and ones. Attendance, neighborhood, good. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast, Cosmopolitan Production. Real good story. Had it not been for the weather we would have had bigger attendance on the second night. Advertised with extra newspaper space. Attendance good. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Featured cast. Frank Borzage produced. Gave the best of satisfaction. A little of everything in this picture, which pleases all classes. Used six, three, ones, cards, for good attendance. Small town, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-25. E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, South Dakota.

RESTLESS SEX. (5,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. An old one that we avoided as long as possible. Very mediocre entertainment. Rather richly produced and we had few kicks on it, but it lacks some of being a good picture. Safe to slip it in for one day if it's bought right, but it will not stand much boosting. Play up author, novel, star, richness. Attendance good. City of 14,000, draw clerks, merchants, farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SINGED WINGS. (7,788 feet). Stars, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel—a Penrhyn Stanlaws production. Did nice business and pleased. Had many compliments on this picture. Used window cards and newspapers, getting better than average attendance. City of 17,000, draw family trade. Matinee admission, 10-17; evenings, 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

SIREN CALL. (5,417 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A good production and well played by the cast. Enjoyed by all who saw it, but the attendance was light. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

SLEEP WALKER. (4,530 feet). Star, Constance Binney. Just an ordinary program picture. Miss Binney is deserving of better parts as she has talent. I draw better class, no rough stuff goes here. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

SLEEP WALKER. (4,530 feet). Star, Constance Binney. Fair program picture. Realarts are the only Paramount pictures that make me any money any more. Like most Paramounts, the star is the chief asset as an advertising slant. Attendance average. Town of 2,500, drawing all classes. Get 5-10 two days, 10-20 three days, 10-30 one day. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

TRAVELING ON. (6,262 feet). Star, W. S. Hart. A picture that drew good business and seemed to please the Hart followers. City of 15,000, draw general type. Admission 20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. (5,243 feet). Star, Wanda Hawley. Good story, good looking star and a good program picture, only I paid too much for it as it is an old Realart picture, about a fourth less would have been okay. Used five ones, photos, slide, three sheet. Attendance average. Town of 2,147, drawing all types of both races. Matinee admission 10, night 15-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,941 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. A splendidly produced picture; splendid exteriors of beauty. Interesting story, acting is fine. In all it is A number one. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. (5,030 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Very junky. Where do they get this gag of calling this a Special? This is about the worst he ever appeared in. Title is about all that's worth anything. Used newspaper, had good attendance. City of 12,000, draw varied types according to appeal made. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Pathe

THAT GIRL MONTANA. Print in rotten shape; not run on that account. Town of 350, draw small town and rural. Admission 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

Preferred Pictures

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. (6,971 feet). All star cast. A fairly good picture from a novel thirty years old which has been brought up to date. Some liked it, others didn't. The titles in color save it. Usual advertising in small town gave average attendance. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

Selznick

JOHN SMITH. (6,000 feet). Star, Eugene O'Brien. As good as any O'Brien ever made. Seemed to please all. Draw family trade, attendance was fair. R J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING. (6,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. One of the best drawing and satisfying pictures of the year. Town of 5,000, draw family patronage. Admission, 25-50-60. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

MRS. LEFFINGWELL'S BOOTS. Star, Constance Talmadge. For the money, this wins. Would suggest that a good two-reel comedy be added to complete a program containing this feature. Advertised regular ways. Attendance was poor, not fault of picture. Town of 282, draw small town and country classes. Admission, 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

PAWNED. (5,000 feet.) Star, Tom Moore. Good. Book it, and if you have an Irish population you will get every one in town. Used tie-up with book stores on the novel and it went over big. Big city, draw transient trade. Admission 17-20. J. L. Stallman, Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

PROPHET'S PARADISE. (4,000 feet). Star, Eugene O'Brien. Not so bad, and none too good. The scenes were above par, and it kept up the spirits of the audience. Advertised regular way. Attendance was fair. Town of 282, draw small town and country types. Admission, 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

REPORTED MISSING. (7,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Enough said when I state that this picture played to an excellent business, second run. The best comedy ever. No advertising, and attendance fine. Town of 1,800, drawing all sorts. Admission, 10-25. J. S. Wadsworth, Republic Theatre, Great Falls, South Carolina.

REPORTED MISSING. (7,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. This show set them laughing all right. One fellow said he hadn't laughed since his wife died twenty years ago. He became so overjoyed he went and got married all over again—don't know if he is laughing yet—doubt it! Usual advertising got good attendance. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Universal

ACROSS THE DEADLINE. (4,886 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. While Mayo as a star is not much of a drawing card with our patrons, the stories supplied for him as a rule are such that his pictures would go over in good shape. This one excites uninterrupted suspense and conjecture from beginning to end. Used one sheets, and had fair attendance. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas. (Sorry, no further Rankin reports till airdome season.)

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Good picture. Used newspaper, posters, slide, for good attendance. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A dandy Alaska picture, that is, Alaska in the summertime, as there is not the usual snow or the dogs. Mayo knocks out a few villains in regular Mayo style. In other words it is a good picture for your roughneck nights. Had good attendance. Town of about 2,000, draw town and environs. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

FIRE EATER. (4,341 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Mr. Laemmle makes a statement at the beginning of this picture that this is Gibson's best picture. Well, if this is his best I feel sorry for the fellows that have to play his others. Business poor on Saturday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Illinois.

First On This

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE. (First Natl.-star cast). The best picture of its type we have seen since "Humoresque." It takes good music to put it over as that is the theme of the picture. Business fair—but not the fault of picture. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon. (8,000 feet).

THE FLIRT. (8,000 feet). Star cast. You will find it a great picture from start to finish. It will please a hundred per cent. Had terrible weather, but still had a fair crowd. Used one, three, six, 11x14, special handbills. Fair attendance for bad weather. Town of 1,100, draw family and steel worker classes. Admission 10-20 20-40. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

THE FLIRT. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Very good. Fair attendance. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

HER NIGHT OF NIGHTS. (5,000 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Very nice picture. Used ones and slide. Fair attendance. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

KINDLED COURAGE. (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. "Hoot" never fails to drag in a fair percentage of the fans. He has a method and a clientele all his own. Wish Universal would "can" the "Eddie" stuff; "Hoot" is good enough, and it's what they all know him by. As a program star he is unbeaten. Advertising slant—root for Hoot. Good attendance. City of 14,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LAVENDER BATH LADY. (5,000 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. Was very much disappointed in this picture and so were my patrons. Universal had better put this little star in better pictures or else "kill her off." Usual advertising in small town drew fair attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

THE STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Feature good, but when it comes to that fire, what improbabilities. I don't understand why they portray stuff that is impossible. Used special printed ones and heralds. Had very good attendance. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

TRIMMED. (4,583 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A mighty good picture which I had many favorable comments on. Hoot always brings 'em in for me. Made some dough. Used two papers, two ones, three, slide, photos, had good attendance. Town of 2,400, draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

United Artists

TESS OF STORM COUNTRY. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. An excellent attraction that delivers the goods. Mary sure came back and surprised us as to her popularity. Usual advertising in small town drew excellent attendance. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

THREE MUSKETEERS. (12,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Pleased the classes good, but did not get by so good with the lower element. A great picture, however, and should be shown wherever price permits. Used ones, threes, sixes, window cards, heralds, photo, lobby, slide. Very good attendance. Town of 2,150, drawing from all classes. Admission, usual 10-20. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

Vitagraph

HEART OF MARYLAND. (6,000 feet). Star, Catherine Calvert. Excellent Civil War picture. We believe this is the only Civil War picture now available to exhibitors. Gave veterans of Civil War and Spanish American War comps and did a fair business. Used threes, photos, heralds, ones. Attendance fair. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

Comedies

FIRE FIGTHERS (Pathe). Our Gang Series. A two-reel comedy that should be played wherever comedies are run. An absolute riot. At times you could hardly stand the cheering. Book it by all means, and step on the advertising. I used heralds and posters. Attendance was good. Town of 4,200, drawing neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Arkansas.

HOMESPUN HERO (Educational). Bobby Vernon. Good. Took fine. Attendance good. Admission 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

KEATON COMEDIES (Metro—eight comedies). I have never shown any other comedies that caused as much favorable comment as these. I have ruined my people for other comedies after showing them this guy. Am now showing them Semons', but although they are good they do not cause the mouth-to-mouth advertising for me that the Keatons did. Usual small town type in town of about 2,000. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS (First Natl.—Keaton). Just a good comedy. Not worth the big price they asked me for it. Attendance was very good. General small town draw. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

MY WIFE'S RELATIONS (First Natl.). Buster Keaton. Just a good comedy, not worth to me the price asked me for it. Attendance veery good. Admission ten cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

OH, PROMISE ME (Educational). Christie Comedy. A comedy that made our audience laugh at times. As good as the average Christie. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

POP TUTTLE'S MOVIE QUEEN. (F. B. O.-Dan Mason). This comedy was either photographed very poorly or we received a very dark positive print. As a comedy it was so-so. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RAINMAKER (Educatl). Lloyd Hamilton. A good, fair comedy. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.) This was our first Lloyd, and certainly pleased our audience a hundred per cent. It is a regular laugh riot. This comedy made them laugh every minute. Used posters and slide, banners on trolley. Attendance good. Town of 4,500, draw better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

365 DAYS. (Pathe-Snub Pollard). A good comedy in two reels, and somewhat different than the usual. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

TREASURE BOUND. (Educational). A good, laughable comedy. Town of 7,000, drawing from general type. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

Serials

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL. (Univ.-Acord). Have just finished this serial and must report that it is better than the average, although the price was too high for me. If your patrons like serials at all it is more than probable that they will like this one. Ran a Century comedy and a two-reel Western with each chapter. Used banner, photos, onés and heralds. Had fair attendance. Town of about two thousand, regular small town and environs. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

PLUNDER. (Pathe-Pearl White). Started off wonderfully well and holding them in line, each week a little better than the previous one. Best drawing serial since the Jack Dempsey serial. Aronson & Browne, Almo Theatre, Raleigh, North Carolina.

TIMBER QUEEN. (Pathe-Ruth Roland). Just finished episode fifteen. Held up all the way through. Consider it to be one of the best serials ever run in my house. If you are showing serials you can't go wrong on this. Action!—lots of it—Ruth is there when it comes to action. City of 15,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Short Subjects

BAR CROSS WAR. (Pathe-Leo Maloney). For two-reel Westerns these cannot be beat. They are clean and carry lots of action. Use ones and threes on them. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FOX NEWS NO. 28. A very well edited picture. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

OLD LEATHER PUSHERS (Univ.-series). Star, Reginald Denny. A cracking good two reel subject, six of them, very good story with abundance of action. Push these hard to the men folks—they'll like it. Used ones and slides, returned fair attendance. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

PATHE NEWS. For real news none can compare with this one. I would as soon part with some of the seats as to do without it. Use ones on it and attendance is, as a rule, good. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

State Rights

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED (Warner Bros.) (7,000 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. Best picture and to best business in last six months. The advertising slants are exceptionally good. Attendance was big. City of 32,000, get 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

I AM THE LAW. (C. C. Burr). (6,800 feet). Star cast. This is as good a Mounted Police story as you can wish for. Price was high, but I raised my admission and made a profit. Photography is wonderful. Used trailer, slide, window cards, billboards. Attendance fine. Small town, 800, draw country type. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

MILKY WAY (Standard). Star, David Butler. For me, the poorest picture ever run, except the "Servant in the House"; even the children made fun of it. Believe me—no more for me. Used newspaper and lobby cards; attendance was poor and glad of it. H. R. Dixon, Unique Theatre, Walton, Kentucky.

NIGHT RIDERS (A. & R.) (5,750 feet). Nothing extra, just a common Western. Used lobby, newspaper, billboards, drew fair business O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

SAGEBRUSH TRAIL (Western Pictures). (4,470 feet). Cast has Majorie Daw, Wallace Beery, Roy Stewart. A good story, well acted; made a good program picture. Nothing excited, not wild and woolly picture, but worth showing in the small towns. No feature. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Town of 2,800, pulled working class for this one. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SHADOWS OF CONSCIENCE (Russell Prod.) (7,000 feet). Featured cast. A very good story, different from the others; just enough of everything in it to make it interesting. Pleased everybody. Usual advertising to neighborhood patronage brought fair attendance. Joe Gorski, Eagle Theatre, Eagle River, Wisconsin.

SHERIFF OF SUN DOG (Arrow). Star, W. Fairbanks. Good, clean Western. Used two ones, 11 x 14 with good result. City of 14,000, draw from working class. Admission 1025. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

STORM GIRL (Security). (5,000 feet). Star, Peggy O'Day. I was stuck up for a picture and was forced to play "Storm Girl," and I was certainly glad that I played this one. It pleases. Eighty per cent picture, to good business. J. Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). (8,000 feet). Special cast. A very entertaining picture for its kind. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE UNKNOWN (Niagara). (5,000 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Rather a good idea to feature a troupe of acrobats and have a little story. Usual advertising brought fairly good attendance. Draw middle class in city of 10,000. Admission twenty-five cents. Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN? (Equity). (6,000 feet). All-star. A corking fine box office magnet and a sure fire pleaser. Did big for us and pleased one hundred per cent. It's an Ace. For advertising slants—the title is crammed with them. City of 14,000, drawing from merchants, farmers, clerks. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WORLD'S A STAGE (Principal Pictures). (6,000 feet). For us, "rotten." Had we written the story instead of Elinor Glynn, they'd have sent it back. Might make a good "lecture film" on "The Curse of Drink." Usual advertising to small town patronage drew fair attendance. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

"The Isle of Lost Ships"

Maurice Tourneur's First National Production Is Unusual, Vigorous and Thrilling Sea Story.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Maurice Tourneur has produced an excellent audience picture in "The Isle of Lost Ships" for First National, based on a sea story by Crittendon Mariott. Your interest is first riveted by the directness of the action and the plunging into the drama with a minimum of preliminaries. Very soon you begin to realize that here is a vigorous and thrilling picture with a story quite different from the ordinary run. The entire action takes place on the sea and concerns very few characters, each of which is exceedingly well portrayed.

It is a red-blooded story of adventure which holds your attention throughout with its vigorous action and good suspense, including a splendid fight which rises to a high tension and ends with a perfect gem of comedy relief, there are several other excellent comedy touches and the women too should like it, for the character of the hero is one that will appeal to them strongly.

Characteristic of Tourneur's production, this picture is artistically made, and a striking feature is the unique sets and shots of the "Isle" itself represented as located in the Sargasso Sea and composed entirley of derelict vessels which have drifted together. Mr. Tourneur deserves great credit for the manner in which he has reproduced this difficult "location."

Another striking feature of the production is the "atmosphere" the director has created and the manner in which he succeeds in bringing the spectators to feel the vividness of the story and intensity of the action.

The picture is portrayed by an exceptional cast, each player seeming to fit the character unusually well. Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nillson have the leading roles with such excellent support as Frank Campeau, Walter Long and Hershall Mayall in roles of scarcely less importance.

Where the little party in a running fight make their escape on a submarine by diving under the old vessels only to become enmeshde in the seaweed, the interest is held tensely and rises to a big climax. These scenes are very dramatic and exceedingly well done.

It is a production which because of its many angles of appeal should prove a fine box office attraction if properly exploited.

They find it inhabited by about fifty people headed by Forbes, a sea captain, who seeks to force Dorothy to marry him. Howard defeats Forbes in a thrilling fight and marries her in name only. "Good-By, Girls"

William Russell Is Starred by Fox in Lively Comedy with Many Thrills

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Comedy and melodrama evenly divide the interest in this latest vehicle for William Russell. While comedy may not be considered his forte by many, there is considerable amusement in the situations. Lively action on the whole and a few thrills furnish an ordinary amount of entertainment.

The hero's adventures in a secluded country estate recall in mild form some of the thrills of "One Exciting Night." Mysterious visitors, lightning disappearances, colored servants in a panic and a lot of unexplained activities lend the desired effect of suspense.

Scenes in and about an attractive suburban estate add to the appeal. Carmel Myers as the lovely heroine vigorously and mysteriously pursued adds the romantic interest. William Russell is not the best type for light comedy, but he makes good use of the moments for heavier acting and comes off with honors in the fighting scenes as usual. The picture has been capably directed and makes the best of the material.

"The Spider and the Rose"

Bennie Ziedman's New Feature Is Surefire With Million Dollar Cast—Principal Pictures Releasing.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

The cast of Bennie Ziedman's "The Spider and the Rose" reads like some of the million dollar talent benefits given at big New York houses now and then. Every role, no matter how small, is in the hands of a capable and proven artist whose work has popularized them with the public and made their names a box office magnet.

But there is something more than an extraordinary cast in "The Spider and the Rose." There is a wonderful production, produced on an elaborate scale and with everything that goes to make a sure-fire box office humdinger. There is a story that is fascinatingly charming in point of narrative and again thrillingly interesting from the viewpoint of action. We find in "The Spider and the Rose" a little bit of "Robin Hood," "Suzanna," "Blood and Sand" and what not. It is distinctly a showman's picture—and if you are a showman you had better grab this immediately; you have title, names, production, story, photography—everything—and you can't go wrong with it.

The settings are big and rich, particularly the exteriors. The time of the story is back in the romantic days when Spanish sons and daughters dominated southern California. It is a beautiful thing all through. The characters are picturesque. And gosh, how those players do act! There is a little of Prizma color to add to the artistry of the piece, with battle scenes and a novel twist to the climax that will throw your patrons out of their seats.

Alice Lake as Paula is beautiful and a complete success in a sympathetic role, while Gaston Glass as Don Marcello, Jr., is wonderful. Others whose work is deserving of credit include little Dick Headrick, Joseph J. Dowling, Robert McKim, Noah Beery, Otis Harlan, Frank Campeau, Macklyn Arbuckle, Alec Francis, Edwin Stevens and Louise Fazenda. Some nifty cast! And some picture!

Story

Paula, sweetheart of Don Marcello, who has pledged himself to the revolutionists seeking freedom from the tyrannical moves of Mendozza, who while secretary of Governor Marcello, is because of the influence he wields over the man, considered the real ruler, is double crossed by Mendozza, who learns of Don's new affiliation. Don's comrades are arrested. They believe Don Marcello a traitor, but are sent away. Marcello later is thrown into the sea by those who believed him a traitor, but he is saved by a fisherman. He learns of the whereabouts of his comrades, effects their escape and, with their aid, succeeds not only in ridding the community of Mendozza, but also reinstalls his father as Governor and wins Paula.

"Where the Pavement Ends"

Vivid Drama and Exquisite Romance of South Seas in Rex Ingram-Metro Picture

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

There is so much to substantiate the appeal in "Where the Pavement Ends" that its popularity, it seems, should be without exception. It is beautifully representative of Rex Ingram. It is permeated with wistful romance and intensified by dramatic effects of extraordinary power. It will afford entertainment for many different tastes. Although the ending is not the conventional happy one, it seems the only plausible solution and should satisfy generally.

A story by John Russell, "The Passionate Vine," has furnished the material. In South Sea Island settings, the romance between a missionary's daughter and a young native chief is told with extremes of idealism and human fiendishness.

Two more exquisite types for the lovers than Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry can hardly be imagined. They seem unusually fitted to play opposite each other. They have physical beauty of the finest type and an imaginative harmony that is seldom seen. Ramon Novarro is like a Greek god at times, and although there is somewhat of a tendency to give him long poses, his work in really dramatic situations dispels any illusions that he has nothing but looks. This is a role that should make him immensely popular, particularly with the younger set. The saintly charm and pathos of Alice Terry's acting will be felt by any one. The co-featuring of these two should mean tremendous box-office results.

The descent through the falls is a unique and thrilling accomplishment. Some marvellously beautiful shots of the falls are included. The suspense is finely managed while the two lovers take this perilous journey down the ravine. A tropical storm and a big fight are other vivid effects. Expert photography helps to make the whole picture enjoyable. Splendid support is given by Edward Connelly as the missionary and Harry T. Morey as the heavy.

In the early part of the picture considerable care has been taken to impress various characteristics of the islanders. Some of this could be cut. It does not add dramatically and there is so much to entertain in what follows that it does not seem necessary.

Adapted and directed by Rex Ingram.
Photography by John F. Seitz.
Length, 7,706 feet.

Story

Pastor Spener, a missionary in Wallos, learns that Captain Gregson has closed his cafe to prove his earnestness as a Christian. Spener's daughter, Matilda, is in love with a handsome young native chief. Her father favors a marriage with Gregson, who is really a villain. The girl and her lover attempt to journey to his home, but their plans fail, and separation seems inevitable. The captain is killed.

"Her Accidental Husband"

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation Has a Swift-Moving Melodramatic Feature of Fisherfolk.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Forrest Stanley scores a personal triumph in the titular role of the Belasco Productions, Inc., special, "Her Accidental Husband," which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is state righting. And right here let it be said that his work is instrumental in "jacking up" the supporting players to the extent that makes the production, which dwells on the romantic adventures of a blind fisherman's daughter, a swift-moving melodrama with plenty of real action, pretentiously luxurious settings with hundreds of people prancing dancingly around, and a story that the feminine patronage will characterize as cute. There is plenty of good material in the picture and Dallas M. Fitzgerald, in his direction, made good use of most of it.

There is a wreck at sea, perilous rescues of drowning persons, a number of realistic and vigorous battles on cliffs and in the water, and splendid photography. While the final status of the girl's seemingly tumultuous romance is obvious after a rescued man has been forced into a hasty marriage by a grief-stricken daughter of the seaman, the story is told so smoothly and with such care in melodramatic construction that it can not help but register as a hit at the box office. "Her Accidental Husband" is a splendid exploitation production, for it presents innumerable angles with unlimited commercial value. As a vehicle of entertainment, however, it will be an asset to any house on any program.

The cast is replete with names that are not unknown, for Miriam Cooper as Rena is at her best, while Mitchell Lewis as the blind seaman, while not called upon to do much, does splendidly. Richard Tucker in a heavy role satisfies. Kate Lester and Maude Wayne give good support, though called upon to do very little, the burden of the work falling to Miss Cooper and Forrest Stanley.

Length, 5,800 feet.

In a successful effort to save Gordon Gray, who had figured in a wreck, Rena Goring loses her blind father, who in his delirium over the girl's absence had walked off the fishing schooner and drowned. Grief-stricken, the girl blames Gordon for his death, and, determined to fulfill her promise to her father that the schooner would continue functioning until rotted away, she forces Gordon to marry her. Their life is unhappy.

Finally, Gordon takes the girl to his mother and there Rena meets Dupre, a man-about-town, who poses as an artist and whom she had met in her village. Dupre makes violent love to Rena, who accepts his advances in an effort to force Gordon to pay for her unhappiness and loss of her father. But Gordon, knowing Dupre, warns him to remain away from his wife, the latter rebelling, and when cornered, after her husband offers to free her, learns she loves him. She seeks forgetfulness on her fishing schooner where she is followed by Dupre, who attacks her. Gordon, too, has gone to Rena and arrives in time to save her. After a bitter fight in the water, on a hillside and finally on the edge of a cliff, Gordon wins and Rena announces her love for him.

"Single-Handed"

Comedy Predominates in Newest Universal Production for Ed (Hoot) Gibson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The story of a fiddler, a circus and a treasure cave affords Ed (Hoot) Gibson good opportunities for action and comedy. "Single-Handed" is a little of everything that pleases the average audience. It has a cyclone for thrills, a boob hero for comedy and a circus for a combination of both.

Action in the first part consists of a rapid sequence of escapes from a sheriff who wants the hero for a crime of which he is innocent. The circus as a place of hiding offers some good comedy angles. Gibson poses as everything from a trained bear to a legless-armless wonder. His biggest stunt, the leap-for-life, is interrupted by nothing short of a cyclone, which is managed principally with comedy effect.

Almost all of the picture is far-fetched and the treasure-hunt is a rather overworked idea. But the performance is entertaining and the mood is light and farcical, so for this reason the picture should be welcome in the average theatre. Hoot Gibson is an effective source of human interest and laughs. Elinor Field is the pretty heroine who spurs him on in the treasure-hunt.

The boob conceals himself in a circus, finds the other half of the chart, saves himself from the sheriff and finally outwits the gang, securing the treasure for himself and the girl.

"Your Friend and Mine"

Metro Produces Willard Mack Stage Drama with Enid Bennett in Featured Role

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Willard Mack's stage drama, "Your Friend and Mine," has been converted into a rather intricate, elaborate screen plot, produced in a style that is in keeping with popular demands. A conventional theme has been treated in melodramatic fashion. In compensating for familiar material and obvious emotional appeal, there is a certain glamour of treatment that will register favorably.

A triangular love story is the center of interest. There are a number of subordinate motives that have no vital relation to the main plot, but seem to have been included more for the sake of elaboration. The superfluous member of the triangle is a dissolute artist. One of his former affairs in which a betrayed woman is the sympathetic note is depicted in a manner that is too reminiscent of the old school to be entirely effective. The playwright and his wife add a rather light touch that makes the story progress more entertainingly. But a lack of originality throughout is a disappointing feature.

The most dramatic point is the familiar scene of the husband cross-examining a faithless wife, with the villain hid behind a curtain. Enid Bennett and Huntly Gordon go through this in conventional style. The director seems to have interpreted it without humor.

In many theatres where problem dramas in attractive conventional settings, with touches of Bohemian atmosphere, are in demand, this performance should please. The cast includes also Willard Mack and Rosemary Theby.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

Bits and Hits of the Passing Week

MANY independent exchangemen have written to this department seeking information relative to the plans of the national exhibitor distributing organization, recently incorporated. We must confess we have heard nothing regarding their plans, although we expect to hear more about them at the national exhibitor convention in Chicago in May.

AND, speaking of the national exhibitor convention, we would advise as many independents as can possibly get away from their business to make the trip to Chicago. It will be worth while in more ways than one, for we expect the greatest and most important exhibitor convention ever held—and we know there are a number of matters of vital importance to independents that will come up for independents.

BENNIE ZIEDMAN has turned out another production that looks like a consistent money-maker. It is "The Spider and the Rose," with a brilliant, all-star cast—and a rapid-moving story, brimful of melodramatic action that is backed with pretentiously colorful settings of the elaborate type. Principal Pictures Corporation is releasing this special.

NOW prepare for a deluge of Tut-Ankh-Amen pictures. Burton King will shortly make a "Tut" picture. England already has four of them. What next?

THE acquisition of the services of Lenore Ulric by the Warner Brothers-David Belasco combination for "Tiger Rose" is a piece of news that is most welcome. It merely bears out what we have said in the past that the Belasco-Warner deal will bring to the screen names that the public long has hoped would grace the silver sheet.

IT will be interesting, too, to know just what sort of productions Warner Brothers make of the Belasco masterpieces. We were pleased to hear that Sid Franklin had been signed to direct "Tiger Rose," for we know of no director who is any more capable of producing that masterpiece along lines that will be strictly Belascoesque than the man who made such a colorfully dramatic production of Norris' difficult character study, "Brass."

THE more we see of "Brass"—and we saw it a second time at the New York Strand this week—the more we like it, and the more we appreciate the excellence of Franklin's work. "Brass," as we conceived it after reading the book this week, is nothing more than a study of various characters. The story, as written by Norris, can hardly be said to be adaptable to the screen. Yet the adapters of "Brass," the screen product, improved on the characters of the book, serving out a logical sequence with a conclusion that is a compromise between a happy and sad ending. And the way in which the story was worked up to this situation is, in our humble opinion, a new departure in picture-making—and daring—but, nevertheless, a showman's solution of a most difficult problem.

WHAT Warner Brothers will do with Sasha Guitry's "Deburau" and "Babbitt," not to forget "Main Street," which, we understand, will be released next month, is awaited with interest, for those are stories that, in literary construction, do not vary much from "Brass"—and their adaptation to the screen should give us something to think about.

THE effort reported being made on the coast to unionize players appearing in independently-made productions is farcical not only in motive, but in intimation as well. Those who have been mentioned in connection with the movement are practically unknown to the business in general. A unionization of independent players is impractical, and can certainly do the player no good.

ONE important reason why Al Lichtman's distribution proposition is such a great financial success is found in the fact that producer, distributor, exchangeman and exhibitor all make a substantial profit. It is indeed a co-partnership plan, which, backed by money-making attractions, is winning for the Al Lichtman Corporation a place in the industry that is the envy of no few.

A Word to the Wise

The enterprising and energetic independent producer and distributor will lose no time completing his plans for 1923-24. We are happy to hear from C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. We know what Warner Brothers will have for next season. And also what to expect from C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation and Principal Pictures.

Mr. Independent Producer and Distributor, announce your 1923-24 plans as soon as possible. Don't wait until August to line up product for next season. Then it will be late! If independent productions are to be considered competition, the competition must conform to the business-like tactics of our opposition.

If you want good exhibitor patronage, start now informing the exhibitor what you will have in 1923-24. He starts booking for next season within two or three months. Now is the time to sell him. Not when he has clogged his booking dates.—R. F.

WE take this means of extending our thanks to the many kind persons who, either by letter or telegram, expressed their satisfaction over the recent "Who's Who and What's What" edition of the Independent Department of Moving Picture World.

THAT Warner Brothers versus Second National Exchange (Balaban & Katz) case promises to develop a number of angles of interest to the entire industry.

SOME independent distributors we know and have met are inclined to believe that publicity and exploitation is unimportant; that press books mean nothing. Fact is these unthinking distributors are still lagging behind the procession and wondering why they are not up among the leaders.

AND, by the way, have you been observing the development of our independent news service? It is the only one of its kind in the business covering the independent market from every angle. Incidentally, Moving Picture World is giving the trade in general more live and up-to-date news in a single issue than our competitors are giving in six months. Think this over—then you will understand why independents all read and demand Moving Picture World.

SYSTEM, many independent exchangemen are discovering, is as applicable to the film business as it is to other industries. And it won't be a bad idea for some exchanges to systematize their own offices before even attempting to buy pictures for next season. System means organization—and a systematically operated organization is an asset.

THERE is a general tendency among independent producers to lengthen their productions to a point where it is beginning to hurt the box office. This is a problem that directors and producers must solve—and they can by eliminating waste and extravagance. The most successful directors in the business are doing it—so it certainly can be done.

THE exchangeman who is that wise that he knows when he has enough pictures in stock is a blessing to the industry—and, also, this type of exchangeman usually ranks among the most prosperous of his territory. Overstocking an exchange is not the quickest route to successful distribution—it's a liability.

THAT, after all, reviews represent nothing more or less than the individual opinion of the writer is being proven in New York every week. It is seldom that all newspaper critics agree on a picture.

WITHIN the next two weeks we expect to make announcement of the invasion of the independent field by a well-known magnate whose name stands for the best in the business. This gentleman is at the helm of an organization that is now being formed and has the financial backing of substantial bankers and business men. He will have something like eight specials for release next season. These productions, in which established stars will be featured and which will be made by competent directors, will be released through independent exchanges on a co-partnership basis. Watch this department for the first news of this new and important organization.

JUST how Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells will release "Othello" remains to be seen. After having played two weeks to big business at the Criterion in New York, the picture was moved up Broadway to the Rivoli Theatre, where it is enjoying good patronage this week. Just how this picture will score out of town remains to be seen.

ONE independent producer some time ago offered a big price for the screen rights to "The Fool," in which James Kirkwood is starring, in New York. However, this week we heard Fox Film Corporation will make the screen version, which means the independent bidder lost out. "The Fool" should make a wonderful feature.

Lenore Ulric Is Signed for David Belasco's "Tiger Rose" by Warners

Negotiations, exclusively reported in this department of Moving Picture World three weeks ago, as predicted then, resulted this week in the signing of Lenore Ulric, famous David Belasco star, for the leading role in "Tiger Rose," which Warner Brothers will make as a consequence of a partnership agreement made with the great American producer. Harry M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, announced the consummation of this deal this week. Another internationally known star also will be signed by Warner Brothers within the next two weeks and her identity will be disclosed in this department as soon as the deal is closed officially. This is the second member of America's theatrical aristocracy that Mr. Warner has signed, the other being John Barrymore, who will appear in "Beau Brummel," and probably "Deburau," the Sasha Guitry success made famous by Lionel Atwill. B. F. Roeder, general manager for David Belasco, acted for the latter in the Warner-Belasco co-partnership agreement, which means the Warner firm will adapt virtually all of the great Belasco productions to the screen.

Sidney Franklin, who directed "Brass," and formerly director for Constance and Norma Talmadge, will direct "Tiger Rose," the selection of Mr. Franklin having been personally made by Mr. Belasco. Edmund Goulding will write the continuity.

Both Messrs. Warner and Roeder are enthusiastic over this new phase of the important Warner-Belasco deal, Mr. Warner, in part, commenting as follows:

"We are proud, indeed, to have been able to secure Miss Ulric to appear in the photograph of her great stage success. The play is particularly adaptable for the screen, and it offers unlimited opportunities for the making of a big box-office attraction. In this connection Miss Ulric is exactly the type suitable for the screen, and the combination of Mr. Belasco, the star, director and continuity writer cannot be improved upon. These factors will bring about one of the greatest money-making attractions of the business."

Mr. Roeder, who has been general manager for Mr. Belasco for more than 30 years, said to Moving Picture World.

"However, we are particularly happy to have successfully consummated our arrangement with the Warner Brothers. In our opinion, the organization is progressive and entirely in accord with Mr. Belasco's constant endeavor to idealize his every understanding. The selection of Mr. Franklin to direct the production meets with Mr. Belasco's approval, and the entire arrangement is highly satisfactory in every way."

Miss Ulric has been appearing for the past two seasons in the Belasco play, "Kiki." While the popularity of the play shows no signs of abatement, Miss Ulric, however, had planned to go to Europe this summer for a vacation. But at the advice of Mr. Belasco, following the consummation of the picture arrangement, she will terminate her engagement at the Belasco Theatre the latter part of May and leave immediately for the Warner Brothers sudios in Los Angeles to begin active work on "Tiger Rose."

An important feature in connection with the arrangements is that Mr. Belasco will personally, and for the first time in his career, invade a photoplay studio in order to infuse into the filming of the production the high standards he so successfully employs in his stage plays. He is expected to leave for Los Angeles about June 1.

LENORE ULRIC

Nigh's Picture Will Be Ready Next Week

Production on the next Will Nigh special, "Marriage and Morals," which L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North will release in the independent market, will be completed next week, according to information gathered at the Metro studio in New York, where Nigh and his company have been "shooting" for the past six weeks. It is believed that "Marriage and Morals" will be ready for distribution by Weber & North late in April.

The cast engaged for "Marriage and Morals" is one of the most notable signed for an independent production made in New York this season. It is headed by Tom Moore, one of the most popular leading men in the business. Playing opposite him is Ann Forrest, well known both on the stage and screen. The supporting cast includes Florence Billing, Edmund Breece, Jack Galsworthy, Tom Lewis, Charles Craig, and the two youthful players, Russell Griffen and Mickey Bennett.

Ben Bahrens is Director Nigh's assistant, while Jack Schultz is the technical director. The photographers are Jack Brown and Sidney Hickox.

Gregory La Cava and Richard Thorpe of the C. C. Burr production forces returned this week from Florida, where they were in charge of a comedy company that made "The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly."

On April 15 another C. C. Burr troupe of comedy players will go to Bermuda to take exteriors for forthcoming comedies. Kathlene Martyn and Charley Murray will head the fun makers who will make the trip.

The next Daniel Carson Goodman picture for Equity distribution will be made at the Tiffany studios in West 44th street, New York City, according to announcement made by Goodman this week.

In so far as could be ascertained this week all of the Elaine Hammerstein pictures that Truart Pictures Corporation will state right will be made on the West Coast instead of New York. This plan, however, may undergo a change.

Burton King in "Complications," which he will shortly release, has got the jump on other producers, for he will be the first director in this country to incorporate in his production scenes and acting depicting the life as it was some years back in the days of the famous Tut-Ankeh-Amen, a Pharaoh, whose tomb was discovered a few weeks ago.

The demand for stories among independent producers, both in the Coast and local studios, is greater than ever.

Independent stars and players in New York attended the Paramount ball en masse at the Commodore Hotel last Friday night. Among those who were on hand were Tom Moore, Johnny Hines, Ann Forrest, Zena Keefe, Mary Alden, Mary Astor, Harry Morey and many others.

Guy Bates Post Supporting Cast Set; Coast News

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—Announcement of the personnel cast in support of "The Man from Ten Strike," starring Guy Bates Post, which will be that star's first Principal Pictures Corporation picture, was made this week. It includes Grace Darmond, Cleo Madison and George Siegmann. "The Man from Ten Strike" is based on a James Oliver Curwood story. Robert T. Thornby will direct.

F. M. Sanford of Sanford Productions, Inc., left this city last week for the East with a print of his latest feature, "Follow Me," starring Pat O'Malley, Cleo Madison, Otto Lederer, Frank Hayes and others. He will make several stops while en route. He will make his offices at the Astor Hotel in New York.

"Main Street," the latest Warner Brothers' 1922-23 production, has been completed and will be ready for shipment to New York late this month. This picture will be ready for release late in April.

The Rintintin dog picture, tentatively titled "Wolf Fangs," will be the first of the 1924 Warner releases, it is believed here.

David Belasco is expected to come to the Warner studios here some time in July to personally supervise the production by Warner Brothers of several of his successful plays. A rousing reception will greet the famous stage producer.

Three independent producers have been approached with propositions from representatives who said they were speaking for the new exhibition direct releasing organization, which, it is said here, will begin functioning early in August.

Choice Productions, Inc., which recently took over the Francis Ford studio here, have started there the production of two-reel Choice comedies. The studio has been renamed Choice studio.

Anna May is working in "The Fog" which Max Graf is making up in San Francisco.

Harry Rapf of the Warner staff and producer of many big Warner specials, is so well "sold" on the Coast and its climate that he has not only moved his family here, but incidently he purchased his own home in Hollywood.

Max Balaban of the Balaban Brothers' independent releasing firm and with extensive theatre holding interests in Chicago is on the Coast renewing old acquaintances and looking things over generally.

Finis Fox Starts New Production

Finis Fox, author, director and independent producer, has started work at the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, Cal., on his third independent production, "The Man Between," a virile drama of modern life in the quaint old city of Quebec.

The principal roles in the story are to be portrayed by well known artists and among those thus far engaged are Allan Forrest, Philo McCullough, Edna Murphy, Vola Vale, Kittie Bradbury, Fred Malatesta and Doreen Turner.

R. W. Baremore, publicity and exploitation director for C. C. Burr, is confined to his home with illness. He is recovering rapidly, however.

Eighteen Specials Will Be on C. B. C.'s Program for 1923-24

In keeping with its spirit of optimism as regards the future which confronts the independent producers and distributors, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has completed the most ambitious plans ever undertaken by that organization. In accordance with these plans C. B. C. will release eighteen productions this year. Each of these features will contain all-star casts, which have so greatly helped the product of the independents to achieve their present popularity.

According to Jack Cohn this important step on the part of his organization is the direct result of the recognition now being accorded the state-rights exchanges by exhibitors the country over. These exchanges are now in the market for big features, and are willing to pay the prices which the production costs of these pictures involve.

"There is no mistaking the feeling which pervades the independent exchangemen," declared Mr. Cohn. "The last few months have filled them with optimism. Every buyer who has visited the C. B. C. offices recently has told of the big exhibitors awakening to the fact that the independently produced pictures are money-makers. Every message we get from Joe Brandt, who is now visiting the exchange centers, contains the same information. It is because of this that our organization is gearing up its production and distributing efforts so that all of the eighteen pictures now planned will be placed in the hands of our buying clientele this year.

"C. B. C. will release six of these pictures under its own trade mark. Six pictures will be produced by Belasco Productions, Inc. Six more will be issued bearing the brand Columbia Pictures.

"'Temptation' and 'Her Accidental Husband,' two of the big eighteen, have been completed, and are now ready. Production on three others is about to be started. These are 'Pal of Mine,' 'Forgive and Forget' and 'The Lure of Broadway.' The casts are now being assembled, and the names of the stars featured in them, as well as the directors entrusted with the task of transferring the stories to the screen, will be announced shortly."

Syd Rosenthal K. C. Exchange

KANSAS CITY—(Special)—Kansas City has another independent film exchange. Syd Rosenthal, former general manager of the Mid-States Distributing Corp., has organized his own company and began business this week under the name of the Sydro Distributing Co.

Syd Rosenthal has been in this territory for the last six months as general manager of Mid-States exchange and during that time he has been making a careful study of the wants and needs of the exhibitors, with the view of starting his own company.

As a starter Syd has secured the distribution rights to some of the best pictures on the independent market. Among these are the 1923 Dick Hatton westerns and a brand new series of Francis Ford productions. The two-reel series of Better Films, which are being produced by the Woman's Home Companion will also be released by the Sydro Distributing Company. These pictures are being heavily advertised by the Woman's Home Companion, and it is known that several local independent exchanges are negotiating for these short features.

On March 1 Jack Underwood, branch manager of the St. Louis exchange of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, celebrated his seventh anniversary with that company. It is the exception rather than the rule that people in the film business have as long a term of service as this with the same company, and Mr. Underwood is to be congratulated upon his unusually long term of service.

Johnnie Waters, the champion rummy player of the industry, was in Kansas City last week conferring with W. K. Jenkins, president of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation. Johnnie is the Enterprise manager at Omaha and an old-timer here.

Truly B. Wildman, manager of the Kansas City Enterprise exchange, screened "The World's A Stage" at the Isis Theatre last week for Jack Roth and several members of the Woman's City Club.

District Manager Jenkins of Enterprise passed through St. Louis last week on his way from Atlanta to the Sea. But this time it was the Pacific and not the Atlantic.

S. J. Hankin, former president of Fine Arts Pictures Corporation, is in St. Louis and is said to contemplate opening a new independent film exchange.

Newsy Bits

Many independent exchangemen from various parts of the country came to New York this week. William Shapiro, of Franklin Film Exchange, Boston, arrived in New York Monday night, and immediately opened negotiations with Principal Pictures Corporation, for Bennie Ziedman's "The Spider and the Rose." David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc.; Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia and Washington; Bob Savini of Savin Films, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., and others were also visitors to New York this week.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, who is interested in the Bond Photoplays Corporation of Buffalo, visited the Bison City last week and made a number of changes at the Buffalo exchange. George Canty, a salesman, was assigned to the Rochester territory.

Gregory La Cava and Richard Thorpe this week returned from Jacksonville, Fla., where they had been shooting pictures with the C. C. Burr All-Star Comedy players. They made "The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly" there.

Kathleene Martyn, Charley Murray and others will go to Bermuda next month to start work on another Charles C. Burr comedy.

John G. Furrer, for several months with Federated Exchange of Pittsburgh as northern territory salesman, is now assigned to do sales work in Greater Pittsburgh.

Philly 'Change Tying Up with First-Runners

PHILADELPHIA—(Special)—David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Inc., is at the helm of a movement having for its purpose the establishment of a direct-to-the-first-run-exhibitor exchange in Philadelphia. According to reports already in circulation in film row several important theatre circuits outside of Philadelphia are interested in the project, which would enable Segal to go out into the market and acquire product with a definite knowledge at the outset of just how much those pictures can gross in first run rentals.

Segal, according to information gathered here, has been quietly working on the project for several months and has now got it down to a point where he is almost prepared to announce the identity of the important circuits with which he is affiliated and which affiliation will guarantee pictures handled by Royal Exchange representative first run showings in important centres. The Stanley Circuit is said to have been approached, but is in no way interested in the project, which is attracting much interest.

Ben Amsterdam and Louis Korson of Masterpiece Film Attractions and Al Lichtman Exchanges here are financially interested in the movement which had its inception in Boston about eight weeks ago, and having for its purpose the revival of the Federated Exchanges, Inc. Ben Amsterdam was one of the heaviest financial losers involved in the Federated affair and has been very active along with Sam Grand, Joe Friedman of Chicago and Bobby North of New York in shaping the affairs of Federated together. One very creditable feature of the revival of the Federated movement is found in the fact that if the revival is true, then that organization will resume big business operations without having a cent to pay, for Federated has paid every cent it owed, thanks to the efforts of the franchiseholders mentioned above and several others, similiarly interested.

Bill Haggerty, exploitation manager for De Luxe Pictures Exchange, and Tony Luchese, together with Oscar Neufeld, on Tuesday afternoon journeyed to Harrisburg, Pa., where the State legislators were shown "The Greatest Menace," an anti-narcotic picture, which Luchese's exchange is handling. Many exhibitors from all parts of the State who went to Harrisburg to attend the hearing there on the anti-daylight savings bill, also saw the picture.

"Poor Men's Wives," the latest Preferred picture being handled in this territory by Al Lichtman Exchange, will start a two-week engagement next week at the Carleton Theatre here. The engagement starts Monday night. "Poor Men's Wives" is the sequel to "Rich Men's Wives," which played to big grosses in local houses several months ago.

Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia and Washington has finally signed a contract with Warner Brothers, whose product he has been handling in this territory ever since he started business three years ago, according to reports that have come here from New York. This exchange will handle eighteen Warner Classics in 1923-24, including all the David Belasco-Warner Brothers pictures. He is also planning to augment his organizations both here and in Washington.

G. Oppenheim, Inc., Gets Warner Films for '23-24 Release

SAN FRANCISCO — (Special) — George A. Oppenheim, Inc., will continue to distribute Warner Brothers pictures in northern California during 1923-24, according to a statement made this week by Morgan Walsh, local manager for Oppenheim. Exploitation campaigns are now being conducted on the current Warner Brothers' releases.

Exhibitors of this territory were the guests of M. L. Markowitz of the Strand Theatre at a showing of "Little Church Around the Corner,"

Edward Rubens has been added to the Progress Features Exchange sales forces. He was formerly with the Select exchange. He will cover the Los Angeles territory, working out of that city and working his way north to San Francisco.

Film folk here found much amusement in an announcement published here that "Streets of New York" would soon be shown with "John Lowell, Baby Ivy Ward, Edward Earle, Barbara Castleton and Leslie Burton as principals." This is erroneous. "Streets of New York" co-stars Edward Earle and Barbara Castleton and is a Burton King production, released by Arrow Film Corporation, while John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward are starred in another Arrow picture entitled "Lost in a Big City."

Peerless Exchange has taken over "Saved by Radio," with Jacqueline Logan starred, for distribution in this territory.

Mack Sennett's Mission Theatre in Los Angeles will show Warner Brothers' "Main Street" next month. This booking was arranged last spring, long before production was even started on the picture.

Louis Baum of Equity Pictures Corporation is expected here some time next week with a print of the latest Daniel Carson Goodman special, "Has the World Gone Mad?" No distribution arrangements here have yet been made, although good reports have been received here on the production.

J. G. Mayer Goes to Coast

J. G. Mayer, of Mayer & Quinn, left New York for the Coast last Friday, accompanied by Albert Rogell, his director. While here Mr. Mayer made arrangements with the Resolute Film Sales, Inc., to act as sales representative for his latest production, "The Greatest Menace," which is the first of a number of pictures to be made for Mayer & Quinn.

Mr. Mayer will return to New York in about four weeks, when he expects to make at least two pictures here.

Two Sales on "Her Accidental Husband"

Two sales were reported this week on the Edward Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is state righting. Bobby North of Apollo Exchange bought the New York rights, while Lou Burman of Independent Film Corporation of Philadelphia the picture for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey and the Washington, D. C., territory.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

More Contracts for First National

Associated First National has just concluded several more big contracts for the distribution of its pictures in foreign lands. The International Variety and Theatrical Agency, Inc., of New York, acting as agents for African Films, Ltd., has obtained twenty-six of the latest First National attractions for distribution in African territory south of the equator. This deal includes such pictures as Oliver Twist, The Hottentot, Dangerous Age, Smilin' Through, The Eternal Flame, East Is West, Brawn of the North, Fury, Tol'able David, Omar the Tentmaker, and others.

The Societe des Etablissements Gaumont of Paris has taken over Heroes and Husbands, Invisible Fear, Woman He Married, and Courage for distribution in France, Belgium, Switzerland and French African colonies.

Companbia Cinematographica of Rio Janeiro has contracted for Omar the Tentmaker and Oliver Twist for showing in Brazil.

Lloyd Hughes, Johnny Walker and Frankie Lee have been added to the cast of "Terwilliger," which Arthur Jacobs is producing and Frank Borzage is directing for First National. Hughes has been associated recently with Thomas Ince. Johnny Walker made a big hit in "Over the Hill" and has since been starred by Fox and has also produced his own pictures.

"The Crash" Nearing Completion

Jess Robbins is nearing completion of his new comedy drama, "The Crash," in which Edward Horton will play the principal role and which will be released by Vitagraph. Director Robbins wrote his own original story and it promises new types and characters for the screen.

The cast supporting Horton is an exceptionally strong one including Barbara Bedford, Zazu Pitts, Tom Ricketts, Carl Stockdale, Tom Murray, James Kelly, Stanley Taylor, Dorothy Wook and Newton Hall.

Preferred Picture Effects "Tie-up"

When the Preferred picture, "Poor Men's Wives," played recently at the Criterion Theatre, New York, the Al Lichtman Corporation arranged an elaborate tie-up at the National Silk Show, which was attracting large crowds from New York and out of town. This was made possible through co-operation with one of the largest silk merchants of the country.

Five Big-U Runs in Los Angeles

Universal will occupy a unique position in Los Angeles during the week of March 19, when five Universal pictures will have their runs simultaneously in the leading theatres of that city. The pictures will include three current Universal-Jewel productions and two Universal attractions.

The Kinema Theatre will show "The Flirt," the Hobar Henley success adapted from Booth Tarkington's novel. This picture created a sensation in New York and since has established box office records from coast to coast.

In the California Theatre, there will be held the Los Angeles premiere of "Driven," the Charles Brabin picture of mountaineer life which recently created such a flood of commendation in New York. This picture was one of the choices of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the National Board of Review, and was accorded a special showing by that committee; it was made with a cast including Elinor Fair, Emily Fitzroy, Charles Mack, Burr McIntosh and others. As the result of her exeellent work in "Driven," Miss Fair is now on her way to Universal City to take important roles in Universal productions.

"The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel picture, which also is a Hobart Henley production, will have its Los Angeles premiere in the Symphony Theatre. Miss Dean has an exceptionally large following in Los Angeles, and the showing of her leases invariably means box office records there. "The Flame of Life" reaches Los Angeles after showing in several of the country's key cities, where it has met with unusual praise. All critics unite in acclaiming it as the best work of the star.

The two other Universal pictures to have showing in Los Angeles during the same week are not Universal-Jewels but other high class attractions of exceptional merit.

At Grauman's Theatre there will be shown "The Ghost Patrol," a heart appeal picture with an all-star cast including such popular players as Ralph Graves, Bessie Love, George B. Williams and George Nichols. The last named has a sympathetic role similar to his role in "The Flirt." "The Ghost Patrol" is a Sinclair Lewis story.

The other Universal attraction will be shown at Pantages Theatre. It is "The Flaming Hour," and is a stirring romantic comedy starring Frank Mayo, supported by Helen Ferguson and Charles Clary.

C. L. Theuerkauf, the Universal sales manager in Los Angeles, reports that the entire West Coast theatre circuit has booked the three Jewels. This means an extensive run for each of them, following their first run showings in Los Angeles.

"Blood and Sand" Breaks Records in Sweden

Cable advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the premiere showing of "Blood and Sand" at the Olympia Theatre in Stockholm with record-breaking crowds in attendance.

The presentation and exploitation given this Paramount picture was the most elaborate ever arranged for any production in Sweden, and when the Olympia opened its doors for the first showing on March 5 a long line of patrons was waiting.

All previous box-office records for a motion picture in Sweden were broken during the first week of the run.

Messrs. York and LeMat, who are Paramount distributors in Sweden, Norway and Denmark, had conducted an extensive exploitation and advertising campaign prior to the opening, and the lobby of the Olympia was turned into a reproduction of a bull ring.

Scores of photographs of genuine bull fights were ordered from Madrid and were posted about the lobby, while the ushers were dressed as toreadors.

This lobby attracted a tremendous amount of attention, as it marked what is generally regarded as the high-water mark in showmanship in Sweden.

Editorial Praises "Robin Hood"

Under the caption, "'Robin Hood' 100 Per Cent All Right," the Seattle Star, during the showing of this United Artists release at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, ran an editorial in 12 point type, two column measure, which is here partly reproduced:

"So often recently the movies have come in for harsh criticism, it is a positive pleasure to discover a film which can be wholeheartedly and enthusiastically applauded.

"Such is 'Robin Hood,' showing this week at the Liberty.

"It is Douglas Fairbanks' masterpiece, and it is, if not a genuine work of art, at least an earnest that the movie is susceptible, when in the hands of sincere, intelligent men, of being developed as an art."

Withey to Direct "The Talisman"

Chet Withey has been engaged to direct Frank Woods' initial photoplay production, a screen version of Sir Walter Scott's "The Talisman," featuring Wallace Beery in the role of Richard the Lion-Hearted, in which he gained wide fame in Douglas Fairbanks' screen version of the days of Robin Hood.

This picture will constitute the first of a series to be put out by Associated Authors, made up of Frank Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan. The productions are to be released through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, a subsidiary of United Artists Corporation.

Film "Still" Used for Tobacco Ads.

Cigarettes as a medium for photoplay advertising have been utilized by a firm of Cuban tobacconists, who have originated the idea of enclosing a miniature scene still from famous photoplays in each package of cigarettes. Attractive scenes from Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Fascination;" from the Rex Ingram production, "The Prisoner of Zenda;" and from Nazimova's production of "Camille," are among those included in this novelty in motion picture advertising, Metro reports.

Leads in "Success"

Brandon Tynan plays the leading role in "Success," the Ralph Ince production for Metro, produced by Murray W. Garsson. It is a story of theatrical life. Mary Astor portrays the leading feminine role.

"The Abysmal Brute" Being Rushed East

"The Abysmal Brute," Hobart Henley's latest Universal-Jewel production, is on the way east, the Universal home office reports. It is expected in New York in a day or so, and as soon as it has been reviewed by Universal executives, it will be rushed to the laboratory where advance prints will be made for the various Universal exchanges in this country and Canada.

A special showing,, before a selected audience of persons high in the film world, was given in the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, on the eve of the departure of the original print eastward. The feature was acclaimed as a knockout, and classified as one of the big pictures of 1923. "The Abysmal Brute" stars Reginald Denny.

Jack London wrote "The Abysmal Brute." It is one of his most popular novels, and gives a dramatic insight into the ring game as it existed on the West Coast a decade ago, before the army camps and A. E. F. athletics instilled clean ideals into the fight game. As the "abysmal brute," Denny has a role peculiarly fitted to his cleanminded; two-fisted personality and physical prowess. The story concerns a young giant raised in the backwoods to be a "white hope" and of how his innocence protects him against pugilistic crookedness and against the wiles of the world until he meets his mate and carries her off caveman fashion.

Henley and the production officials at Universal City spent much time selecting the cast for this picture. Mabel Julienne Scott plays the chief supporting role. Others in the cast include Charles French, Hayden Stevenson, David Torrance, George Stewart, Buddy Messinger, Craufurd Kent, Irene Haisman, Dorothea Wolbert, Julia Brown, Nell Craig, Will R. Walling, Tom McGuire, Harry Mann, Tom Kennedy, Noble Johnson and others.

In addition to the regular cast, the West Coast was combed for ring material to reproduce accurately the atmosphere of sporting circles. Nine well known prize fighters were added to the cast. Among them are Kid Wagner, Goat Lavin, Monty Farrell and Tom O'Brien, Jack Herrick, Al Norton, Leo Latlock and Pat Harmon.

The fight scenes are said to be even better than those in "The Leather Pushers" series.

Universal plans to release "The Abysmal Brute" early next month. It will be the fourth Universal-Jewel release for 1923, the first three having been "The Flirt," "The Flame of Life" and "Driven."

Prints of the new Jewel will get right of way in the Universal laboratory. It is planned to have prints in each Universal exchange well before April 1. By an advance drive of unusual proportions, Universal already has lined up all accessories for this feature, including press material, paper, slides, etc., so that the full weight of the exploitation department can be thrown immediately behind the first runs.

No definite information is available yet as to the New York release of the picture, but it is expected to take place at the earliest possible date after the arrival of the initial print from Universal City.

"Little Old New York" Will Soon Be Ready

Work on Marion Davies' next Cosmopolitan production, "Little Old New York," is nearing completion. With the filming of the street scenes in Ireland next week at the Jackson Studio and some which are to be taken aboard ship the week following the production will be practically finished. Work was begun about the middle of December. In spite of the fire which destroyed the stages at Cosmopolitan studios a few weeks ago the picture will be finished on schedule time. The Tilford studio on Forty-fourth street and Jackson studio in the Bronx have been used for the remaining scenes. The big Twenty-third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn was engaged for the filming of the street scenes, showing the Battery and Bowling Green as they were a century ago. This is the largest indoor set ever made in motion pictures.

In Patricia O'Day, the plucky little Irish girl who assumes the disguise of a boy in order to inherit a fortune, Miss Davies will have a role which bids fair to add new laurels to the fame she gained all over the country in "When Knighthood Was in Flower." The picture has been made on the same pretentious scale. Joseph Urban planned the settings, which reveal the quaint charm of New York as it was a century ago. Sidney Olcott directed. Luther Reed adapted the story to the screen from the successful stage play by Rida Johnson Young.

Cunningham Arrives

Jack Cunningham, who adapted Emerson Hough's "The Covered Wagon" for the screen, has arrived at the Paramount Eastern studio from the Coast with the script for Agnes Ayres' latest picture, which Wesley Ruggles will direct. The title of the picture has been changed from "Arms and the Girl" to "The Heart Raider."

"Masters of Men" Ready for Titling

The first prints of "Masters of Men," Vitagraph special production based on Morgan Robertson's great sea story, have arrived at the Brooklyn studios for final titling and editing. The executive officers of Vitagraph had known that the picture being made at the West Coast studios was an unusual one, but they were not prepared for the greatness of the production. It had been fully realized that Robertson's sea story was a masterpiece on the screen. The belief has been more than justified and those who have been permitted to see the early prints declare that it undoubtedly is one of the greatest pictures of the year.

"Masters of Men" is a picture with a punch from beginning to end, Vitagraph says. Telling the story of the mastery of a rebellious youth over himself, his school day fights, his rough treatment befor ethe mast, shanghaied on a sailing vessel, and the final moulding of his character in the navy, the action goes from one thrill to another.

Cullen Landis, as the boy who finds himself, is said to have done the finest work in his career, while Earle Williams, as Lieutenant Breen, his friend in need, is also said to have a role which perfectly fits his talents. Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley, with their opposite types of beauty, are also splendidly cast.

"Masters of Men" will be rushed for release as rapidly as good work will permit. All of the advertising units have been prepared and an extensive and intensive advertising campaign has been planned for the production. Vitagraph believes that in "Masters of Men" it has one of the most important productions in several years.

Four First Runs in Pittsburgh

During the week of March 12 two First National pictures, "Mighty Lak a Rose" and "Minnie," were being shown in four first run picture houses in Pittsburgh.

"Mighty Lak a Rose" was shown at both the Grand and the Liberty and "Minnie" played the State and the Regent Theatres.

Big Bookings Recorded by Hodkinson

Owing to the mounting success in which Glenn Hunter, in "Second Fiddle," is meeting throughout the country, word has been received whereby the Arcadia Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., will run "Second Fiddle" early in April. The Arcadia is considered to be one of the best of the chain controlled by the Stanley Company of America. It is a beautiful house catering to the better class of Philadelphia trade and showing only the highest class productions. "Second Fiddle" is the first of the series of Film Guild productions to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Other feature bookings to be announced is to the effect that Jake Louri of the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston, Mass., has signed for "Second Fiddle" and also the Victor Schertzinger Production's "Dollar Devils." Both features, according to the contract, have been booked for one week each and first run in that particular locality.

Says "Dr. Jack" Is a 100% Picture

After a six days' run of "Dr. Jack" at the Jewel Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, President John A. Schwalm, of the Jewel Photoplay Company, owner of Greater Hamilton leading theatres, has given the Harold Lloyd comedy the highest possible rating for any picture. In a letter to Pathé, President Schwalm writes:

"Enclosed herewith you will find statement on 'Dr. Jack.'

"We are more than satisfied with the results of this picture. If ever there was a 100 per cent. picture, this is it. In the entire six days' run we did not have one adverse criticism. This is remarkable, as it is a rare entertainment that some one does not 'knock.' I thank you for the privilege of showing this remarkable picture."

Back from Location

After three weeks in Florida, some of the time on the sands at Palm Beach, but more in the swamp lands near Jupiter, where scenes were made for "Fog Bound," Dorothy Dalton and her Paramount company have returned to the Long Island studio to complete the picture. Those who worked in the South under the direction of Irvin V. Willat were David Powell, Maurice Costello, Martha Mansfield, William David, Warren Cook and Jack Richardson. "Fog Bound" was adapted by Paul Dickey from a short story by Jack Bechdolt.

Gertrude Astor Back

Gertrude Astor has returned to her work in Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," now in production at the company's Long Island studio, after an illness of two weeks. She barely missed pneumonia.

Novelties Supplied for "Safety Last"

The quantity of novelties supplied by Pathé to exploit "Safety Last," judged by their use in connection with the distribution of other important productions, it is estimated, will total not less than five million copies of the ten separate articles on the list. From the exhibitor viewpoint, Pathé reports, the forthcoming Harold Lloyd feature comedy lends itself admirably to this sort of exploitation, and the usual consumption of novelties will be increased accordingly.

For the convenience of exhibitors who have not yet seen samples, these "Safety Last" novelties are here described:

Novelty No. 1—A herald done in flaming red, with four sides and with space for the exhibtor's imprint; a selling idea, with a laugh back of it.

Novelty No. 2—A circular window card, also in flaming red, 13 inches in diameter. Also adapted to hang in lobby and on door knobs. Carries photograph of Harold Lloyd and on the back the slogan: "Laughter first, Safety Last." Arranged to tie up with "Safety First" campaigns throughout the country.

Novelty No. 3—Wooden stanchions five feet high to support stanchion cards—for lobby and sidewalk displays and tie-ups with traffic policemen.

Novelty No. 4—Stanchion cards, much like circular window card, but of heavier stock, to provide firm attachment in slit at top of stanchion.

Novelty No. 5—Three-inch circular flaming red throwaway, with small hole for stringing, may be given out at box office during week before "Safety Last" engagement.

These will be used in tie-ups with shops that sell various safety articles, as razors, matches, shoes, etc.

Novelty No. 6—Red balloon with white imprint of Harold Lloyd's head with slogans. Used as giveaways week before engagement; blown up and hung in lobby with red window cards; prime attraction for the kids.

Novelty No. 7—Handkerchiefs carrying the line: "Dry your tears of laughter when you cry for joy at Harold Lloyd in 'Safety Last.'" With exhibitor's imprint, used for advance ballyhoo. An important feature is that ink of handkerchief easly washes out.

Novelty No. 8—Small circular savings bank, carrying out flaming red disc idea, bearing on front the line: "He who saves first, laughs last. Laugh first and last with Harold Lloyd in 'Safety Last.'" On one side a lithographed head of Lloyd. An exploitation idea of exceptional value, as many local savings banks will add an amount equal to that in the little bank offered for deposit in opening a savings account.

Novelty No. 9—Half-sheet for sniping, carrying a flaming red ball with slogan and appropriate announcement matter.

Novelty No. 10—Two 40 by 60 upright oil paintings, each in gold frame and box for shipping, representing Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" scenes, for lobby use by arrangement with Pathé Branch Exchanges.

The foregoing are, of course, in addition to the Pathé stock of standard Harold Lloyd novelties, as goggles, photographs, etc.

Lichtman's April Release Is Listed

"Daughters of the Rich," Edgar Saltus' famous novel, now in its second week of production at the Schulberg Studios, will be released by the Al Lichtman Corporation on April 22, as the eighth Preferred Picture on their program. The feature, which has been announced by B. P. Schulberg to be the most ambitious undertaking of his organization, is being directed by Gasnier. Every effort is being made by this director in respect to lavish backgrounds and extravagant mounting.

The preliminary scenes of the picture have already been filmed and the company is preparing for the photographing of several spectacular sequences for which an extra staff of carpenters and studio workers is arranging huge interiors.

Schulberg has engaged an exceptionally fine cast in order that the feature may be notable in every possible respect. It includes Gaston Glass and Ethel Shannon, two of his signed players, as well as Stuart Holmes, Ruth Clifford and Marjorie Daw. The early release has been decided on so that this special production may be included in the first series Schulberg has offered to exhibitors through Al Lichtman.

Hamilton to Play Opposite Ayres

Mahlon Hamilton, who has appeared as leading man for several Paramount stars during the past two years and who recently arrived in New York from the Coast, has been engaged to play opposite Agnes Ayres in "The Heart Raider," an adaptation of Harry Durant's play, "Arms and the Girl," which will be started at a Florida location this week under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. Following that picture he will play opposite Bebe Daniels in "Bluff," also under Ruggles' direction.

Robertson Finishes 1st National Film

Richard Barthelmess has finished the Inspiration picture, "The Bright Shawl," under the direction of John S. Robertson and by First National. "The Bright Shawl" is different in story from anything in which Barthelmess has appeared so far. It is a tale of romance and intrigue in Cuba about the time of the Cuban rebellion and was adapted from Joseph Hergesheimer's widely read book by Edmund Goulding, who also adapted "Tol'able David," another Hergesheimer story in which Barthelmess starred and which was awarded the gold medal as the best picture of 1921 by the readers of Photoplay Magazine.

In the cast with Barthelmess are Dorothy Gish, who essays the role of a vamp for the first time in her career; Mary Astor, William H. Powell, Jetta Goudal, Anders Randolf, Luis Alberni, George Humbert, George Beranger, E. C. Robinson and Frederick Bezerril. The exterior and some of the interior scenes were made in Cuba.

Praises "Dr. Jack" Highly

Emphatic in terms and vivid with epigram, the Chicago Tribune review of "Dr. Jack," signed by Mae Tinee, places Harold Lloyd on the summit of all achievement in screen comedy. In the course of an extended article Miss Tinee writes:

"It's a funny picture! It's a clever picture! It will put the skids under Lugubrious Blue and send Little Joe Worry for a high dive off suicide bridge. It is neat, snappy, fast, appealing comedy in which Harold Lloyd leaps to a place on the platform with Charles Chaplin. He's been on the steps leading up to the platform for a long time. Now he's there, standing side by side, figuratively speaking, sipping from the same glass . . .

"And, finally, in 'Dr. Jack' Harold Lloyd proves himself a supercomedian, in that he insistently appeals to the sympathies as well as the risibilities. He keeps you laughing AT him, but rooting FOR him."

Duncan Engages Weed

"Bill" Duncan, who is completing a thrilling western drama in which he and Edith Johnson will star, engaged one of his oldest friends for the cast. Frank Weed was Bill's trainer when Duncan began making pictures; he put the Vitagraph star through setting up exercises, boxing, footwork and arranged his diet. It kept the actor fit and rugged and Duncan has since followed Weed's rules religiously. Weed went into pictures himself later and now plays an important part in the new western.

Hodkinson Offers All-Canadian Film

A new storehouse has been tapped in the production of worth while pictures, their locale being the Canadian wilds. Pictures have been produced using the theme of the Northwest mounted police, and stories laid in Alaska and the Yukon, but according to Mr. Shipman, Canada offers a veritable bonanza for the production of pictures, the surface of which has as yet been barely scratched.

It has remained for Ernest Shipman, a Canadian by birth, to produce the first all-Canadian picture, "The Man from Glengarry," which is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The author, Ralph Connor, is a Canadian; the producer, Ernest Shipman, was born in Ottawa; Henry MacRae was born in Glengarry County; the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited, financed the production, and every scene was made in Ottawa and vicinity; not only that, but the picture was cut, printed, developed and finished in Canada, so that from the beginning to end it is wholly a Canadian product.

Among other productions from the pen of the beloved Canadian author, Ralph Connor (the Rev. Sir Charles W. Gordon, D. D.), which Mr. Shipman has produced and which are now playing with tremendous success are "The Sky Pilot," "God's Crucible," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted."

Other pictures which will soon be released are "Glengarry Schooldays," from the pen of Ralph Connor, and "The Rapids," by Alan Sullivan, both entirely Canadian products. It is understood that Mr. Shipman is now working on several other pictures of like character.

Mr. Shipman has not been content to take famous Canadian manuscripts and transport them to a foreign studio for filming against a background of makeshift and incongruous scenery. On the contrary, he has made his pictures amidst the scenes and the people which inspired the writers. In these super-productions he has given to the world true, vital and interesting pictures of Canadian life. He believes that it is struggles and passions and achievements of these people of the Canadian wilds that the world wants to see in pictures. All his pictures have the flavor of Canadian environment.

Realizing the widespread demand for these wholesome and vital pictures of the great outdoors, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in keeping with their policy of giving the exhibitor worth while attractions, have arranged with Mr. Shipman to distribute these productions, the first of which, "The Man from Glengarry," will be released March 25. Following this "The Rapids" and "Glengarry Schooldays" will have their showing under the Hodkinson banner.

"3 Jumps Ahead" for Release March 19

The Tom Mix Western, "Three Jumps Ahead," is the only release for the week of March 19 by Fox Film Corporation.

Jack Ford, who directed the picture, also is the author of the story.

In "Three Jumps Ahead" Mix leaps on horseback across a canyon twenty feet wide and ninety feet deep, thus accomplishing what, Fox says, is probably one of the most hazardous tricks ever undertaken for the screen.

In the picture, which is built around a band of cattle rustlers, Mix is pursuing the leader of the band. He has to jump his horse across the chasm after a bridge has been destroyed in order to overtake him.

"Driven" Is Booked Solidly in New York

"Driven," the Charles Brabin production being released as a Universal-Jewel picture, and which recently closed a succesful premiere at the Criterion Theatre, New York, bids fair, says Universal, to rival "The Flirt," Hobart Henley's popular Universal-Jewel, now taking the country by storm, it is reported. "Driven" is getting much newspaper comment and praise and rapidly is building itself a reputation as a sterling box office success, it is said.

Immediately following its success at the Criterion, it was booked by two of the leading circuits in the New York Metropolitan area for early showings at a score or more of high-class houses, the Universal sales department announces. These circuits are the U. B. O. circuit, embracing all the Keith, Moss and Proctor theatres; and the Fabian circuit in New Jersey, embracing leading first-run theatres in northern New Jersey. "Driven" follows closely on the heels of "The Flirt," in the Jersey houses, where the Henley picture now is breaking box-office records, reports say.

Loew also contracted for "Driven" for a number of his houses, the Big "U" Exchange reports. It will be shown in Loew's New York, Circle, 83d Street, 86th Street, and Brevoort Theatres.

Advance bookings on "Driven" from independent houses in the New York territory already have reached such a volume that the Universal sales executives predict for the picture an overwhelming reputation as a breaker of box-office records. There is no doubt, they feel, that the unusual newspaper publicity and praise received by the picture from all New York reviewers has done much to creat a strong patron demand for the picture.

The production received added publicity when selected as an "exceptional photoplay" by the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the National Board of Review, and when shown by that committee at an invitation showing in the Town Hall, New York City.

"Jazzmania" Is Best Film Says Exhibitor

"I consider 'Jazzmania' the only 100 per cent. picture ever produced. It is without a doubt the highest-powered piece of film entertainment ever made."

The foregoing is extracted from a telegram sent to the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Jazzmania," by Ross D. Rogers, manager of the Mission Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, who "did all the business we could possibly take care of" during his presentation of the film.

Mr. Rogers's complete wire read further: "I have been an exhibitor for twelve years and have either played or have seen practically every picture of importance ever made. You are to be congratulated on producing pictures like this, and the thanks of every exhibitor should be manifested to Robert Leonard, the director, and to Mae Murray, the star.

"Shadows" Closes Sucessful Run

"Shadows," the Lichtman release featuring Lon Chaney, recently, it is reported, closed an exceptionally successful run at the Metropolitan Theatre in Atlanta, partly due, it is said, to the hearty endorsement it received from the Better Films Committee of that city.

Preferred Will Release Soon Last of a Series of Big Pictures

B. P. Schulberg announced this week that Preferred Pictures will release in the not too far distant future the final of the series of four pictures, "Rich Men's Wives," "Poor Men's Wives," "Daughters of the Rich," and "Daughters of the Poor."

About a year ago when Schulberg mapped out his production program for the first twelve months through the Al Lichtman Corporation, he had in mind the making of this series of companion pictures as one of the salient innovations of the Preferred output. These four pictures he planned to make the most pretentious of his first releases if exhibitors were receptive to them. The idea underlying their production was to give the public not only special features of the highest quality in picture making, but to present to them in an interesting fashion stories setting forth present day problems.

Schulberg determined to try out the first series to discover the reactions of the exhibitor and his patrons with the purchase of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives," written by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston as screen originals. The Schulberg-Lichtman combination was launched with the release of the former to which Gasnier had been assigned as director, and an unusual cast including Claire Windsor, House Peters, Gaston Glass, Myrtle Stedman and Rosemary Theby was added. "Rich Men's Wives" was so enthusiastically received as to make it one of the outstanding successes of the past year.

Exhibitors requested the early release of the second story to follow it up, and Gasnier was naturally commissioned to make it. "Poor Men's Wives," featuring Barbara La Marr, David Butler, Betty Francisco and Zasu Pitts, had its premier recently at the Criterion in New York and is now making record breaking first runs throughout the country.

The success of these first pictures has assured Schulberg of the feasibility of his plan and Gasnier is now busy completing "Daughters of the Rich," based on Edgar Saltus' widely read novel. Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Marjorie Daw and Stuart Holmes are in the cast. Schulberg and Lichtman predict that this will be the greatest money-maker yet turned out by their organization. "Daughters of the Rich" will be released through Al Lichtman Exchanges on April 22 as one of the first eight Preferred Pictures.

The fourth of this series, "Daughters of the Poor," will follow later in the season. This will also be a Gasner production and will follow the general policy that has governed the making of the first pictures—pretentious production qualities, a strong story, a cast of players of first rank popularity and a theme along lines that contrast with "Daughters of the Rich." It will be handled, however, as an entirely different plot, just as "Poor Men's Wives" followed "Rich Men's Wives" as a separate story completing its general idea.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Is Breaking Cameo House Records

What has proved to be a complete surprise to the motion picture industry and in the estimation of the Hodkinson officials a sure sign of success is the actual box office statement for the first two weeks in which Elmer Clifton's production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," has been showing to capacity audiences at the Cameo Theatre, New York, N. Y.

According to the actual box office statement, the gross for the first week was $11,490.75. This is, it is claimed, the greatest record of receipts ever made in the Cameo and is all the more surprising when it is considered that there are only 539 seats in the house with a price of 75 cents in the evening and 55 cents in the afternoon. Eight shows are given daily in order to accommodate the vast throngs that stood in line for hours waiting for admittance.

The second week showed a gross of $8,197, this also, it is said, breaking all house and attendance records for the Cameo. The third week will equal if not surpass that of the second week, according to reports.

This unusual gross for the Cameo Theatre was not only a surprise to the trade in general but to the theatre itself. According to the management, they never knew that the Cameo could draw to such capacity as done by "Down to the Sea in Ships."

The strongest point of advertising which this production has received during its appearance at the Cameo has been the word of mouth advertising of those that had already seen the production. This effect has been noticeable at every performance. People came to see the production on the strength of their friend's recommendation.

Special newspaper advertising in all of the New York dailies was carried during the run of this production. Large signs on Broadway announced the fact to the millions traversing the main thoroughfare. Special window tie-ups and posters were used throughout the city together with novel decorations in the front of the theatre.

The newspaper critics and trade critics were loud in their praise for this romance of old whaling days. "Down to the Sea in Ships" is scheduled for an indefinite run.

"Othello" Still Gets Praise from Critics

When Hugo Riesenfeld rebooked "Othello," the big Shakespearean production which Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells produced abroad, to go into the Rivoli Theatre, immediately following its two weeks' run at the Criterion Theatre, a new record was made for independent picture presentation on Broadway.

"Othello" is the first independent picture to move from one Paramount house into another, it is claimed. Its three weeks' run on Broadway will probably stand as an unbroken record for a long time to come.

"Othello" continues to draw down laudatory editorial comment from newspapers in all sections of the country. The majority of the larger publications are supplied with motion picture news by their New York correspondents, and reviews on the unusual Shakespearean production have been of a very flattering nature. Emil Jannings is not the only object of their praise. Werner Kraus, as Iago, is credited with giving a very unusual interpretation to this role, his fantastic characterization helping materially to add the needed touch of humor to the tragic story.

Editors have hailed the arrival of Shakespeare on the screen with acclamation. The fact that the National Board of Review has picked "Othello" as a film "worth watching for," has further enhanced the value of the extraordinary welcome the press has given Mr. Blumenthal and Mr. Howells' venture.

Tully Preparing to Shoot "Trilby"

Some of the work Richard Walton Tully did in Paris for his forthcoming First National production of "Trilby" is coming to light in the news from Los Angeles, where Tully is making elaborate preparations for the actual "shooting" of this famous Du Maurier classic. At the Cirque de Medrano he filmed 4,000 persons in the costumes of the period of which Du Maurier wrote. He brought back several thousand feet of negative.

"I found," said Mr. Tully, "that a large amount of research work was necessary to get the real faithfulness of detail. Many of the names of the historic spots had been changed but by perseverance I found out what they had been formerly."

Mayor Rolph Liked "Suzanna"

Declaring that he had been thoroughly entertained by Mack Sennett's newest comedy drama, "Suzanna," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, starring Mabel Normand, Mayor James S. Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco, wrote to Mr. Sennett in part as follows:

"I was greatly interested in this production and thoroughly entertained by it, enjoying particularly the touches of life in early California which this theme so cleverly portrays."

Svend Gade Engaged as Art Director

Mary Pickford has engaged Svend Gade as art director for her forthcoming photoplay production, yet to be definitely titled.

Svend Gade's decorations and productions upon the speaking stage have won him high regard abroad and also in this country, and his work for the screen as producer overseas has set him in an exalted niche among patrons of the celluloid in Scandinavia and Continental Europe.

"Me and My Gal" Making a Hit

"Me and My Gal," the Welsh-Pearson production made in England in which Betty Balfour stars for American Releasing, has met with pronounced success in Canada, according to reports.

The picture played two weeks at the Allen Downtown Theatre, Toronto, following which it played The Allen, Montreal; Regent, Ottawa, and The Capitol, Hamilton. In Montreal big business attended the presentation, it is said.

"The Grail" Finished

"The Grail," George Scarborough's story for Dustin Farnum, has been completed at the Fox West Coast studios. It was directed by Colin Campbell. Charles Kenyon, the well-known dramatist and scenario writer, did the screen version.

New Sennett Comedy Handled by Allied

Announcement is made of the early release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation of a new Mack Sennett-Ben Turpin feature length comedy entitled "The Shriek of Araby."

As the title implies, this five-reel picture is a burlesque, and that it is screamingly farcical also is implied in the names of the producer and the star. Co-starring with Ben Turpin is Miss Kathryn McGuire, who has long been a member of the Sennett organization, but only recently lifted into stardom.

Both Mr. Sennett and the celebrated angle-eyed comedian declare in most emphatic terms that "The Shriek of Araby" is the best thing they've ever done, and the fact that it is real comedy, with five reels of roars, is attested by the fact "The Shriek of Araby" is still turning crowds away after running four weeks to capacity business at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, where it was given its first showing. "The only reason 'The Shriek of Araby' doesn't do a bigger business at the Symphony," said Mack Sennett in a telegram to E. M. Asher, his New York representative, "is because the theatre isn't any bigger."

"The Shriek of Araby" was made from Mr. Sennett's own story and under his personal supervision, with F. Richard Jones as the director; Homer Scott and Bob Walters at the camera, and Allen McNeil as film editor. Others in the cast with Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire are George Cooper, Ray Grey, Louis Fronde and Dick Sutherland.

The picture has exceptional exploitation possibilities from the exhibitor's standpoint.

"Robin Hood" Near $300,000 Mark at Grauman's

So far as a careful search of records discloses, the case of Sid Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre and "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" has had no parallel in the history of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Grauman opened his new Hollywood theatre with this United Artists release, the showing being also the world premiere for Douglas Fairbanks' sensationally successful photoplay feature. On March 11, the end of the twenty-third week of the "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" engagement, the picture grossed $9,135, and showed a total gross for the run up to date of $291,478.58, having played to a total of 294,133 paid admissions, according to a telegram just received by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, from E. D. Shanks, auditor of the Douglas Fairbanks organization.

So far as records are concerned, there is shown no other instance of any theatre ever having played for twenty-three weeks the feature with which the house was opened for the public, or of any new house grossing right up to the $300,000 figure in twenty-three weeks.

And the end is not yet, for there is no indication so far of Mr. Grauman bringing the engagement of this Fairbanks picture to an early termination.

"Records may come and records may go, but I believe this one will stand forever," is the statement of Mr. Grauman of the run of this picture, which so far presents in all sections of the country an unbroken record of broken records.

Paramount Has Big Scenario Department

With five productions under way at the Paramount Long Island studio and preparations being made for many more, the scenario department, under the direction of E. Lloyd Sheldon, chief production editor, now has twelve writers, the largest number since the studio was reopened several months ago. Out of the number eight are ex-newspaper writers.

Mr. Sheldon, whose latest work for the screen was the adaptation of Edith Wharton's novel, "The Glimpses of the Moon," worked on the New York Globe, New York World, New York American and was Washington correspondent for the New York American several years ago. Others who formerly wrote for newspapers are Jack Cunningham, who is preparing "The Heart Raider" for the screen; Albert Shelby LeVino, now engaged in adapting "Bluff;" Benjamin de Casseres, J. Clarkson Miller, at present writing the script for Dorothy Dalton's next picture; Peter Milne, Sonya Levien and Ed Sullivan.

Other new writers in the scenario department who have been connected with newspapers at some time in their career are John Lynch, who recently adapted "The Enemies of Women" for the screen, and who is now at work on the script for "Lawful Larceny;" Pauline Forney, who is at present in Florida with "The Exciters" company; Paul Dickey, author of "The Misleading Lady," "The Broken Wing" and "The Ghost Breaker," and who has just written the script for Dorothy Dalton's latest picture, "Fog Bound," and Paul Sloane, a veteran picture writer, who wrote the scenarios for "Over the Hill," "If Winter Comes" and scores of other pictures.

Banff Locations for Producing "Snowblind"

What in many respects is expected to be the most thrilling motion picture ever woven around life in the North woods is that which the Cosmopolitan Corporation will make from the Arthur Stringer story, "Snowblind," work on which was started this week when a specially selected company left for Banff.

Three-quarters of the film will be made in the open and the company will be on location around Banff and Lake Louise for at least six weeks. Scenes will also be "shot" in and near Quebec and Montreal. "Snowblind" entails a number of strikingly dramatic moments, all of which will be transmitted to the screen in their every detail. Among the spectacular scenes which will be filmed near Banff is the burning of a Canadian settlement, and the Cosmopolitan Corporation intends sparing no expense in making this the most realistic fire ever "shot" before the camera. A thrilling aeroplane dash over the ice-coddered terrain and a magnificent reproduction of a mid-winter carnival are said to be other high spots in the making of "Snowblind."

In picturizing the stirring story by Arthur Stringer, the Cosmopolitan Corporation has assembled a brilliant cast of players, all of which are now on location in Canada. Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen are featured in the new Cosmopolitan picture.

Others in the cast of "Snowblind" are Gustave von Seyffertitz, who created the role of the fortune teller in "When Knighthood Was in Flower"; Louis Wolheim, of "Hairy Ape" fame; Paul Panzer, Walter Miller, Dan Red Eagle, Francis Red Eagle, Louis Deer, Jack Johnston and Albert James. E. H. Griffith, who recently finished work on "The Go Getter," a Cosmopolitan picturization of a Peter B. Kyne story, will direct the picture. Bayard Veiller adapted the story to the screen.

Distinctive Busy on a Big Schedule

Since the announcement of the first two 1923 feature productions of Distinctive Pictures Corporation — "Backbone" and "The Ragged Edge"—Arthur S. Friend and Henry M. Hobart have been busy on the development of the full schedule for the year, a schedule which calls for a round dozen big pictures. The most recent acquisition was made last week when Sir Gilbert Parker, author of "Seats of the Mighty" and "The Right of Way," sold to Distinctive his celebrated novel, "The Weavers," a tale of the Egypt of fifty years ago.

Work has already been begun on "The Steadfast Heart," by Clarence Budington Kelland, author of "Backbone." This story is based on a serial now running in Collier's Weekly.

Another on the Distinctive list is "Two Can Play," by Gerald Mygatt. The story deals with the whim of a wealthy man who does not wish his niece to marry a "lounge lizard" obviously unsuited to her tastes and desires.

The sixth of the list is "The Green Goddess," the William Archer melodrama which George Arliss has been using on a successful tour of the country after the long run in New York.

Big Campaign Put on for Fairbanks Film

The engagement of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., beginning March 4, called forth unusual preparations testifying to the importance of this United Artists release. Much curiosity had developed in Rochester as to when and where this picture would be shown in that city. This curiosity was answered by an early advance announcement of the play date at Eastman.

A press campaign conducted by Fred T. Harris of the Eastman staff brought heavy newspaper attention to the coming of the feature. In the line of exploitation a great deal more than the ordinary representation was obtained all through the city. A window display showing of big proportions was obtained, talking machine dealers and United Cigar Stores co-operating 100 per cent., while department stores displayed an almost equal degree of interest.

First National Business "Fine" as Big Productions Get Long Runs

That business is better than ever for good pictures is the belief of the officials of Associated First National based on reports coming in from the branch offices telling of the extra long runs that exhibitors are requesting on the "big First Nationals."

Pictures like Smilin' Through, The Eternal Flame, Voice of the Minaret, Oliver Twist, Lorna Doone, The Hottentot, Dangerous Age, Brawn of the North are being given double time by exhibitors. Split weeks are being carried into full weeks and week runs are being extended into two-week runs.

First National officials believe that these facts point to the truth that the public is more interested than ever in pictures—if the pictures have the appeal, and the belief is that the pictures now being made in California and the East are being made in a bigger way and that the outlook for the box office possibilities of these pictures was never better.

Take the city of Hartford for instance. The Princess Theatre there, with a policy of changing every week, held Smilin' Through, Eternal Flame, Voice from the Minaret, East Is West, Oliver Twist for two weeks each.

At the Allen Theatre in Toronto both Oliver Twist, Eternal Flame and East Is West were held over for an extra week each. And in other Allen theatres in Toronto and St. Catherines these pictures were given six days' showings instead of three. The Dangerous Age at Allen Bloor in Toronto was shown for six days instead of the usual three. Out in Oxford, Ohio, the Oxford Theatre held Oliver Twist over for six days instead of the usual three. It was the first time in the history of the Oxford that a picture played over three days.

"Kindred of the Dust," booked originally for three days at the Sigma Theatre, Lima, Ohio, was held over for five days, and on the sixth so many telephone inquiries were received that the manager is planning a return engagement of two days.

At the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, where the policy is one week, the demand for the picture was so great that it was carried for another week at the Strand, which is also a first run house, and after that Oliver played four days at the Family Theatre.

The Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, was forced to break its "one week only" policy for The Voice of the Minaret, which was held for two weeks and was the first picture to play that long there this season.

Up in the Wisconsin territory, in Fond du Lac, Janesville, Beloit, Marinette, Wausau, Wisconsin Rapids, Racine, Green Bay, Kenosha, Marshfield, Appleton, Stevens Point, Sheboygan the managers gave extended runs on the big productions, all going over the usually allotted two, three or four day "policy plans" of the houses.

The Mary Anderson Theatre in Louisville played both The Voice of the Minaret and Oliver Twist two weeks instead of one, and the National, in Louisville, showed Lorna Doone for seven days instead of four.

The Kinema in Los Angeles played Brawn of the North for two weeks and this picture went immediately to the Alhambra, where it remained for another two weeks. The Kinema also played East Is West, Oliver Twist, Omar the Tentmaker and other First Nationals two weeks instead of the customary one.

The Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, also broke its one week policy by holding The Eternal Flame over for two weeks.

The Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, began the year with The Hottentot and played to record business and held the picture for a second week, and apparently the talk about the picture was so widespread that patrons called up during the third week to ask "Is The Hottentot still being shown at your theatre?"

The Strand, New York, broke its policy rule to hold Oliver Twist a second week.

Sells 36 Pictures

Associated First National has closed a contract with the Globe Cinema Co. of Calcutta, India, for the distribution of thirty-six pictures in the territory of India, Burma and Ceylon.

See Pola Negri in "Bella Donna"

Pola Negri's first American picture, "Bella Donna," produced for Paramount by George Fitzmaurice at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, was shown for the first time to the Famous Players-Lasky home office executives Wednesday morning and was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

The Polish star, the Paramount executives say, for the first time given a splendid modern story, magnificent gowns and settings such as are characteristic of the best American productions, is revealed in new splendor and will take the American public by storm. Enthusiastic praise was also given the faultless direction of Mr. Fitzmaurice and the skilful adaptation of Robert Hichens' novel by Ouida Bergere.

"Bella Donna" was given its world premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, Tuesday, following which Sid Grauman wired the Paramount home office as follows:

"'Bella Donna,' starring Pola Negri, opened today to the biggest crowds in the history of the Rialto. I doubt if any picture ever attracted the tremendous attendance that this production did. Fully fifteen thousand people blocked the streets, it being totally impossible to control crowds. 'Bella Donna' is a picture Famous Players can be proud of."

"Bella Donna" is scheduled for its first presentation in New York at the Rivoli Theatre April 8.

"The Covered Wagon" Premiere Follows Stupendous Campaign

Most elaborate preparations have been made by Hugo Riesenfeld for the engagement of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," at the Criterion Theatre. The house was temporarily closed last Saturday night and immediately a small army of cleaners, interior decorators and carpenters took possession and have been working all week transforming the interior for the premiere performance Friday night.

Last Sunday evening a preview of the picture version of Emerson Hough's novel of the settling of the West was given in the ball room of the Plaza Hotel for the benefit of the New York Maternity Center and the American Fund for Devastated France, the performance being under the auspices of the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau. Fifteen hundred society people were present and received the picture with frequent and enthusiastic applause. Members of the Junior League, attired in appropriate costume, acted as ushers.

Dr. Riesenfeld has personally arranged the musical score for the picture and with his associates has spent several weeks in perfecting the plans for the Criterion presentation. A prologue in which will be presented the songs of 1849 will precede the film. To the New York Public Library Dr. Riesenfeld and Paramount are indebted for the use of copies of some twelve or fourteen songs, all of which were popular in the middle of the last century but have long since been out of print. These songs not only will be sung in the prologue but have been worked into the accompaniment of the picture.

Few film productions have ever been given a campaign of advance exploitation and publicity that approached that given "The Covered Wagon" by Paramount. For months, under the supervision of John C. Flinn and with the cooperation of the entire Paramount publicity staff, "The Covered Wagon" has been kept constantly before the American public. The result has been that practically every rotogravure supplement in the country has carried stills from the picture or location scenes, while the amount of black and white space given over to photographs and text matter runs into hundreds of pages.

On Thursday evening, over the radio from Station WEAF, of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, in New York, Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., recounted to Boy Scouts and thousands of other radio fans his experience with Indians and plainsmen while on location in Utah and Nevada with Director Cruze and his company. The subject of this original talk given by the young son of the Famous Players-Lasky vice-president was "Scouting With 'The Covered Wagon,'" and one of his interested audience was Mr. Lasky himself, who "listened in" on a receiver specially installed in the office of the Criterion, while the final dress rehearsal of the performance was going on.

When the bright lights of the White Way are turned on Friday night, March 16, they will reveal on the Criterion one of the most unique electric signs that ever blazed forth on Broadway. On the front of the theatre has been constructed the incandescent outline of a huge covered wagon fording a stream, the water effect being produced with startling realism. On the 44th street side the rear of a covered wagon is reproduced. The big Broadway sign similates one of the big scenes of the picture, that of the fording of the Kaw River.

Sills to Support Priscilla Dean

According to a wire just received at the Universal home office from Universal City, Milton Sills, the leading man, has been engaged to support Priscilla Dean, Universal's Jewel star, in her next picture.

This will be Sills' first work under the Universal banner. He is one of the few popular players in the industry who did not start with or who has not worked at one time or another in Universal pictures.

The title of the new Dean picture is "Fire and Ashes." It is being adapted to the screen by Marian Jackson from an original story by Evelyn Campbell.

"Fire and Ashes" will be one of Universal's early 1924 Jewels, according to present indications. The 1923 list of Jewel releases long has been filled and all but one of them are either finished or in production. The only 1923 Jewel not yet started is "A Lady of Quality," which will star Virginia Valli, and which will be put under way as soon as she completes her current picture, "Up the Ladder."

Baird Special Has Big Appeal For Women

Exhibitors on the lookout for pictures that appeal primarily to women, and which, therefore, are destined to boost their matinee business, should welcome "Is Divorce a Failure?"—the first of the Leah Baird 1923 Specials, which Associated Exhibitors is releasing March 18th. In the last few years Miss Baird has gained a reputation as an author almost rivaling her popularity on the screen, and a considerable part of the skill shown in her writing is born of her remarkable understanding of woman, her yearnings and her outlook of life generally.

"Women are more theatrical than men," Miss Baird said in a recent interview. "They have an insatiable craving for thrills. The most normal-minded of them betrays at times a desire to kick over the traces, to throw off the shackles of convention. The gilded cage may and does become as irksome as the prison cell. It is the moral monotony of their lives that drives many women to contemplate divorce.

"I named my new picture 'Is Divorce a Failure?' because the heroine simply couldn't bring herself to believe she was happy until she had gone to Reno. After that so many things happened to her that the title suggested itself. Carol Lockwood, the central figure in the story, unwittingly allowed herself to develop an unhealthful mental condition, and to correct this state of mind I considered it necessary to put her through a series of appalling experiences. Sensations and thrills were necessary to teach her her lesson, and I gave her these in generous doses. They are the only sure cure for selfishness and theatricalism resulting from autosuggestion on the part of the individual, and the story purposely avoids giving a more definite motive for Carol's divorce."

In "Is Divorce a Failure?" the sensations and thrills which finally convince the divorcee that married life is not always the worst state of human existence are not known to that character alone, but are shared by all the onlookers. They are high-lights in a logical story, and, aside from appealing to the womenfolk, are so realistically enacted, according to reports, as to hold the interest of everybody. Marvelous exteriors are said to be shown in this uncommon photoplay, and, with the popular featured player supported by an excellent cast and the direction in the hands of Wallace Worsley, Associated Exhibitors is predicting a big success for the picture.

Speeches in Variety Marked the Luncheon

The fortnightly lunch of the sales force of the Fox Film Exchange, known as the Rosenbluh family of salesmen, held Saturday afternoon last at the Army and Navy Club, took the form of a farewell to two members of what has become in the last year a close circle of real business friends. Louis Rosenbluh, the "father" of the family, presided and as usual sat among his "boys" who threw off restraint and told all they knew about each other.

"Paderewski" Markowitz played with his usual "virtuoso" skill during the afternoon, bringing tears to the eyes of Adolph Weiss by his masterly rendition of "Tannebaum," the latter so far forgetting the presence of his English and French companions as to make a wistful appreciative speech in exquisite German which was replied to by Mr. Muller in choice Bronx Bavarian.

Not to be bluffed, Sergeant Idson, formerly of Tsarkoe-Selo, added some lengthy encomiums in his choicest Slav, which constrained Frank Walsh, the toastmaster, to introduce the "talkers" in Erse, which is the purest Irish and cannot be spoken with a brogue. When Nat Furst attempted to sound a few dulcet notes in Brooklyn Yiddish, Izzy Schmertz burned his tongue by absent-mindedly putting the wrong end of his cigarette in his mouth and with tears in his eyes begged his "brothers" to try to speak plain American. This was a keen disappointment to Leo Juskowitz, who had prepared a clever address in Hungarian telling how fine a "Magyar Film Kiraly" the boss was.

When it was decided to tell the truth in English, Gus Muller prefaced his remarks and thanks for a silver cigarette case presented him as a memento, with a brilliant display of digital skill as a "jazz" exponent on the Steinway.

Everybody admitted he could have played the selections just as well upon a Wurlitzer, but then we were in the Army and Navy Club, where the Army tenors challenge daily the Navy bassos and like to have a piano that reminds them of the days of "Stein on the table and a good song floating by."

The good things provided in the way of "jazz," talk, song, and the Schmertz prescription for aiding digestion before and after meals, would take a page and a half to tell, and which if were added "Boss" Rosenbluh's heart to heart talk, another half page of space would not do the happy occasion justice.

Among those present were I. J. Schmertz, Leo Juskowitz, Harry Nichols, J. Conlen, Adolph Weiss, Frank Walsh, Edward Marks, Ben Idson, Moe Sanders, George Blenderman, Harry Nestler.

"Poor Men's Wives" Opens in Big Cities

"Poor Men's Wives," Gasnier's recent production for B. P. Schulberg, which had its first exhibition last month at the Criterion Theatre, New York, will be given premieres soon in the largest cities of the country.

The Al Lichtman Corporation reports the following bookings for early dates: The Metropolitan, Atlanta, Ga.; the Lincoln, Troy, N. Y.; the Temple, Toledo, O.; the Boston, Boston, Mass.; the Alhambra, Milwaukee, Wis.; the Waldorf, Akron, O.; the Alamo, Louisville, Ky.; the Broadway Strand, Detroit, Mich.; the Melba, Dallas, Tex.; the Palace, San Antonio, Tex.; the Newark, Newark, N. J.; the U. S. Photoplay, Paterson, N. J.; the State, Jersey City, N. J.; the Kinema, Los Angeles, and the Granada, San Francisco.

In addition to the above, Balaban and Katz have booked "Poor Men's Wives" for their circuit. It opens in Chicago April 9.

Gets Rights to Two Associated Pictures

The Plymouth Film Corporation of New York has obtained from Associated Exhibitors the exclusive rights for the sale to non-theatrical accounts throughout the United States of two Associated hits, "The Unfoldment" and "Silas Marner." The Plymouth Company contemplates an aggressive campaign among churches, schools and other institutions not connected with motion picture houses.

Each of the two features has enjoyed a great popular success since its release, it is stated, and already, from the nature of the offerings, they have been much in demand from educators, religious workers, women's clubs and literary organizations.

"Silas Marner" is an adaptation in seven parts of George Eliot's celebrated classic. Frank Donovan directed. "The Unfoldment" is a George Kern production in six parts, in which Murdock McQuarrie appeared as co-director.

Selects Clara Eames and Holbrook Blinn

Two players have been signed by Mary Pickford to undertake important roles in her next photoplay feature, the title of which is yet to be determined. Holbrook Blinn, famous stage star, at present playing the star role in "The Bad Man" in San Francisco, has been chosen to play the King in this new historical romance, the background for which is colorful and picturesque old Spain. The portrayal of the Queen will be undertaken by Clara Eames, another stage celebrity, who arrived in the film colony last week from New York.

This will be Miss Eames' third queen role. On the stage she has portrayed Mary, Queen of Scots, and Queen Elizabeth, the latter being perhaps her most distinctive role.

The engagement of Holbrook Blinn marks his return to the screen after an absence of several years. Meanwhile he has risen to the front rank of American stage stars.

Doctor "Exercises" Singer for Films

Interesting "shots" of celebrities of both stage and screen are shown in Federated Screen Review No. 10, which is distributde by Apollo Exchanges. These films are particularly out of the ordinary, as they show some of the most intimate details of the actors' lives. For instance, Beniamino Gigli, noted tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, is seen being put through a series of "stunts" by Dr. H. J. Reilly, so as to limber him up for his operatic appearances. Extraordinary as it may seem, however, Sig. Gigli goes through his exercises in bed under the supervising and vigorous hand of Dr. Reilly.

Those who want to learn the perfect manner of love making will be particularly interested in the demonstration put on by Mary Astor and Glen Hunter. Miss Astor, however, seems at first rather coy in the face of the ardent advances of Glen, until toward the last she apparently gets used to 'em.

Little Miriam Battista takes a trip through a museum and finds much interest in the work of a taxidermist. Wesley Barry as foreman of a gang of laborers does some clowning for the camera, while George Beban is seen enjoying a good meal and Nazimova, Lila Lee and Texas Guinan also make their appearance in everyday episodes.

All Night Showing of "Robin Hood"

An all-night showing at the Pantages Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, with a flock of flivvers and half a dozen street cars to take the patrons home in the small hours of the morning, is the latest effort of an exhibitor to satisfy a public clamoring to see "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," the United Artists release.

This stunt was told about in a letter from Mrs. M. A. Herrick, of Salt Lake City, to her sister, Mrs. R. E. Dusenberry, of Los Angeles. Mrs. Herrick wrote, in part, as follows:

"'I went to see 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' the last Sunday and it is a most wonderful production. We thoroughly enjoyed every minute of it.

"They have had such record houses that they have turned away thousands. They are going to have an all-night performance tonight and will show the picture until two-thirty in the morning, and then furnish Fords from one of the automobile concerns and half a dozen street cars to take the people home. That sure sounds funny, doesn't it?"

"Down to the Sea" Gets Big Crowds

Through the efforts of Manager Charles E. Mansfield of the Gordon Theatre, Brockton, Mass., and the Brockton Daily Enterprise, the teachers, clergy and representative citizens of the town were invited to a special Saturday morning showing of the Elmer Clifton production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," which opened at the Gordon on March 5 for an indefinite run.

Mayor Manning, the Board of Aldermen, the City Council, Supt. John F. Scully of the School Department, the school teachers and the clergy as well as the office employes of the Chamber of Commerce all attended, giving the production a tremendous ovation.

Due to the educational advantages, and the fact that its purpose was to perpetuate the hardships of the whaling industry, it was considered expedient to present the picture to a gathering of those interested in educational work, with the result that public opinion in Brockton was stirred up to a fever heat, putting the crowds in an expectant mood for the opening on Monday following.

For three days preceding the private showing the newspapers in the town carried column after column announcing the special showing and at the same time giving the production much desired publicity. With this foundation to work upon the result was beyond all expectation, according to Manager Mansfield. The day of the opening saw crowds for blocks. The first day and for each day thereafter the house attendance records were completely smashed at the Gordon Theatre, it is said.

Goldwyn Producing Units Are Active

Jesse D. Hampton has added Sam de Grasse to the cast appearing in the refilming of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," which Lambert Hillyer is directing for distribution by Goldwyn. De Grasse has had a long career in pictures, having appeared with Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith and Erich von Stroheim.

Clarence Badger and the company which he is directing in the mystery picture, "Red Lights," left recently for Carisso Gorge, on the Mexican boundary, to film the climactic episodes of that picture.

Ouida Bergere has completed the continuity for Elinor Glyn's "Six Days." Charles J. Brabin will begin photography on this picture about the middle of the month. Von Stroheim will take the cast selected for his first Goldwyn film, "Greed," a picturization of Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," to San Francisco this week to begin photography.

Lucien Littlefield, recently signed as a member of the Goldwyn stock company for a term of years, will have for his first role under the contract the comedy butler in "Three Wise Fools," upon which King Vidor is making splendid progress.

Kirkwood to Lead in Mrs. Reid's Picture

James Kirkwood, whose interpretation of the title role in "The Fool" has been one of Broadway's sensations, has served two weeks' notice of his intention to leave the cast and go to Hollywood to play the lead opposite Mrs. Wallace Reid in her picture of the narcotic evil, "The Living Dead." He will leave for the coast at the expiration of his notice. Kirkwood's decision is an interesting one and shows the warm friendship he had for the late Wallace Reid.

Coincident with the announcement of his leaving "The Fool," the contents of a telegram sent him by Mrs. Reid were made known. An addict is a sick person and not a moral leper, she declares in part of her congratulatory message.

She says: "I am so glad that you are coming West to play the lead in my picture. The part is a splendid one and somehow I have never been able to see anybody in it but you. I am tremendously pleased and I know you will be the one to help us get this great message across. While it is a propaganda picture, I hope it will be a real clarion call against the terrible plague that killed my husband."

Rev. Warren Praises "Minnie"

The Rev. Dr. H. M. Warren, president of "The Save-a-Life League," has written a letter to S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol Theatre in praise of Marshall Neilan's new First National release, "Minnie." In his letter the Rev. Dr. Warren stated:

"Minnie and the newspaper man are perfcet types of people. The play teaches some good lessons. One feels good from the time they get in the Capitol until they come out. * * * I took home with me some programs and have mailed them to friends urging them to see 'Minnie.'"

Tully Talks About Producing in France

Subsidized French films have no terror for Richard Walton Tully, who has just returned to Los Angeles from Paris, where he spent several months doing research work for his next big production, du Maurier's "Trilby," which will be a First National release directed by James Young.

While abroad Tully made a minute study of French production methods, and inspected picture studios of France. That French picture producers are attempting to persuade the government to subsidize picture production is not news to Tully, though it has just been announced here in cable dispatches.

"No amount of protection by the government will make French productions equal to our American pictures," said Tully, at the United Studios, where, in collaboration with Director James Young, he is preparing the script of his next First National release.

"The advantages of making pictures in France must not be underestimated, but in the face of such advantages a producer must realize there are still greater disadvantages.

"Picture talent in France is overabundant. The countryside is thickly dotted with ancient buildings of centuries past. Properties, which we must build at great cost, are easily obtained there. French cameramen are true artists and with proper lighting equipment would work wonders.

"But French people are conservative and French capital is ultra-conservative. There are many studios in France, but there is only one which is really an up-to-date plant. When a Frenchman buys a sun arc he plans to use it until it drops to pieces. He won't junk it when the market offers him something better. Hence French studios are bound to remain behind the times as regards equipment.

"French picture producers seem to make pictures for blase Parisians only, notwithstanding the fact that all Frnace, including Paris, hungers for the American sort of pictures. That is the real reason that American films go big in France. The Parisian producers base most of their dramas on a strong sex appeal. I do not mean to say that these pictures are salacious. Rather, I would say they are very frank. A little too much so for the average person who does not reside in a big city.

"French climatic conditions are not good for the making of exteriors except in the southernmost portions of the country and across the Mediterranean Sea in Algeria, where the climate is similar to that of California. But the making of French pictures in Algiers involves the expense of importing props and construction materials for modern buildings. Even with the aid of a government subsidy French producers cannot hope to really compete with American made films for many years, at least until the psychology of the French producer changes."

Schenck Signs Tearle

Joseph M. Schenck has signed Conway Tearle as leading man for Norma Talmadge's next First National release, "Ashes of Vengeance," which will be directed by Frank Lloyd. He has also signed C. Gardner Sullivan to prepare scenarios for Constance Talmadge to follow the filming of "Dulcy," which Sidney Franklin will direct. Victor Heerman will direct the Sullivan story.

Much Publicity for Distinctive Films

Twelve Omaha stores contributed a total of 204 inches of newspaper advertising space in a "Find-the-Man" contest arranged recently by Nathan Friend, of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation, as an exploitation feature for "The Man Who Played God" at the Brandeis Theatre in that city. The Omaha Evening World-Herald co-operated in the news end of the tie-up.

For Entire Family

"Are You a Failure?" Tom Forman's production for Preferred Pictures, appears on the latest list issued by the National Board of Review as a picture suitable not only for the family group but especially for young people.

Cruze in New York

James Cruze, director of "The Covered Wagon," arrived in New York, Wednesday, and will be present at the theatre premiere of his Paramount production at the Criterion Friday, March 16.

While in New York Mr. Cruze will film a large number of scenes at the Long Island studio for his special all-star production, "Hollywood," which he started several weeks ago at the Lasky studio.

Patients See Films

The patients in St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, enjoyed a motion picture show recently given for the benefit of Captain Nicholas McDonald, a newspaper staff photographer, who was injured in a flashlight explosion. Harry Birch, of the Fox Film Corporation, put on the show, "The Town That Forgot God," a nine-reel feature, and "The Pirate," a two-reel comedy, comprising the program.

Gilbert Film Completed

"The Madness of Youth," John Gilbert's new picture from a story by George F. Worts, has been finished at the Fox West Coast studios. The atmosphere of the story and the characters played by the stars are entirely different from anything previously used by Mr. Gilbert. Jerome Storm directed the picture. Dainty little Billie Dove has the leading feminine role.

"Bluff" for Bebe

"Bluff," a story of New York life by Rita Weiman and Josephine Quirk, will be Bebe Daniels' next picture for Paramount following "The Exciters," in which she is now engaged. The picture will be produced at the company's eastern studio under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, who recently arrived from the coast. Albert Shelby Le Vino is busy making the screen adaptation of the story.

Many Flying Stunts Are in "Going Up"

The filming of "Going Up," the screen adaptation of the Cohan & Harris stage hit, which will be Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Associated Exhibitors, is almost finished, according to advices received from Hollywood.

Because of the extraordinary amount of flying which is one of the essential features of the comedy, Lloyd Ingraham, the director, divided the production work into two stages. All work with Mr. MacLean's supporting cast, which included Marjorie Daw, Hallam Cooley, Edna Murphy, Francis MacDonald, Hughie Mack and other well known players, ended almost two weeks ago, and Mr. Ingraham and a large staff of cameramen and aviators have since been devoting their time to procuring the airplane scenes.

First National Has New Publicity Stunt

British First National has devised another method of giving national publicity to Jackie Coogan in Oliver Twist, which has already been released throughout the British Isles. Co-operating with the British First National organization, the London Daily Sketch has offered a prize of 25 pounds sterling for the boy who looks most like Jackie Coogan. The winner will also get a free trip to London and will make a personal appearance wherever the picture is being shown.

Several exhibitors have become interested in the idea and have added to the prize money, so that at last reports the sum had grown to over 160 pounds sterling. In addition Peter Astor, of the Astor productions, declares that the boy selected can have a part in his new picture, "Peter's Reform." This will give the lucky lad three or four weeks to act and play around London.

The photographs being received by the Daily Sketch show the widespread interest in the contest.

Nell Shipman Films to Be Made in Idaho

Nell Shipman, author, star and producer of American Releasing's "The Grub-Stake," made at Priest Lake, Idaho, will produce all future pictures there.

Bert Van Tuyle, her manager and director, is making arrangements to obtain several hundred acres on the lake, where a permanent motion picture village will be built. Miss Shipman's wild animal zoo, consisting of nearly 200 animals, and her kennels of forty dogs, have been quartered at the lake since completion of "The Grub-Stake," and a permanent home is planned for them there.

"We have made outdoor pictures in all parts of the country where we could find beautiful scenery," says Miss Shipman, "but Northern Idaho, especially Priest Lake, has the most wonderful and inspiring scenery for our purpose to be found anywhere."

Schenck Is Planning an Elaborate Film

Joseph M. Schenck is planning to make the next Norma Talmadge picture, "Ashes of Vengeance," the most elaborate Miss Talmadge has ever appeared in, it is reported.

For more than a week he had Walter Isreal, head of his costume and research department, in New York buying material for 1,200 costumes to be worn in some of the big scenes of the play and gathering together nearly a carload of swords, armor and high hip boots, reminiscent of the days of Charles IX. and Catherine de Medici, in which period the story of H. B. Somerville is laid.

Isreal has returned to Los Angeles and has employed thirty-five men and women to work on the costumes. As it will take nearly three weeks to get these costumes ready, Miss Talmadge will not begin working until March 25. Stephen Goosson will have charge of the sets.

Frank Lloyd will again direct Miss Talmadge. This is the third Norma Talmadge picture for Mr. Lloyd. He directed "The Eternal Flame" and "Within the Law." Lloyd also directed Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist."

"Isle of Lost Ships" for March 19

Associated First National has set definitely March 19 as the release date of Maurice Tourneur's latest picture, "The Isle of Lost Ships," adapted from the book by Crittenden Marriott. It is said, First National states, to have been made on the same high artistic plane that has drawn personal praise for the director's picturization of "Lorna Doone."

Gordon Is Selected for "Bluebeard"

After making screen tests of nearly two score leading men and interviewing three times that number, all of which took over two months, Sam Wood has chosen Huntly Gordon for the role of "Bluebeard" in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Gloria Swanson's current starring vehicle for Paramount.

Neilan Makes New Use of Radio

Marshall Neilan is using a new radio device to carry his voice to all parts of the big ballroom scene in his own screen story, "The Eternal Three," which he is now directing for Goldwyn. The instrument greatly magnifies the director's voice.

Reviewers Praise Lichtman Film

Very favorable comment, it is said, has been accorded "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" in England, where the Al Lichtman releases are handled by Walterdaw. The Cinema reviews the production as "modern and excellently produced." The Kinematograph Weekly calls it "an agreeable hour's entertainment. Well photographed and acted." The Film Renter characterizes it as "a best-seller that can be unreservedly recommended."

"Shadows" Praised

"Shadows," the Preferred picture presented by B. P. Schulberg, with Lon Chaney in the leading role, received a high tribute as an exceptional picture when Moving Picture Stories, a weekly fan publication of large circulation, called it "a great picture, artistically produced, splendidly produced, splendidly acted."

Signs Hale for Role in "Trilby"

Richard Walton Tully has signed Creighton Hale to play the role of "Little Billy" in his production of "Trilby," which will be released by Associated First National and which will be directed by James Young. The picture will be made at the United Studios in Hollywood. Hale has enjoyed a successful career on both the stage and screen. He has returned to the stage in Los Angeles for one week where he will be seen in "Just Suppose."

Morrison Is Engaged for "Man Next Door"

Jimmy Morrison, one of the best known juvenile leading men in the country, has been engaged by Vitagraph for a leading role in "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon" and many other successful novels. The selection was made by President Albert E. Smith just before he left the Hollywood studios to come east to give his approval to the final titling and editing of "Masters of Men," based on Morgan Robertson's great sea story, which has just been completed at the West Coast studios.

Jimmy Morrison has appeared in other Vitagraph productions, his last having been opposite Alice Calhoun in Barrie's "Little Minister," when he assumed the title role and Miss Calhoun was seen as Lady Babbie. He also played the leading juvenile role in "Black Beauty," appearing opposite Jean Paige, who starred in the famous screen version of Anna Sewell's classic.

Those who have read "The Man Next Door" are agreed that Mr. Smith's selection is an admirable one. It already has been announced that Victor Schertzinger has been engaged to direct the special production. The cast will be an all star one, Mr. Smith has announced, and the work on the production is already under way.

Fox Buys Photoplay Rights to "The Fool"

Fox Film Corporation has purchased the photoplay rights of Channing Pollock's great stage play, "The Fool." Few plays in the last decade have created such a whirlpool of discussion as "The Fool." Now in its eighth month at the Times Square Theatre, New York City, and in its fourth month at the Selwyn Theatre, Boston, "The Fool" has been called "the play that is changing the world." Based on a vital theme, it is said to probe into the very heart of humanity with the skill of the master analyst, and to reveal with unerring logic sophistries and cant of the day.

In the first week following this sensational play's premiere at the Times Square Theatre, New York, Mr. Pollock received thousands of letters from prominent persons in all walks of life, among them noted educators, ministers of the gospel, writers on social questions, politicians and virtually every dramatic critic in New York City, as well as from the foremost dramatic critics throughout the world.

The book of the play has been published by Brentano and is now in its sixth edition, and indications are that before the year ends as many more editions will have been printed, it is said.

Beginning Labor Day seven more companies playing "The Fool" will be sent out by Selwyn & Co., who control the stage rights. Early in April Mr. Pollock will sail for London to supervise the London production of his play, which is announced as one of the dramatic events of the coming season in the English metropolis.

Los Angeles Times Praises Metro Film

"If you would forget for a brief and delightful hour all about taxes and how your mother-in-law acts, and about the grease-spot on the front of your new gown, and the ripped place you found in your new glove, and how the man next door practises his sliding trombone, just step inside the velvet curtains at Loew's State and allow yourself to slip under the spell of 'All the Brothers Were Valiant.'"

This is the recommendation of the photoplay reviewer of the Los Angeles Times, after witnessing a presentation of the Metro's "All the Brothers Were Valiant," an Irvin V. Willat production based on the sea story by Ben Ames Williams. Lon Chaney, Malcolm MacGregor and Billie Dove head the cast in this photoplay.

Zasu Pitts to Lead in Goldwyn Picture

Zasu Pitts has won the feminine lead in Erich von Stroheim's first production for Goldwyn, "Greed," based upon the late Frank Norris' novel of modern California, "McTeague." Mr. Von Stroheim and Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production, tried out half a dozen well-known actresses for the role of Trina before settling on Miss Pitts as just the right player for the part.

Miss Pitts has been playing in a Goldwyn film, "Three Wise Fools," directed by King Vidor. She has appeared in productions by La Salle, Universal, Famous Players, Metro, Brentwood, Paramount and Robertson-Cole. Gibson Gowland will act the role of McTeague, the gigantic dentist who marries the little Trina.

Exhibitors Praise New Fox Specials

Additional testimony of the popularity of the new Fox special productions is being daily received at the home office of Fox Film Corporation from exhibitors throughout the country, it is reported. Very successful engagements have been reported by first run theatres for both "The Town That Forgot God" and "The Face on the Barroom Floor," two of the latest releases.

Charles Seasonske, manager of the Avon Theatre in Watertown, N. Y., sent the Fox office the following telegram on the opening night of "The Town That Forgot God," stating that it opened to the biggest business in the history of Watertown despite strenuous opposition, and that audiences have been enthusiastic in praise of the picture.

Another New York State exhibitor who wired an enthusiastic report to the Fox office was Morris Fitzer, manager of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. He told of the great reception his patrons had given "The Face on the Barroom Floor."

Paramount Activity in Full Swing on Coast

The West Coast Paramount studio is now in full swing. Six big companies are at work and more are to start shortly, and the large number of minor players, in addition to the large casts of principals, the big settings and much location work, serve to keep the entire studio force on its toes.

Sam Wood started "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" by going to Del Monte February 26 with a big company. This is Gloria Swanson's new starring vehicle and is an adaptation by Sada Cowan of the Charlton Andrews adaptation of Alfred Savoir's play. At the famous resort a large number of important shots were made. Julia Crawford Ivers is production editor.

Herbert Brenon is bringing "The Rustle of Silk" to a close and in a few weeks will start "The Woman With Four Faces," in which Betty Compson is to star. She and Conway Tearle are featured in "The Rustl eof Silk," which is adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's story by Sada Cowan and Ouida Bergere. Julia Crawford Ivers is production editor.

"The Cheat" has a big studio set representing a railway depot, and aside from the cast, headed by Pola Negri as star, with Jack Holt featured and Charles de Roche in support, there are hundreds of minor players. George Fitzmaurice is producing this new Paramount picture, adapted by Ouida Bergere from the Hector Turnbull story.

George Melford arrived recently from New York with his company to finish "You Can't Fool Your Wife" at the West Coast studio. Included among the principals are Leatrice Joy, Lewis Stone, Pauline Garon and others. This is a Hector Turnbull story adapted by Waldemar Young.

During the absence of Director Cruze in New York his assistants are hard at work preparing for more scenes for "Hollywood," Cruze's picture which will bring to the screen a galaxy of stars and a lot of unknown actors as well. Frank Condon wrote the original short story and it was adapted by Thomas Geraghty, while Walter Woods is production editor.

"Sixty Cents an Hour" will soon be completed. It is a Walter Hiers starring picture and Joseph Henabery is directing. Jacqueline Logan is featured in support. The story was an original by Frank Condon and was adapted by Grant Carpenter.

Starts New Paper to Get Publicity Across

Samuel Carver, Universal's exploiter in the Detroit territory, recently did the resourceful thing of fostering the starting of a new newspaper in Bay City, Michigan, in opposition to the other paper in the town, when he found, on trying to exploit "The Flirt," that the editor of the only paper in the city was unalterably anti-film.

Carver had gone to Bay City to help W. Watson, manager of the Regent Theatre, put "The Flirt" across. When the newspaper editor came out positively with his dictum of nothing doing in the way of news stories for the film, Carver talked the matter over with the city's exhibitors, with the result that a staff man from Bay City's only newspaper was retained to be put at the head of an opposition paper. Its first issue will appear Sunday, and exhibitors will find in it a sympathetic co-operator in building up the city's amusement business.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Exhibitors and Critics Praise Educational-Hamilton Comedies

With four of the six comedies in his first year's series of Hamilton Comedies playing in theatres throughout the country, Educational reports that the verdicts of exhibitors and newspaper critics show that Lloyd Hamilton has attained and is maintaining a prominent position in the first rank of screen comedians.

While some of his contemporaries are turning to feature length comedies, Hamilton continues making short subjects which are said to have no less effort in their production and no less quality apparent on the screen. As a result, his popularity is announced as increasing by leaps and bounds with each succeeding film.

Educational points to a significant fact in connection with the newspaper reviews; that is that the critic invariably states Hamilton is steadily improving with each picture. James W. Dean, of Newspaper Enterprise Association, whose reviews are syndicated, says: "I dare say Hamilton is inherently a funnier man than Chaplin or Lloyd of Keaton. He is the only one of the four who makes me feel like laughing when I meet him."

The News of Washington, D. C., says: "This fellow Hamilton is one of the screen's pantomimists, with a marvelously mobile face and an unerring sense of comedy. Hamilton, one day, will be a mountain among the screen's molehills." The New York Morning Telegraph, writing of "No Luck," says: "It is the funniest comedy since Hamilton's last."

The Universal Theatre, Minneapolis, reports on "The Speeder": "Is the finest two-reel comedy we ever ran. It pleases, and you can boost Hamilton as he will get them in and send them away happy."

Hamilton has recently completed his fifth comedy, "Uneasy Feet," which is now ready for release, and has started work on the last one of the group.

Universal's New Series of Yorke Norroy Stories Ready

"The Further Adventures of Yorke Norroy," a high-class series of four two-reel features by George Bronson Howard, is now being released by Universal. The pictures were made under the direction of Duke Worne, with Roy Stewart as star.

The present series may be considered as a sequel to "Perils of the Secret Service," written and directed by Howard for Universal about five years ago. The present series was projected because of an expressed desire on the part of many exhibitors for more "Yorke Norroy" pictures.

"Yorke Norroy" was Howard's best known and most popular fictional character. He is said to have been the first diplomatic secret agent used as a hero of fiction. The original stories—a series called "York Norroy, Diplomatic Agent"—were widely hailed when they appeared in the Popular Magazine.

The new Yorke Norroy stories were written by Howard shortly before his death.

The first of the series is now being shown. It is called "One of Three," and shows Norroy trapping a band of international agents seeking to wrest important papers from the American embassy in Paris. Stewart is supported by Hayden Stevenson, Jack Perrin, Fontaine LaRue and Lucille Ricksen.

"Under Secret Orders" is the second. It is to be released March 19. The action is laid partly upon a trans-Atlantic liner, and shows Norroy again foiling foreign crooks seeking to get important documents from the American secret service agents. In this feature Stewart is supported by Esther Ralston, Jack Perrin, George A. Williams and William Welsh.

The third of the series is "The Secret Code," to be released April 14. It involves the seizure of a radio station in America by foreign agents, who seek to transmit dangerous information to their respective governments. Stewart has Ethel Richie as leading women in this feature.

The last of the series, to be released May 5, is entitled "The Radio-Active Bomb." The story deals with the attempt by a group of foreign secret service agents to get possession of a radio-active bomb which an American inventor submitted to the War Department.

The role opposite Stewart is taken by Sylvia Breamer. Others in the cast are Phil Sleeman, Charles Wheelock, Burton C. Law and Theodore Lorch. The stories were adapted to the screen by Howard himself, assisted by George Hively. William Fildew handled the camera.

Pearl White and Parrott on Pathe March 25 List

Pearl White's serial, "Plunder," reaches its ninth episode in Pathe's program for March 25. The dangers which surround the heroine are increased by the arrival of three scoundrels from a tropical country with strange and terrifying methods of coercion.

The Hal Roach one-reel comedy features Paul Parrott, and is called "Bowled Over." A bowling-alley tournament, with the hero as the favorite, becomes the scene of rich burlesque. All sorts of trick apparatus aid the comic developments.

"The Alley Cat" is an Aesop's Film Fable. Farmer Al Falfa's home is overrun with mice. He gives Fanny, the cat, her instructions and goes to bed. A cat Romeo quartette serenades Fanny, and the mice come in on the general festivities.

"Screen Snapshots" shows these stars: Lon Chaney, Blanche Sweet, Louise Fazenda, John Bowers, Elmo Lincoln, Hank Mann, Bill Franey, Allene Ray, Mary Carr, Pearl White, Lewis Sargent, Reginald Denny, Hoot Gibson, William Desmond, Charles Ray, Priscilla Dean, Kenneth Harland and Conrad Nagel.

In this issue of Pathe Review is shown "Hats of Tomorrow"; also the weird and mystic Harvest Dance of the Senegambians of French West Africa, with a new example of "Silliettes" and beautiful Photographic Gems.

Stern's Loan Buddy

Julius and Abe Stern have loaned Buddy Messinger to McDonald Productions for the role of Sam in "Penrod and Sam," a Booth Tarkington story which is a sequel to "Penrod." This is a production of feature length and it is announced it is being directed by William Beaudine and will be released through First National.

Keaton Comedy Gets High Praise

Buster Keaton's "Frozen North" received great praise from the New York critics. "It is about as funny a two-reeler as one could ask for, and even if it were the only thing on the bill it would repay one for a visit to the Rialto," says the Evening World.

"'The Frozen North' is a stirring tale of the land of chilly landscapes and burning hearts," says the Evening Telegram. "Buster Keaton is nothing short of superb in 'The Frozen North.' This comedy is a conglomerate satire of the screen dramas of the great open spaces," says the Evening Journal.

Novelty in Newest Hodge-Podge

"Scenic Distortion," the novelty subject shown last year at the Capitol Theatre, will form one of the items in "Tarpon Fishing," one of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge series, released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Another portion of this subject, "Tarpon Fishing," shows the landing of one of these huge, game fish after a struggle of two hours and a half.

"Crystal Jewels" Is March Fox Film

Among the March releases of Fox Educational Entertainments is "Crystal Jewels," which shows how New York City is provided with its water supply and the terrific task accomplished in completing the mammoth tunnel from the Catskills to Manhattan.

The particularly interesting points of this waterway are set forth in the Fox reel, showing the interior of the tunnel, one of the largest in the world; the Ashokan Reservoir, and the laboratory where the water supply is continually examined under the microscope.

Brownie's Newest

In Brownie's newest Century Comedy, this clever dog is assisted by Joe Bonner and Billy Engle. It is titled "Sunny Gym" and shows Brownie as assistant to the trainer in a gymnasium. It is said that among the clever stunts Brownie actually punches a big like a regular athlete. Herman Raymaker is directing the cast which also includes the Century Beauties.

New Vitagraphs

Vitagraph reports that Jimmy Aubrey's latest comedy, "Forward March," is scheduled for early release and he has begun work on another, "The Detective." Larry Semon is also making a new comedy titled "The Midnight Rounders."

Start Co-Operative Campaign

A nation-wide campaign exploiting "Aesop's Film Fables" and "Topics of the Day," released by Pathe, started with the week of March 12 in Greater New York, Keith and Moss theatres co-operating.

Exploitation includes space in twenty-four-sheets used by the theatres. These subjects also had space in forty-eight-sheets used by the Bushwick and Orpheum theatres in Brooklyn.

The subjects also share space in other paper and general publicity of the theatres.

"To and Fro"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the very best of the series of single reel comedies distributed by Universal starring Neely Edwards assisted by Bert Roach. Edwards and his pal first encounter humorous experiences in a saloon in which they get beer with a real "kick" administered by a mechanical boot. Then they find themselves involved in a trolley strike and attempt to run the lone car "to and fro" while Edwards falls in love with the president's daughter. There are several good laughs in this number.

Universal to Make Comedies Based on the Gump Cartoons

Within the next two weeks production of a series of high-class two-reel comedies presenting the Gump Family will begin at Universal City. The pictures will be produced by Samuel Van Ronkel and distributed by Universal.

Picturization of the activities of the Gumps, made famous by Sidney Smith's comedy strip in the daily newspapers, will include the love affair of Uncle Bim and the Widow Zander, which caused wide interest a couple of years ago. Chester and Min, "Old-Timer" and his good wife of Shady Rest will have important roles in the Universal screen attractions.

Van Ronkel's contract with Sidney Smith extends over a period of five years, and the pictures to be filmed will follow the Gumps' activities to a considerable extent as they appear in the daily comedy strip.

All the characters for the comedies have not yet been chosen. It is a particularly delicate task to pick these characters because of the unusual physiognomy of the Gump Family, especially Andy and Uncle Bim.

"The comedies are not to be slapstick, but will be of a very high-class order," says Van Ronkel.

"The Night Riders"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This two-reel Harry Carey reissue, cut down from a three-reel subject derives its chief interest from the presence in the cast of players like Hoot Gibson and Neal Hart in small roles. It is hardly up to the standard of entertainment of some of the other Carey reissues and the fact that it was made several years ago is more evident; however, for those who want principally physical action, hard riding and good fighting it should prove entertaining, for in cutting the film the action has been speeded up to a fast pace. Carey appears as a half-breed who loves a white girl and for her sake single-handed overcomes the leader of a gang of night-riding bandits.—C. S. S.

Heavy Bookings Reported on New "Leather Pushers"

Art Schmidt, Universal sales chief, states that the announcement of the third series of two-reel Universal-Jewel pictures has been enthusiastically received by exhibitors and photoplay patrons, and that there is already a heavy demand for advance bookings, indicating the great popularity of the previous series.

As an example of this Universal quotes from a telegram received from A. Dobbs, manager of the Empire Theatre, Milwaukee: "One of best steps Universal ever took was to plan release of third series of 'Leather Pushers.' Contracted for same yesterday. Announcement to patrons greeted by deafening applause."

In New York the exchange sent out a brief note to exhibitor patrons, and in less than twenty-four hours the telephones were deluged with inquiries. Practically every showman who had the first two series wanted the third, and large numbers were anxious to get the series for the coming season, stating that the first series was largely instrumental in holding up business during the hot weather last year. Many exhibitors, also, who did not run the first two are seeking to book the third. Contracts have already been closed with the Fox circuit, Rachmiel & Kingler circuit, Bimberg, and Haring & Blumenthal circuits, and many individual houses.

"Hello, Partner"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is a generous number of laughs in this Sunshine comedy. It is all slapstick, with the two leading parts entertainingly handled by Peewee Holmes and Buster Gardner. Most of it is a burlesque on farm life, speeded up by a melodramatic love affair between a beautiful heroine and a deep-dyed villain, and ending with a fire, produced with some good comedy effects. M. K.

"The Handy Man"

(Metro—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel gives one of his typical boobish impersonations in this, which depends principally upon frequently used devices for getting laughs. The handy man pays ardent attention to the plump cook, who is really the lost wife of a mysterious stranger. He finds out in time to divorce her. The fat heroine supplies much of the comedy, which will amuse those who like obvious effects. It should be booked with careful regard for your patrons' tastes in comedy, as it will be most appreciated by devoted admirers of Stan Laurel and of rather broad humor. M. K.

Pathe Review 12

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

This contains several worthwhile attractions. An exhibition of new Paris and London hats offers pleasant information for women; the Silliettes add a bit of light amusement; a weird dance of a tribe of West Africans and some delightful water scenes complete the group. M. K.

"Rob 'em Good"

(Metro—Comedy—Three Reels)

Hilarious amusement for those who saw "Robin Hood" is in store for those who see Metro's burlesque. It follows the original version with remarkable success, and extracts a wealth of fun from the most characteristic scenes. Bull Montana is "Rob 'em Good," known in the early scenes as the Earl of Nothingdone. He contributes a clever impersonation but is not starred to the exclusion of numerous other highly entertaining characterizations.

The part of King Richard, the Lamb-Hearted, is a round of laughs. To some it will probably be the funniest thing in the picture. Lady Marion Fizzwater is as far removed as possible from a romantic heroine, without losing the distinctive marks of the original character. The settings are remarkably accurate. Especially the scenes in the castle, the chase up the curving stairway, the love scene on the balcony and the hero's feats of escape down the walls, recall definite parts of the feature. There are many unexpected touches that will bring bursts of laughter.—M. K.

"Smarty"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Buddy Messenger furnishes plenty of amusement of a sort that will appeal primarily to children. The comedy is in episodes rather than following out any one line. The pranks of a small boy keep everyone on edge, particularly the schoolmaster. The school room scenes have plenty of action but are hardly sufficiently involved or original to appeal to adults. "Smarty" finally gets back into grace because he has a pretty sister whom the teacher loves. In a theatre patronized by children this comedy should be an excellent choice. M. K.

"The Alley Cat"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Farmer Al Falfa drowns a cat in this fable and has a weird dream of punishment. His method of disposing of the nightly serenader results in being called before a mysterious tribunal of cats who sentence him to be beheaded. There are a number of comic and original touches. The point is well drawn and it is a more than usually lively number of the Aesop Film Fable series. M. K.

"Bowled Over"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Bowling and bluffing are the chief accomplishments of Paul Parrott this time. Most of the stunts in connection with his efforts in the bowling room where he has a deadly rival are new and funny. It should amuse anyone who likes violent slapstick. His career ends when his rival puts a little glue on the ball and the hero fails to separate himself from the ball as it starts down the alley. M. K.

Newsy Notes on Short Subjects

C. B. C. Corporation's newest Hallroom Boys comedy is "Only a Husband." Jean Havez wrote the story, and Al Santell directed it. The cast includes George Williams, Al Smith, Marion Mack and Bud Jamison.

"Uncle Robert," internationally celebrated advocate of the universal observance of Mothers Day has written to Timely Films, Inc., praising them for incorporating in Topics of the Day the sentiment: "Happy is the man who reverences all women, because he first learned to worship his mother."

Abe Stern, vice-president of Century Film Corporation, recently married Miss Hortense Westheimer of New York, and the happy couple are now spending their honeymoon at Coranado, Cal.

Two recent Urban Popular Classics for Vitagraph release are "Pirates of the Air," showing birds of prey, and "The Staff of Life," showing the progress of wheat from the sowing to baking in a large modern bakery.

Buddy Messinger's third Century Comedy is "All Over Twist." It is a story of a boy too bright for his job in a baker's shop. Fred Spencer, Jack Henderson and little Sadie Campbell, a clever twelve year old girl are in the cast.

In recognition of his snappy work in securing the first contract of "The Message of Emile Coue," E. W. Hammon, president of Educational, has presented M. Harlan Starr, manager of the Detroit Educational exchange, with a magnificent watch.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

What A.M.P.E.D.A. Means to the Motion Picture Industry

IN our last issue, we published a line-up of the membership of the New York zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America.

The item was of particular interest not only to picture theatre supply dealers and manufacturers of picture theatre equipment and accessories, but also to the exhibitors as it constituted advance news of an effort to place the equipment and accessory business of the country on a better financial footing, and an endeavor to obtain for the supply dealers recognition of their importance and usefulness, which has not always heretofore been awarded them.

For, important to the industry, the supply dealer certainly is. Without his solicitation of business and efforts in marketing equipment and accessories, the task of the manufacturer would be many times greater than it is. Contrary to a belief which exists in some minds, the supply house, both retail and jobbing, constitutes a necessary wheel in the mechanism of marketing.

The Supply Dealer's Value

Few manufacturing concerns are so organized that they are in a position to keep in touch with new houses building or old ones being refitted and renovated.

No manufacturer is in the same position to acquire accurate knowledge of the true credit rating of prospective customers as is an equipment dealer who goes over his territory with a fine tooth comb and goes over it repeatedly, looking for new business, cultivating old trade, advising the new exhibitor and showing the old one the latest devices that will add to picture theatre prosperity.

In spite of his efforts and his knowledge, the average supply dealer has not prospered during the past few years to the degree that he has had reason to expect.

This, to a large extent, has been due to a laxity in credit matters forced on him, despite his better judgment, because of the fear that if he did not allow unreasonable extensions of credit, some competitor would gobble the order.

The majority of picture theatre exhibitors are keen, hard-headed business men, good buyers and good pay. But, in common with every other line of endeavor, among them has grown up a small minority of unreliables, shifting from place to place, and from house to house, and unreliable in commercial transactions, and the method of these has been—as an Irishman would say—"when one tree gets wet through to seek shelter under another."

In other words, having stretched credit to the limit with one supply concern, they would proceed to patronize another, and as each dealer got down to c. o. d. business, they would proceed to pull the same tactics on a fresh concern.

This has made it hard sledding for the supply dealer and worked an injustice upon the majority of exhibitors—those who met their obligations—by adding to the overhead—therefore to the price of equipment—a percentage for bad debts that could have been avoided if greater credit co-operation existed among the supply houses.

The Good Man Pays Twice

As a matter of fact, for some seasons past the business-like exhibitor has been in the same fix as the citizen who has just paid an income tax considerably greater than it would be had it not been for those other citizens whose incomes are derived from tax-exempt investments.

Credit always has been and always will be the basis of any business, but, when in any business discrimination is not made between justified and unjustified credit, those who pay always pay not only their own shot, but that of those who do not pay at all.

With the avowed intention of a more severe scrutinization of credit and also an interchange of information regarding same, the members of the New York Zone of the Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America are making an effort to clear up the situation in a way that will add to the prosperity of the reliable class of exhibitors, of the manufacturers and of themselves.

This endeavor may be regarded as the initial effort for better business conditions all along the line, and if adhered to, will undoubtedly prove as great a benefit to the exhibitor as to the members of the Association, insomuch as it will do its part toward the suppression of unfair competition of the unreliable exhibitor with the real backbone of the industry—the business-like, progressive and aggressive showman who realizes the value of his show and places his admission prices accordingly and has an equal regard for the sanctity of his financial obligations.

A Correction

On page 250 of our issue of March 10, in that portion of the Model Picture Theatre Section, describing the projection room, appeared the following:

"We publish herewith projection room layouts specially planned by us and also specifications by J. E. Robin."

This was a typographical error and should have read, "We publish herewith projection room layouts specially planned FOR us and also specifications, BOTH by J. E. Robin."

Hollywood Is to Have Million Dollar House

Hollywood is to have a million-dollar theatre!

This announcement comes from Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser, Joseph M. Schenck, Adolph Ramish and Michael Gore of the West Coast Theatres, Incorporated, organization.

The new theatre, which is expected to open in six months, will seat between 1,500 and 2,000 patrons. It will face Hollywood boulevard and will be in the heart of the film colony.

The West Coast Theatres, Incorporated, has a joint interest in the present Grauman Theatre in Hollywood. It also operates the Hollywood, Apollo, Wilshire, Paramount, Granada and several other Hollywood theatres. The chain of houses exceeds 100—all in the State of California.

One of the features, it is understood, will be a full-fledged orange grove in a patio of the new temple. Oranges will be grown and cared for by fruit growers of Southern California.

Business Picks Up in Southwest and Power's Representative Is Some Picker

WE are in receipt of the following communication from the energetic Southern Theatre Equipment Company, of Dallas, which, at the time of writing, appears to have had its hands full of orders for installations:

Dallas, March 6, 1923.

Moving Picture World,
New York City:

We believe that you will be interested in the following installation and equipment news items from this territory:

The Palace Theatre, of Beaumont, Texas, representing an investment of $200,000, which was recently damaged by fire, has been remodeled and re-decorated, and opened March 10.

All new equipment has been purchased for the theatre, which consists of two Power's 6-B, Type "E" projectors of the latest design, a General Electric motor generator set, a special Minusa Gold Fibre screen and other units of projection equipment, these being furnished by the Southern Theatre Equipment Company.

Seven hundred upholstered chairs on the lower floor were damaged by water, as well as 250 in the balcony, these being replaced with new chairs.

The origin of the fire is unknown, but the damage to the theatre approximated $15,000.

John D. Jones, of the San Angelo Amusement Company, San Angelo, Texas, has been making extensive improvements to both the Crystal and Palace Theatres, which are under his direction.

The Palace, one of the most up-to-date theatres in west Texas, has recently been equipped with two Power's 6-B, Type "E" projectors, as well as a Minusa Gold Fibre screen.

Mazda Equipment Going Good in Texas

Projection by Mazda lamps is being overwhelmingly supported in the Southwest, especially in Texas, where a number of theatres have installed machines equipped with General Electric Mazda lamp houses.

John E. Martin's Theatre, of Mt. Pleasant, Texas, recently installed improved Power's 6-B projectors with "G. E" Mazda lamp houses. This equipment was installed entirely on approval with the understanding that if the result obtained from the Mazda equipment did not exceed that of the 50 ampere arc, which they were previously using, the management would not be obligated to purchase. After comparative test was made, the Mazda equipment was installed.

The Palace Theatre, operated by the Lufkin Amusement Company, a splendid little theatre in southwest Texas, also installed improved Power's projector with G. ... Mazda lamp house, replacing equipment where 40 amperes direct current was used at the carbon arc. This equipment was also installed after comparative tests were made.

The Palace Theatre, of Bryan, Texas, operated by Mrs. Lola Milton, opened with the improved Power's 6-B with G. E. Mazda lamp houses.

Rosewin Theatre, of Dallas, one of the finest suburban theatres in the Southwest, representing an investment of approximately $50,000, opened with Mazda equipped Power's 6-B projectors.

Minusa Gold Fibre screens, specially built for Mazda light projection, were installed in each of the installations of Mazda equipment.

Associated First National Install Power's

The screening room of the Dallas branch of the Associated First National Exhibitors' circuit is one of the best in the entire South.

While comparatively small, it embodies the very latest in equipment. The furniture consists of upholstered wicker settees and chairs, with specially designed tables for making notes for future reference of the more interesting scenes in a feature when being screened.

The projection equipment consists of two of the latest model Improved Power's 6-B projectors and a 6x8 Minusa Mazda light screen, which was built to conform with the specifications of this exclusive screening room. The Southern Theatre Equipment Company, of Dallas, equipped this room complete.

The Consolidated Film & Supply Company, Select Pictures Corporation and the Fox Film Company also have Power's projectors in their screening rooms.

Interstate Standardize with Power's

The Interstate Amusement Company, operating a chain of the finest and most exclusive vaudeville and feature picture houses in the South, has standardized its entire chain of Texas theatres with Power's projectors.

The $1,500,000 Majestic, of Dallas, one of the finest theatres in the United States, which opened less than two years ago, recently installed Power's 6-B, Type "E" projectors.

The machines installed were built especially by the Nicholas Power Company to conform with the ideas of W. R. Estes, chief projectionist, in that the machines were equipped with numerous devices of special design and finished in a beautiful battleship gray with the highly nickel plated mechanisms.

The Majestic Theatres of Fort Worth and San Antonio, Texas, were next to install Power's 6-B, Type "E" machines.

The most recent installation of equipment by the Interstate Amusement Company was that in the new million-dollar Majestic, which opened February 26 in Houston. The projection and booth equipment in this theatre consists of two improved model Type "E" 6-B machines and a 100 ampere G. E. motor generator set.

Last November the Interstate Amusement Company purchased its first Power's projectors for their Majestic Theatre, of Dallas, and now its circuit of four theatres is standardized on Power's machines. These theatres present first-run feature pictures and big-time vaudeville.

Helena, Ark., to Have New Theatre

C. N. Jenkins, who formerly managed the Best Theatre, of Foreman, Ark., has under construction now in Helena a fine and pretentious theatre. Work on the new building is progressing very fast, and Mr. Jenkins anticipates opening the theatre within a short time.

No expense was spared in securing the equipment.

This theatre was equipped with two improved Type "E," 6-B Power's projectors, a General Electric motor generator set, special Minusa Gold Fibre screen, a complete layout of metal moulding lobby display frames, as well as theatre chairs furnished by the Southern Theatre Equipment Company.

The Sanger Amusement Company, operating a circuit of theatres throughout Louisiana and Arkansas, also owns a house in Helena, which leads one to believe that Helena must be a thrifty and live little city.

Zurich Arrangement and a Minusa Screen

Here is ocular evidence of one of the different ways in which they do things abroad. It is a reproduction of a photograph of the interior of the beautiful Cinema Bellevue, of Zurich, Switzerland, considered to be one of Europe's finest motion picture houses.

The dark backed seats in the centre of the house are the seats of honor—the equivalent of the boxes in our American houses. They certainly carry with them a better view of the screen than the box seats of some of our American theatres, but we should imagine that they are considerably more difficult of access.

The screen shown is a Minusa gold fibre fourteen by nineteen feet. Minusa seems to be quite popular on the other side, the Minusa Cine Screen Company having placed their product in many European picture houses.

Reynolds Tells How to Keep the Flashers at Their Best

A BROADSIDE, containing sales service for the supply dealer, has just been issued by the Reynolds Electric Company, 2650 West Congress street, Chicago, Ill., manufacturers of Reco controllers, color hoods, flashers and fractional horsepower motors.

In the broadside has been incorporated suggestions for keeping the flashers in perfect working order. The present and greatly increasing importance of such equipment to all picture houses causes us to lift these instructions from the Reynolds Electric Company's broadside and publish it herewith in full for the benefit of our readers.

Keeping the Flasher in Perfect Working

Perhaps the most neglected part of an electric sign is the flasher—yet it is a very easy matter to keep the flasher up to full efficiency.

Nothing presents a more untidy appearance than a ragged flashing effect. Take for instance a running border which has a perfect traveling or running effect when first installed, and after a while flashes back and forth or with only half the lamps burning. This shows that the brushes on the flasher have burned off to the extent where they no longer touch the contacts; an easy matter to correct.

A sign which flashes a word letter after letter, then goes out and comes on as one and goes out and repeats, will, if neglected, show ragged flashing, causing letters to come on and go out in haphazard fashion. This is also an indication that the brushes have not been reset.

Periodic Inspection Necessary

It is utterly impossible to control even burning or wearing of the brushes and contacts on account of current conditions; therefore periodic inspection of the flasher should be made and the brushes should be reset or moved up to make up for the burning.

On speed flashers, a brush makes and breaks in some cases 360 times per minute, 21,600 times per hour, 172,800 times per eight-hour night. In a word, flasher work is the hardest known duty in contacting work, and it is only natural that the brushes and contacts burn and consequently grow shorter.

The contacts should be kept smooth by use of sandpaper or by filing.

The brushes should be moved up only enough to make up for burning. Maintenance men sometimes think they are saving themselves work by pushing the brushes in so far that they almost touch the flasher drum. This causes undue strain on the brushes and they will break within a short time and moreover the effect is as a rule ruined.

The flasher bearings should be oiled with light engine oil and the motor grease cups should be filled with soft cup grease.

The connections to the flasher should be examined now and then, as they sometimes work loose, which causes overheating and excessive burning.

Grounds in a sign are frequent, especially after a rain, and cause an unusual amount of current to flow through the brushes, with consequent burning. This condition corrects itself with weather conditions, but in the interim the flasher requires more frequent attention.

If the flashing effect is too fast or too slow, the speed of the flasher can easily be changed by putting on a different size of drive pulley.

Carry Spare Parts

A few spare parts, such as extra brushes and contacts should be carried on hand by the user or by the maintenance company to save time and expense.

The accessibility of the flasher is imperative. The flasher should be installed in a place where it is convenient to work on. Otherwise it is bound to be neglected.

The life of brushes depends entirely upon the load carried and the number of makes and breaks per minute. The brush on a high speed flasher if properly maintained will last from one to two years, provided it is carrying a load equivalent to the rated capacity, while the brush which makes and breaks only several times per minute will in turn last three to four years and longer.

The life of the contact also depends upon

Her brother was in trouble and only she could save him!

A gang of international crooks had said that unless she obtained certain papers, papers that if put in the hands of the proper authorities would incriminate persons high in diplomatic service, and deliver them into their hands, they would kill her brother.

To make matters worse they had stolen a valuable necklace her husband had just presented to her, about which she dared not tell him without implicating him in this terrible affair.

How was she to escape from their grasp and free her brother without bringing disaster and unhappiness to her home?

A helping hand in the time of need brought her the assistance of "The Lion's Mouse" who from that moment became a dangerous foe of the blackmailers.

The tracking down of the leaders and the recovery of the papers and the necklace unfolds a melodrama of thrills and suspense that will grip any audience.

1650 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

THERE is a lot of human interest in this picture, as well as numerous "big punch" situations. It registers as a good, wholesome melodrama, with plenty of rapid action, and carries a popular appeal. Also, it is decidedly refreshing to meet with such a rare type of screen hero, who is anything but heroic, rather a weakling in fact, but when thrown unexpectedly into an atmosphere altogether foreign to his nature, suddenly braces himself to meet the emergency, shows an undaunted front to his enemies, defeats their plans and wins a girl worthy of his love.

That "The Inner Man" will please a majority of film patrons is a safe prophecy. It abounds in beautiful photography; is free from padding and should prove a satisfactory box office asset.

The role fits Wyndham Standing like the proverbial glove. It is a capital bit of character work. Dorothy Mackaill is an exceedingly pretty and convincing heroine.

The continuity is even and the action swift from start to finish.

MOVING PICTURE
WORLD

The Editor's Views

THE cycle has been completed. Already we are beginning to forget that there is a "this season" and give our thoughts to "next season."

The production boom on the West Coast has brought consideration of "next season" to a focus rather early. So many big pictures are being made which are obviously not intended for release in the dreaded Summer months, that it already seems possible to get a line on next year's offerings and their sponsors.

And what is the outlook?

Very good—as far as the quality of product goes, and as far as the "quantity of quality product" goes.

But not so good from another angle: Production costs. If all reports are true the producing colony is discounting the return of boom days to an alarming extent.

A year ago the pat phrase was: "Production costs must come down."

Today the fact is: "Production costs are going up—higher and higher."

What has happened in the theatre situation of the last year, what definite forecasts of prosperity for next year can be made responsible for this change of the current?

IT would be pleasant to think that groups of carefully deliberating executives in New York, analyzing all available information, had mapped out the plans that are resulting in the Los Angeles sky-rocketing.

It is probably more close to the truth to say that the mounting figures are a psychologic accident, a bull raid with no known source and no known end.

Said a producer lately returned from the coast last week:

"We were paying a certain girl five hundred dollars a week. She is ideal for a certain type and we use her quite regularly throughout the year. At the completion of her last picture she was taken away from us to work for another producer on one picture for nine hundred dollars a week.

"That is going to be her figure from now on. We will have to use her again for, as I said, she is an ideal type. But you can bet that we will have to pay close to the nine hundred dollar figure to get her.

"That's one way that production costs are going up. And it is the least intelligent of all the excuses for spending more money."

WE are paying for our sins of exaggeration.

No star can be working under anything less than a million dollar contract, no producer or distributor will admit that any of his pictures can fail to gross over a half million, no director can afford to admit that he ever made pictures costing less than two hundred thousand for fear of losing caste.

All this is conversation.

But we hand it to each other, back and forth, around the table so often that we begin to believe it.

And the belief is costing us money. We are paying for it now.

THE money that goes into pictures must come out.

Whether New York will admit it or not; whether Los Anegles knows it or not—the great majority of exhibitors last year have been paying all that the traffic will bear.

Any lost revenue now is lost in tangled first run situations, haphazard national advertising, top-heavy distributing systems.

But the bulk of exhibitors are paying the limit. And the sky is not the limit.

So—while we talk of prosperity in production, let's not confuse bubbles with booms. Let's look ahead. It may not be pleasant, but it won't be half as painful as leaping blindly into trouble.

Introduces Bill Fixing Premises for Motion Picture Exhibition

At the meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, now in session at Columbus, Ohio, A. G. Hettesheimer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, and vice-president of the association, assisted materially in drafting a formal protest against the Eddington bill, which was on the desks of the members of the Ohio General Assembly on March 13.

Would Give Marshal Unlimited Power

The protest is the outgrowth of a meeting held by the members of the association in Columbus the previous day and attributes the drastic proposals of picture theatre regulation to the activities of the Lord's Day Alliance and similar organizations carrying on organized propaganda against the exhibitors. The Lord's Day Alliance was in the legal limelight only recently on account of the stringent measures which it proposed to adopt.

The Eddington bill seeks to give the state fire marshal unlimited power in directing what premises may be used for the exhibition of motion pictures, and likewise permits the same official to put the ban on any projectionist who, in his judgment, may not be capable. It also adds one-fourth of one per cent tax on gross premiums of fire insurance companies doing business in Ohio for an inspection force under the supervision of the state fire marshal, and further provides that each picture theatre must be inspected at least twice a year, the owner to pay the sum of $10 to the state for each inspection.

It is also represented that there are 1,048 picture theatres in Ohio, and to further quote the owners, the alliance has "persisted in classifying our family gathering places of pleasure, recreation and education in the same category as the low saloons of former years."

Charges Jewish Control

The exhibitors also have a document from the alliance, in which it is superciliously charged that the picture theatres are controlled and dominated by the Jews. Issue is taken in this assertion, it being contended that only about 9½ per cent of the theatres are in the hands of Jews. The exhibitors assert that the charge, implying religious bigotry, was a confidential communication, and that subsequently an open appeal was broadcasted for support of "all churches and synagogues." The Public Welfare Department of the Motion Picture Owners' Association has offered to co-operate with the churches.

In view of the alleged attempt to wreck the picture business, the exhibitors urge the General Assembly to ascertain for whom the Lord's Day Alliance speaks. There are many other minor requirements and conditions which the alliance seeks to impose which are regarded as restrictive and entirely unreasonable by the picture men.

Liberalism Wins

Voters of Beacon Give Approval of Sunday Shows

Sunday shows were approved this week by the voters of Beacon, N. Y., after a hot campaign, in which the motion picture interests did not actively engage until the eleventh hour. The figures were 1,634 to 1,058. The picture vote carried with it three candidates running for office on the Democratic ticket who were against the so-called reform issue. This is the first time the city has gone Democratic in thirty-two years.

Three years ago Sunday shows were carried by only three votes. This year the Jews turned against the reform candidates after the Rev. Arthur A. Dangermond preached on "Shall the Jews Desecrate Our Christian Sabbath?"

Technicolor Active

Breaks Ground for New Laboratory in Boston

C. A. (Doc) Willat of the Technicolor Company came to New York this week with the news that ground had been broken for a new laboratory on Brookline avenue, Boston, that will have a weekly capacity of a quarter million feet. The new plant will adjoin the present Technicolor building.

Willat states that Technicolor is more than pleased with the response to the first color feature, "Toll of the Sea," now being distributed by Metro. Before the first of May, "Doc" will probably start for the Coast to begin plans for the next feature.

George DeCarlton, former Boston manager for United Artists, is at present on a trip around the exchange centers in connection with the initial feature.

Buffalo and New York Bidding for M.P.T.O. of N.Y. Meeting

ALBANY, N. Y., March 21.

With Buffalo and New York City bidding for the next annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, members of the board of directors meeting in this city today were unable to reach a decision which place to select.

The date of the convention, however, was fixed for May 8, 9 and 10. After hours of discussion as to the advantages of both cities, the board of directors finally empowered the president, Charles E. O'Reilly, of New York, to meet with two committees, one from Buffalo and one from New York, within the next week, at which time President O'Reilly will select the place of the convention.

Two Special Committees

Jules Michaels, of Buffalo, and A. C. Hayman, of Niagara Falls, representing the Western city, and Charles Steiner and Samuel Moross, of New York, were appointed as the two special committees to meet with Mr. O'Reilly.

Present at to-day's meeting were Charles L. O'Reilly, president, of the M. P. T. O., of New York; Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, and Bernard Edelhertz, of New York, vice-presidents; William H. Linton, of Utica, treasurer; Samuel I. Berman, Brooklyn, secretary, and Julius Michaels, of Buffalo.

The board of directors included William Benton, Saratoga Springs; David Cohen, Binghamton; A. C. Hayman, Niagara Falls; Joseph Quittner, Middletown; Nathan Robbins, Utica; Charles Steiner and Samuel Speer, New York; Rudolph Sanders, Brooklyn, and Samuel Suckno, Albany.

Mr. Samuel Peyser, of New York, unable to be present, was represented by Samuel Moross, of New York.

Following a discussion of the convention date and place, the board of directors agreed to a concerted action on the part of the association in blocking the passage of the bill calling for a tax of 6 per cent of the gross receipts of motion picture theatres.

Much Routine Taken Up

Members of the board were present at the time the Walker bill, calling for the repeal of the censorship commission in New York State, was passed in the Senate Tuesday night, and said to-day that every effort would be made to further its passage in the Assembly when it comes up for vote.

Much routine business was taken up in the session, which lasted a matter of four hours, starting at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. The meeting was held at the Hotel Ten Eyck. Following the close of the session, members of the board left for their homes, with the exception of President O'Reilly, who will remain in the city for a day or so.

To Install Officers

Officers of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce will be installed at a dinner to be given by the organization at the Ritz-carlton, April 12.

Scott, of Universal, Tells of Industry's High Moral Tone

THE SCANDALS OF HOLLYWOOD" was the subject of an intensely interesting address which was delivered by A. B. Scott of Universal City, Cal., one of the pioneers of the Universal Film Company, before the Lions Club of Ottawa at the Chateau Laurier, March 13, the speaker being introduced by Capt. Frank Goodale, a member of the club and the manager of Loew's Ottawa Theatre.

"The moving picture industry is more maligned than any other industry on earth," declared Mr. Scott. The industry had suffered, he believed, through newspaper reports which had been broadcasted from California but which were very much colored. Mr. Scott pointed out that he had two daughters in pictures and if he had two more daughters they would be in pictures, too. One of his daughters was a star, namely, Mabel Julienne Scott.

"It is a clean-cut vocation," declared Mr. Scott, who referred to the finding of a special international board of investigation which showed that 85 per cent of the women in moving pictures were clean, home-loving women, and 65 per cent of the film actors were of the same type. "We have black sheep in our industry, just as in any other industry," he said.

Statistics had been obtained which showed that among all moving picture people during 19 years there had been only 108 divorce cases, five suicides, four murders and there were only 11 divorce cases pending. This record compared very favorably with the statistics for the City of Nashville, with 260,000 population, where pending divorce and other cases were more numerous. Mr. Scott mentioned 371,000 as being the number of people identified with the moving picture profession.

Mr. Scott, who had entered the moving picture business in 1908, told of the early struggles of the industry, particularly those of Carl Laemmle, the president of Universal Company, and how he had gone to California with a band of 30 people and only a small amount of capital, but with a vast amount of energy and business acumen he had guided the company to its present high financial standing. Today the company is capitalized at $178,000,000.

Mr. Scott gave an interesting insight into the government of Universal City. Every employe was a resident of this community. Each person first rented a bungalow and then bought it on a sliding scale of payments. If a householder left the city, it was taken back by the company and payment refunded, less interest on the investment. Every person was under contract for four years.

Famous Players-Lasky Challenge Constitutionality of Federal Act

THE constitutionality of the Federal Trade Act is challenged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and others named as respondents in the amended complaint recently issued by the Federal Trade Commission in answers which have just been filed.

Admitting the allegations of the commission that distributing companies had been formed and theatres purchased and other acts performed whereby the distribution of films controlled by the respondent was increased, the answer denies that such acts were performed for the purpose of monopolizing the industry, but alleges that they were merely the performance of a business policy necessitated by the great competition which existed in the moving picture field.

It is pointed out in the answers that Famous Players-Lasky never concealed its interest in the other organizations, but it is denied that any of its respondents ever entered into any program of acquiring or controlling motion picture theatres throughout the country or of compelling or coercing exhibitors to book and exhibit any particular motion picture film, or of inducing or compelling exhibitors to book any block of films.

It is admitted in the answer filed by the Stanley Booking Company of America and the Stanley Booking Corporation that Famous Players-Lasky is an important element in the moving picture industry, but it is denied that the corporation is a party to any conspiracy unduly to hinder competition or to control the industry. In fact, it is pointed out, the organization has not hindered competition and "it certainly does not control the industry." Its importance in the industry is due to the fact that it has produced better pictures than any other producing organization, it is claimed, and has sold them to exhibitors on fair terms.

In the answer filed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky and Adolph Zukor, it is charged that the complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Act, as charged. It is also alleged that the law itself is indefinite, uncertain and in violation of the Constitution, and the commission is asked to dismiss the complaint.

N. Y. Senate Votes Down Censorship

Albany, N. Y., March 21.
(Special to Moving Picture World)

By a vote of 27 to 22, characterized by some breaking away from party lines, the Walker bill, calling for the repeal of the present motion picture censorship law in New York State, passed the Senate shortly after midnight Tuesday.

Senators Dick and Whitley, Republicans, broke away from the Republican ranks and voted with the affirmative, while Senator Love, a Democrat, voted against the bill, which was introduced by his own party leader, James J. Walker, and which is generally regarded as a Democratic administration measure.

The fact that there has been some breaking away from party lines in the Senate may result in a similar procedure being enacted in the Assembly when the bill goes to a vote there. The Assembly this year is Republican by but six, but Speaker Machold thus far has shown himself in complete control and may be able to hold all Republicans in line when the bill goes to a vote, which would mean its defeat.

Last night the vote was marked with but little debate, Senator Lusk, minority leader, opposing the bill on the grounds that the recent hearing showed the necessity of continued motion picture censorship in New York State.

Bill Passes Ohio House

Measure Amending Penalties for Censor Law Violations Goes to Senate

The House of Representatives at Columbus, Ohio, has passed a bill by Representative Gordon, of Logan County, to eliminate the jail sentence for violators of the motion picture censorship law, but to increase the amount of fines to be imposed. The maximum fine under the bill would be $1,000, while under the present law it is only $100, with provision for a three-month jail sentence added. The bill would also make the distributor of the uncensored films equally guilty with the exhibitor. The bill is now ready to go to the Senate.

Representative Gordon is a minister, and the bill, which is said to have been prepared and backed by the Lord's Day Alliance, was passed without a dissenting vote.

One of the provisions provides that a defendant can be tried without a jury and has no rights of appeal from the trial court. It gives justices of the peace final jurisdiction in the trials.

Kerrin Resigns

Perkins Electric, Ltd., Toronto, has changed its personnel. J. A. Kerrin, manager for a number of years, has resigned to enter the electrical business for himself, and R. Weese succeeded him on March 1.

Nebraska Kills Censorship

THERE will be no motion picture censorship in Nebraska during the next two years, the State Senate, by a lop-sided vote Wednesday afternoon, March 14, sending to the graveyard two measures which were aimed to censor films.

The Senate, voting 21 to 12, first disposed of a censorship bill which proposed to create a board of three censors, each drawing a salary of $3,000 a year.

Then, by a vote of 24 to 8, the Senators killed a bill which proposed to license motion picture theatres, and also proided that no picture wherein any individual who had been convicted of a crime or who had figured in a notorious divorce suit could be shown in Nebraska.

The death of these two bills removes all possibility of movie censorship legislation at this session of the State Legislature, as there are no measures on the subject now pending in the lower branch of the Legislature.

The censorship bill had been made a special order of business and a large sized crowd was present Wednesday to hear the debate.

Senators who spoke in support of the censorship bill were, Osborne and Barr, while those who actively opposed it were Thielen, Behrens and Saunders.

Schulberg Here to Discuss Plans for Big Program for Preferred

B. P. SCHULBERG, president of Preferred Pictures and vice-president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, arrived in New York this week. The purpose of his trip here is to discuss with his partners, Al Lichtman and J. G. Bachmann, production plans for the coming year and to complete financial arrangements to cover the extensive program he contemplates.

Al Lichtman, who is now in Europe opening offices in the continental capitals for the distribution of Preferred Pictures, is expected back in this country the end of March to confer with Schulberg, who will remain here for at least three weeks before returning to Los Angeles.

Schulberg's visit is his first since the inauguration of the Al Lichtman Corporation as the distributing outlet for Preferred Pictures. Last year, when the company was founded, it was decided that Schulberg was to make his headquarters on the Coast to supervise production. Activities increased to such an extent during the ensuing months that his continuous presence there was imperative.

He has been giving his constant personal attention to the work of the two production units which have been steadily functioning at the Schulberg Studios since last July. One of these, under the direction of Gasnier, has completed during that period: "Rich Men's Wives," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "The Hero," "Poor Men's Wives" and "Mothers-in-Law."

Gasnier is now finishing Edgar Saltus's famous novel, "Daughters of the Rich," a release which will be included in Al Lichtman's first group of eight Preferred Pictures. Tom Forman, who heads the other unit, has made "Shadows," "Are You a Failure?" "The Girl Who Came Back" and "April Showers." He begins work this week on "The Broken Wing." Victor Schertzinger has also been signed to head a third unit for Schulberg.

Preferred Pictures and the Al Lichtman Corporation, which are now completing their first year's affiliation with each other, have become a real factor in the picture industry and Schulberg plans to give exhibitors next season an increased output of features that will surpass the records established by "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "The Hero" and "Poor Men's Wives"—current Lichtman attractions that are turning in big earnings to box offices everywhere.

Millhauser Joins Big "U"

Creator of Successful Pathe Serials to Make Universal Chapter Plays

Bertram Millhauser, creator of "Plunder," the record-breaking serial starring Pearl White, and for many years the builder of famous Pathé chapter plays, has signed with Universal to continue his successful serial making on the West Coast. He leaves for Universal City this week.

Millhauser has to his credit more box-office serials than any other writer in the field, having been instrumental, through his association with the George B. Seitz producing unit, in bringing Pearl White to her present position as an internationally known star.

In addition to "Plunder," Millhauser's work in creating box-office serials will be remembered in "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate," "The Lightning Raider," "The Black Secret" and other famous chapter plays, of which he was author and continuity writer. He directed two big serials last year for George B. Seitz, Inc.

In leaving for the West Coast Mr. Millhauser declared that he considered his new affiliation with Universal a wonderful opportunity to make bigger and better serial thrillers than have ever been offered to exhibitors before.

Fox Wins Suit

Supreme Court Decides Litigation About "Over the Hill"

The sole rights of "Over the Hills to the Poorhouse," a photoplay founded on poems written by the late Will Carleton, belong to the Fox Film Company, according to a decision of the United State Supreme Court, handed down by Associate Justice Holmes.

The decision of the court in this case settles one of the most disputed points of ownership in the moving picture industry, and will make possible the filming of many other poems and stories, procured from the executors of deceased authors, which were held up pending a decision in the Fox case.

The case was brought by the Fox Film Corporation against Frederick M. Knowles and others to restrain them from performing plays based upon the poems "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hill from the Poorhouse," the rights to which had been purchased by Fox Film from the widow of the executor and legatee of Will Carleton, the author. The copyrights had originally been assigned by Carleton to his publishers, Harper & Brother, but before the expiration of the copyright he had obtained a renewal.

The lower courts decided against the Fox Film Corporation, which then carried the case to the United States Supreme Court to determine whether the laws gave the executor of an author the rights of renewal of copyright. The question was one of great importance to the industry, since by reason of the uncertainty of the law with respect to the renewal of copyrights, producers who had procured similar dramatic compositions hesitated to make the investment necessary for production until assured that it would not be lost.

Associated with Mr. Bird in the Sales Division are Messrs. Jennings, Secor, Oswald, Anderson, Allen and Cox.

Like German Best

German films predominate in the Polish market, according to a report just received by the Department of Commerce from the American Consulate General, Warsaw. In a recent statistical analysis of the moving picture industry in Poland, out of approximately 1,000 films shown in the 700 moving picture theatres in the country 775 were of German make, while only 10 were of Polish manufacture.

The remaining 115 films were credited to the United States, France, Sweden and Italy.

Arbitration Bodies Will Soon Operate Under Rules Adopted

ARBITRATION committees that are now being formed in various parts of the country will soon be functioning under the rules that have been adopted for their use under the working plan of the Uniform Contract.

These arbitration rules were approved by the representatives of prominent exhibitors and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at a meeting recenty held at the headquarters of the M. P. P. D. of A. The exhibitors present were: H. M. Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; William A. Steffes, of Minneapolis; Claude Cady, of Michigan; William A. Brandt, Leo Brecher, Bernard Edelhertz and Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York.

THE BOARD OF ARBITRATION

I

"The board of arbitration shall consist of six persons, three of whom shall be managers of local offices of the distributors, called distributors' representatives, and three of whom shall be proprietors or managers of theatres in the zone where the Film Board is located, called exhibitors' representatives; provided, however, that in no event shall such exhibitors' representatives be managers of theatres owned or controlled by producers or distributors.

"Each of the three distributors' representatives shall be selected by the members of the Film Board of Trade to serve for one year or until his successor is appointed. The three exhibitors' representatives shall be selected and appointed by the local exhibitors' association. In the event there is no local exhibitors' association or if such association fails to appoint, then the President of the Film Board of Trade shall request the President of the Chamber of Commerce, or if there is none or if he fails to appoint, then the mayor of the city in which the Film Board of Trade is located, to select and appoint the three exhibitors' representatives. Failing such selection and appointment the designation of exhibitors' representatives shall be by the President of the Film Board of Trade. Each of the exhibitors' representatives shall serve for one year or until his successor is appointed; provided, however, that any exhibitors' representatives designated otherwise than by the local exhibitors' association shall be replaced by exhibitors' representatives designated by such exhibitors' association as soon as such designation is made.

"No member of the Board of Arbitration shall sit in any case or controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect.

"In case of a refusal or disqualification by reason of interest or sickness or other reason on the part of a Distributors' representative to serve on the Board of Arbitration, the remaining Distributors' representatives or representative may appoint a substitute for such member; similarly if a vacancy exists in respect of an Exhibitor's representatives or representative, the remaining representatives or representative may appoint a substitute.

"In case of a tie vote the Board of Arbitration shall appoint a seventh arbitrator, and if they are unable to agree then the Chairman of the Board of Arbitration shall request the President of the Chamber of Commerce, or if there is none or if he fails to appoint, then the mayor, or the city in which the Film Board of Trade is located to appoint a seventh arbitrator who shall be neither a distributor nor exhibitor nor interested in the motion picture business.

II

"The Board of Arbitration shall have general power after a thorough and impartial hearing of any dispute or controversy, to determine such dispute or controversy, to make findings thereon, to direct what shall be done by either or both parties with respect to the matter in dispute, and in the event of the failure of the Exhibitor to comply with the award, to fix the maximum amount that each Distributor may demand pursuant to Article Nineteen of the Uniform Exhibition Contract. It shall adopt its own rules of procedure and evidence. These rules shall provide for reasonable notice to the parties of the time and place of the hearing and of the nature of the dispute, and afford the parties an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and to submit evidence. The findings, determination and direction of the Board of Arbitration upon such controversy shall be conclusive and binding upon the parties thereto.

Metro Corporation Making Rapid Progress Abroad

METRO'S triumphs in the foreign market are keeping pace with the success of the company's attractions in the domestic field. Abroad, the high merit of Metro pictures is as readily recognized as in the United States, where, since the sweep of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"—followed by such other big photoplays as "Turn to the Right," "Peacock Alley," "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Trifling Women," "Peg O' My Heart," "Broadway Rose," "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Hearts Aflame," "The Famous Mrs. Fair" and the like—the company's productions have achieved pronounced success.

The progression of popularity in other countries has simultaneously, under the able management of Arthur Loew, moved abreast of that in America, and has steadily been gathering momentum.

The advance is considerable, for it was no more than a year ago that Marcus Loew arranged with Sir William Jury, in London, for the disposition, of Metro products in Great Britain. In addition to this the Metro president took a lease upon the Palace Theatre, in London, and found his judgment vindicated first by a run of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for twenty-five big money-making weeks, and ever since thereafter by more-than-capacity audiences drawn to the Palace by the opportunity of first-run views of subsequent big Metro specials.

With Great Britain invaded, Arthur Loew carried on the Metro foreign incursions by closing negotiations for distribution of the company's pictures in Europe, in the Argentine, in Porto Rico, San Domingo, Brazil and Japan, and most recently in Australia and New Zealand.

This latest, the Australian and New Zealand coup, came this week with Arthur Loew's closing of a contract for that territory with E. E. Schauer, foreign manager of Famous Players, whose company will act as distributor.

P. O. Co-operation Promised

A promise of greater co-operation by the Post Office Department in the handling of films is contained in a letter received by the Washington (D. C.) Film Board of Trade from Postmaster Merritt O. Chance, of Washington. Mr. Chance recently took up with the department a suggestion of the exchange managers here, on behalf of managers all over the country, that undelivered films be immediately returned to the exchanges, or that the postmasters at delivery points notify exchanges by collect telegraph where films are refused by exhibitors.

Third Assistant Postmaster General Irving Glover states that the suggestions of the Film Board of Trade will be given careful consideration with a view to co-operating with them to the fullest extent. He suggested that, pending the outcome of the investigation which the department will make of the matter, labels in form as follows be used by the exchanges:

Mr. Jeffrey will make a thorough investigation of the Canadian distributing situation and will report back to Mr. Lichtman on the latter's return from his European trip.

Selznick Companies Announce Plans for Larger Distribution

W. C. J. DOOLITTLE, active member of the reorganization committee of five which is in control of the destinies and policies of the associated Selznick motion picture corporations, this week issued the following important statement, which is of paramount interest in view of various conflicting rumors in circulation regarding the future of these concerns:

"The committee has decided that, because of the excellent manner in which the affairs of the companies are shaping themselves, there is no move that could seriously be considered but the continuance in very active business of the various Selznick corporations, and the development—along greatly enlarged lines—of what we are convinced is one of the finest selling machines in the industry: the Select Pictures Corporation.

"Select in the past has confined itself to the distribution of Selznick Pictures. We have decided to take on for distribution all meritorious independent product available. I may say in this connection that we have several deals pending, and that there are three in particular—each for a series of from four to eight specials yearly—which will probably be closed within the course of a week or ten days.

"The entire Select exchange system remains intact. The personnel remained loyal and undisturbed throughout the recent crisis coming year.

"Lewis J. Selznick will not be actively interested in the administration of the reorganized company. General Manager John principally to the ability, the confidence, the loyalty of our sales staff, I expect extremely big things from Select during the which has been passed so successfully. Due S. Woody, whom I believe to be one of the most capable and brilliant men in the industry to-day, continues in complete charge of distribution.

"Mr. Woody will be aided and abetted by a reorganized home office staff. I am holding daily conferences with Mr. Woody and the department heads. This group of men, which I term our 'Cabinet,' includes J. E. McDermott, treasurer; E. J. Doolittle, export manager; David R. Blyth, assistant general manager; C. C. Ryan, purchasing agent; M. J. Walsh, manager of the film department, and L. F. Guimond, director of advertising and publicity.

"There can be no doubt whatever but that the business today needs a well-organized channel of distribution for those many independent producers whom certain concerns are attempting to force to the wall. The new and greater Select, with its twenty-five live-wire exchanges, will fill that need.

"The decks are cleared for action. Watch Select forge ahead!"

To Record Events

Legislation providing that the future history of the United States shall be recorded in moving picture films will probably be introduced in the next session of Congress by Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, who has become very interested in this method of recording current events. Recent announcement that a moving picture of the Kaiser in exile had been offered to the Government, but could not be accepted because of lack of Congressional provision, has aroused considerable interest in this method of recording events, which was adopted to a great extent by the Army and Navy during the World War.

A more or less unofficial effort is being made by the War Department to gather historic films, but there is no adequate provision for their safe storage even when obtained. This, again, brings up the question of an archives building, which has been urged during the past two or three years, since it was discovered that the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and other rare and valuable State papers were stored in iron safes, frequently in inflammable buildings.

Shipman Has Exclusive Rights to the Tut-Ankh-Amen Pictures

ERNEST SHIPMAN announced, this week, that he has closed a deal whereby he controls the exclusive rights throughout the United States and Canada, for the pictorial record of the discovery and exploration of the tomb of King Tut-Ankh-Amen. The world-wide interest created of recent months by this important archaeological revelation suggests that Shipman has landed the sensational "scoop" of the year, in film circles.

The negative is now on the high seas, bound for New York—but advance notices from Europe declare the pictures to be remarkable, not only for their historical and educational value, but for their wealth of beauty and pageantry as well. The principal characters brought to view in the film are Lord Carnarvon, Lady Herbert, the Queen of Belgium and Howard Carter, the latter being the American archaeologist who is accredited with having carried on the work of exploration when all previous efforts seem to have failed.

Discussing his prize, Shipman says: "You can add about twenty millions to the normal national moving picture patronage, and you will have, I believe, a conservative estimate of the attendance that these pictures will induce. From scientists and students of research to curiosity seekers—all will undoubtedly flock to see this 'picture of the hour.' Anticipating this vast volume of business, and to cope with the demand, we are prepared to order at once, upon the arrival of the negative, no less than 300 prints."

M. P. T. O. of Connecticut Fight for Repeal of State Tax on Admissions

Hartford, Conn.

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut are actively engaged in an endeavor to obtain the repeal of the state tax admission law, passed during the session of the last legislature and in force for the past two years.

At a hearing of the legislative committee on finances in the Capitol in Hartford, March 14, representative theatre owners voiced the hardships caused them by the law and also presented many reasons why it should be repealed.

The state tax on admissions was intended to be a tax that patrons would pay. However, the theatres have paid this tax. The amount is one-half of that prescribed by the Federal admission tax law. Connecticut is the second largest state in point of population in the New England section.

Judge Alexander W. Creedon, counsel for the theatre owners of the state, during the hearing, called to the attention of Tax Commissioner Blodgett the fact that several insurance companies having headquarters in Hartford escaped payment of a tax because their investments were in securities exempt from taxation. The commissioner, in his reply, stated that he had prepared a bill which would meet the point raised by Judge Creedon.

Joseph M. Walsh of the Rialto Theatre, Hartford, said it was impossible to collect the tax from the people. He acknowledged his responsibility to the state. He said that in times of stress the theatre men have been among those who did their part to assist the national government and the state government.

J. T. Rourke of Bridgeport said that since the enactment of the tax law he had been obliged to close his theatre. He asserted that the theatre owners had been imposed upon. C. M. Masfield of New Hartford said that the moving picture is the poor man's entertainment.

G. N. Murphy of Thomaston said he knew nothing about the law until it had been passed. He said he had three theatres and he believed he was doing as much good by his theatres as the churches and schools were doing. He said that last year his income was $1 less than his expenses. He declared that he paid $1,300 in taxes, which amount was 60 per cent of his profits.

E. F. Hough of Ansonia said he was interested in three or four theatres in the state and he hoped the committee would give relief to the theatre owners. Charles O. Fox of Hartford also hoped the committee would give relief to the theatre owners.

George H. Vennart, representing the state chamber of commerce, said the tax on theatre admissions was just. He said that Carlisle K. Kitchin had stated that the moving picture industry had come back and that the industry never had shown such activity. Mr. Vennart said the people in Connecticut were wiling to pay the tax.

Tax Commissioner Bodgett acknowledged the co-operation of the theatre owners, which he said he had received in the administration of the tax law. The only point of difference between him and the theatre people, he said, was on the matter of the repeal of the law. He declared there were no bills before the legislature now in session to provide for new sources of taxation. He declared that the theatre tax was levied to make up for the loss of revenue from the liquor tax.

In September, 1921, the receipts of the motion picture theatres totaled $44,882.27, and in September, 1922, the sum was $46,098.29. Mr. Blodgett said the state paid the overhead charges in collection of the tax and that these charges were only one per cent of the amount received. If the tax is not levied, he said, the counties must tax the towns and cities to raise the money that is required.

Former Representative Winfield S. Rogers of Bantam, who is in the moving picture business, opposed the bill.

County Commissioner Emily Brown (who, said the commissioner in introducing her, managed two other theatres in New Haven County) addressed the committee in opposition to the bill.

County Commissioner Cortiss of Windham said the theatre tax was not burdensome. George E. Fellows of New London County said the admission tax had netted the county $18,000. He opposed the bill.

County Commissioner John H. Lancaster of Litchfield County opposed the bill. He said the tax in his county amounted to approximately one-half of the amount of the county's budget. His remarks were corroborated by his colleague, Commissioner Mitchell.

Commissioner Bacon of Middlesex County favored continuance of the tax.

W. A. True, managing director of the Strand Theatre in Hartford, is president of the theatre owners' association.

Departments Growing

Eastman School of Music Enlarging Its Activities

Harold Gleason of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., in discussing the plans of the department, said: "All our departments are at work, and our 'all' is considerably greater than it was when we started. We have added, for instance, to our organ activities the training of organists for accompanying motion pictures. We offer training in the playing of all orchestral instruments and we have a school orchestra in regular rehearsal. We are to add the choral and dramatic training of vocal students to fit them for singing of opera in English; we are to have a school of ballet and we are to lay the foundations for an opera chorus.

"I believe that the good music heard every week at the Eastman Theatre is setting standards in its own unobtrusive fashion. I believe that people are more and more looking at education in music as preparation to enjoy as well as to perform."

Sail for Europe

M. P. Harwood, of the First National foreign department, and S. A. G. Swenson, of the sales department, sail for London, Tuesday, March 20, on the Aquatania. Mr. Harwood will spend some weeks at the London office of First National, going from there to France, Norway and Sweden. He expects to return in about three months. Mr. Swenson will locate permanently in Sweden as assistant to Sofus Berg, First National general manager in Scandinavia.

Brady Urges Action

Advises Exhibitors to Get in Touch with Political Representatives

That the motion picture theatre owners of New York State will have to bestir themselves strenuously in an effort to have censorship abolished in this state was emphasized in a communication recently sent to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners by Peter J. Brady, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council.

Mr. Brady urged the exhibitors to leave nothing undone in bringing pressure to bear on their political representatives to vote for the repeal of the censorship law.

Marguerite Courtot to Wed

An interesting outcome of the filming of "Down to the Sea in Ships," the Hodkinson super-special which is now running in New York and other cities throughout the country, is the announcement of the forthcoming marriage of the two stars, Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee. This romance had its beginning in a childhood friendship which reached its happy conclusion in the filming of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

Goldwyn Signs Kirkwood

James Kirkwood is returning to motion pictures after another big success on the speaking stage in Channing Pollock's "The Fool," in which he has been appearing on Broadway since last October. He has just signed a long term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to appear in featured roles in big productions.

To Be Represented

Government Departments to Co-operate with M. P. O. A. Association

The Departments of Labor, Commerce, Agriculture and Interior will have official representation at the Motion Picture Palace of Progress to be held under the direction of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America during their annual National Convention at the Coliseum, in Chicago, from May 19 to 26, inclusive. The co-operation and support of Secretaries of Labor Davis, of Agriculture Wallace, of Interior Dr. Work, and of Commerce Hoover have been assured.

Motion pictures illustrative of the great work being done by these departments of our government will be shown during the exposition. This will afford theatre owners from all parts of the country an opportunity to obtain first hand information to what extent motion pictures are used in these respective departments of our government.

Every modern mechanical device bearing on moiton pictures within recent years will be shown. What the camera has done for civilization and how it is going to further benefit and enlighten the peoples of the world will be features.

Leases Tilford Studios

The Cosmopolitan Corporation has leased the Tilford Studio, on West Forty-fourth Street, New York City, for the next six months to replace one of the burned stages in their own plant.

"Under the Red Robe" will be the first picture started at the downtown studio.

State Refuses to Be Mulcted for More Censorship Expenses

WHATEVER may be the fate of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, it is certain that there will be no more deputy commissioners at $4,000 a year. The Legislature of New York State has passed the annual budget bill for next year. With one or two slight exceptions, the requests of the Motion Picture Commission for additional money were absolutely ignored by those who made up the budget.

Some idea of the expenses attached to the commission is revealed by the budget as passed. The three commissioners receive $7,500 each a year. There are two deputy commissioners at $4,000 a year, and another one receiving $3,500, while another, who was given the title of "financial deputy and assistant secretary," some time ago, in order to create a position, receives $3,500.

There are two so-called secretaries to the commissioner, each receiving $2,500 a year, which makes a tidy little item of $5,000 for writing the few letters the commissioners are called upon to dictate.

In fact, the commission seems to fairly bubble over with secretaries, for there is another one receiving $1,800 a year, and along with this are two stenographers, each of whom gets $1,500 a year, while a third receives the sum of $1,320.

And then there are reviewers, without any explanation as to exactly what their duties may be, in view of the fact that the commissioners themselves or the deputies are supposed to review pictures. Anyhow, there are two so-called reviewers, each receiving $2,500, while two more are slated at $1,800 and four at $1,600.

Of course there must be a laborer, and he receives $1,200.

When it comes to real expenses, the item of maintenance and operation figures up to more than a handsome little sum. For instance, the traveling expenses show an item of $17,500, while printing and advertising is another item of $1,750, while equipment, supplies and materials add $12,000. The item for communication is a matter of $1,625, while rent amounts to $7,500 and the projection of films to a like amount.

Some months ago, when the commission, perhaps "feeling its oats" and its importance, making out its requests for an annual appropriation, explained some of the items.

Here are a few of the explanations: "We have asked for another deputy at a salary of $4,000 to have charge of the inspection of theatres and prosecutions for violations of the law. This is an important and essential part of the work, and there is no one who can do this work at the present time."

Did the budget committee allow this $4,000? They did not.

And here's another explanation, relative to a secretary to one of the commissioners: "Mrs. Hosmer needs a much more competent person and we have asked that the salary be increased to $2,500. It is necessary."

A Home for Secretaries

The appropriation bill, however, shows a decided difference of opinion as to the "necessity."

And then there is another item, looking for another assistant secretary. In fact, the commission, if everything had been granted, would have resembled a home for secretaries. Apparently everyone had a secretary, or at least wanted one, except the laborer. As to the "assistant secretary," the request for the money was accompanied by this notation:

"We are endeavoring to secure an assistant secretary from the Civil Service list."

When it comes to reviewers, the budget committee has seen fit to allow for eight, and as a result there will probably be more reviewers named within the next few weeks. It is proposed to locate one of these in Buffalo, at $2,500, and another in New York, drawing the same salary, with two receiving $1,800, one up-state and one in the city of New York, while the other four will presumably wander around the state at random.

So much for the folly of censorship.

To Select Date for State Meet

The executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York, of which Jules Michaels, of Buffalo, is chairman, is meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck Wednesday, March 21, for the purpose of deciding the place and date of this year's convention. Buffalo is reported as being favored.

At the meeting several matters relative to legislation are also receiving consideration. A resolution is to be adopted to support the bill introduced by Senator James J. Walker, calling for the repeal of the State motion picture censorship law.

The committee also went on record as being opposed to the bill introduced by Assemblyman Charles P. Miller, to impose a tax of six per cent. on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres in this State. At the present time the bill is in committee, and every effort will be made to prevent its being reported out.

To Hold Annual Meeting

The first annual meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., will be held at the organization's headquarters, 522 Fifth avenue, New York, Monday, March 26.

The organization was formed March 5, 1922, and the by-laws provide for the holding of the annual meetings on the third Monday of each March.

Reverses Decision

The Massachusetts Supreme Court has just handed down a decision in the case of John D. Mulloney vs. Alfred S. Black, reversing a decision by Judge McLaughlin in the Superior Court on April 29, 1922, in which he found for the plaintiff in the sum of $788.73. The new finding comes as a result of an appeal taken by Stoneman & Hill, counsel for the defendant.

Fox Building Studio

W. R. Sheehan, general manager and vice-president of Fox Film Corporation, has announced from Hollywood that the company will build a new studio costing more than $2,000,000. It is said it will be the largest studio in the world and will be equipped with all the most modern appurtenances.

There will be a fully equipped laboratory, dressing rooms en suite, reference library, beauty parlors, millinery department, tennis court and gymnasium.

The studio will be built in the style of Spanish architecture. The Fox company plans to surround it with 200 acres. John C. Eisele, treasurer of the Fox corporation, is collaborating with Mr. Sheehan in supervising the plans.

Talks on Bad Prints

Budge Says Exhibitors Themselves Can Do a Lot to Remedy Situation

Lenox Avenue, Springfield Gardens,
New York, March 10, 1923.

Mr. Robert E. Welsh,
Moving Picture World,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

Some of the trade papers are harping on the film question, such as distruction of film, bad prints and such like. It seems to me that the exhibitors themselves can clear up all this trouble if they wished to.

They have their organization, the M. P. T. O. A., but first the exhibitor must clean his own house. Will he put a real projectionist in his projection room? Will he keep his machines in first class condition at all times? Will he stand for an examination of his machines once a month by a mechanic who is an expert in this line? Will he agree to book his shows with some insight as regarding the speed the film is to be run?

I doubt very much whether he will agree to these rules in his own organization. Everytime a break happens some film is destroyed. Let him make a study of this question. How many exhibitors know the first thing about the projection room and its troubles? If the exhibitor cares nothing about the film he is using why should the exchange care?

The exchange has very little to do with bad film outside of the fact that they use any old kind of a spool to wind the film on. Some loss of film occurs through bad spools. Of course, bad prints can only be laid at the door of the exchange.

Film comes to me in all kinds of conditions. First, it arrives only in time to put into the machines. It is nothing to have four or five frame-ups in a reel. Patches come open because some one is too tired to scrape off the emulsion. Nine or ten minutes to the reel and soon you have bad sprocket holes.

It is my ambition to have perfect performances, but the first one I am never sure of. The letter of Mr. A. L. Middleton in your edition of March 10 only quotes conditions. Let some big man come along with a remedy.

Yours truly,
W. C. BUDGE.

Will Give 'Em 10 Days

Exchanges doing business in the State of Virginia are to be given ten days in which to make eliminations and to make films criticized meet the requirements of the Virginia Board of Censors before announcement of such requirements is bulletined to the exhibitors of Virginia.

Executive Secretary Maitland LaBelle, of the Washington Film Board of Trade recently advised the Censor Board of the hardship being worked upon Washington exchanges through the bulletins of rejections, and urged that such announcements be withheld until films are finally rejected by the Board.

S. B. McCormick Dined

Is Made Honor Guest at Luncheon by First National

Because S. Barret McCormick, who has been doing special work in the exploitation department of Associated First National Pictures, was about to leave for Oakland, Calif., where he is to take charge of the new William Fox theatre, he was made the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor last Saturday afternoon.

C. L. Yearsley, head of the department of advertising and publicity, presided in his usual happy vein, and he and most of the trade newspaper men and his office associates said things about "Mac" which would have swelled the head of a less modest man. At that they did not have to draw upon their imaginations for material, for McCormick was not only one of the pioneers in better management, but he is still in the forefront, and the truth about his adventures in management reads like interesting fiction.

Ned Holmes, of the exploitation staff, made the hit of the show when he implored Mac not to let them give him a gold watch. Ned was given a watch the other day, at an anniversary dinner.

To Release Sixty Pictures

Sixty pictures next season is said to be the goal toward which First National is working.

This information came from a First National executive who stated that contracts already negotiated assured that number of feature pictures. It is possible that there will be more.

Following First National's annual meeting in April, it is expected that an announcement giving next seasons's plan in detail will be issued.

Carl Laemmle Sees Big Summer Business with All Exhibitors

THE picture business had a hard summer last year, but it's going to have a soft summer this year, says Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. All indications point to an unprecedented summer success for the country's theatre owners, and box office results far in excess of those experienced last summer, he asserts.

The Universal chief's predictions are based upon actual figures supplied to him by the Universal sales force and by a corps of investigators who have spent the last few months making an intensive survey of the industry so that Universal might be prepared to meet the demands of the photoplay public six months or a year hence.

One of the most striking angles of Mr. Laemmle's forecast is his belief that there will be very few houses closed during the coming summer, a mere fraction of a per cent, compared to the number closed or partially darkened last year. Considering the average number of strictly summer houses which are opened annually with the coming of good weather, this year will see far more houses in operation during the summer than there have been during the past winter, is Mr. Laemmle's hopeful augury.

One of the surest indications of bright summer prospects, as gathered by Universal, is the unusual booking of pictures and programs for the summer months. This has reached a volume never before approached in the history of Universal, including all classes of theatres, among which are many owners who were cancelling contracts this time last year.

Especially is this advance booking indicative in the case of small theatres—the ones which usually feel the pinch of poor business first and hardest. Universal's records show that the bookings on serials for this type of house have jumped more than 40 per cent in the last few weeks. This is taken to mean that the small exhibitor is definitely assured that he will have a bright summer and is providing serial entertainment for his summer patrons. He is contracting for pictures of from three months run in case of short serials, to four and one-half months in the case of longer ones. In other words, he is set until late in August or until the beginning of the 1923-1924 season.

"There are many reasons why I am confident it is going to be a soft summer for exhibitors, and therefore for the picture business as a whole," explains the Universal chief in a discussion on summer prospects, communicated to the various Universal centers. "Conditions at this time are so much brighter than they were a year ago, it is highly probable that this summer will approximate the record business of 1919.

"The surest sign of better business is advanced booking, and according to the reports which are being sent to me from New York, the advance booking on Universal pictures, from Jewels right through to one-reel comedies, has never before been touched. An exhibitor is not going to book his house through the summer unless he has a pretty good hunch things are going to break right for him. In other words, he must be optimistic.

"It is of particular note that there has been a large increase in the number of complete program bookings. This means that the exhibitor recognizes the value of a well-balanced program assured in advance.

"However, the full program booking idea is of special summer significance, as was definitely and successfully proved last summer by Universal and our exhibitor patrons. Believing that many houses which might have to close up because of poor business might be saved by a reduction of the overhead necessary to a continual selection and arranging of programs, I took steps to help out during the depression period.

"By special arrangements, entire programs were put at the disposal of exhibitors under extremely favorable conditions, and other facilities were extended to the exhibitor to aid him in keeping the wolf from the door. This experiment proved to be highly successful. In hundreds of cases it turned losses into gains, and in many more cases it enabled the exhibitor to hold his own and keep his house lighted and his patronage intact.

"Judging from the increased number of full program bookings being lined up by exhibitors for the coming summer, this lesson has taken deep root. The clan of die-hards who fought to the last dtch to keep open last season has been augmented by large reinforcements. Better prospects, of course, have considerable to do with this, but much also can be attributed to the game and winning fight put up by so many theatre owners last season.

"In Universal, we have decided that there is no such thing as a summer slump in pictures. Our summer programs are just as strong and stronger than our releases at any other period of the year. We believe that the public will be just as interested in seeing a good picture in June or July as it is in December or January."

F. I. L. M. Club Party

Enjoyable Event Was Held on St. Patrick's Day

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York gave its St. Patrick's Day Party at the Automobile Club, Saturday, March 17. More than two hundred people were present. Dantzig's Society Orchestra rendered the music.

One of the big surprise hits which Chairman of the Entertainment Committee Bill Raynor gave was Bobby Clark's presentation of Dorothy Palmer's Kiddie Revue of 1923, comprising the following: Mildred Clark, Mildred Woodruff, Petit Ruth, Irma Wurster, Vivian Dobbins, Ruth Gogger and Ruth Mussler.

The committee was in charge of W. E. Raynor and he was ably assisted by Tom Murray, A. M. Weinberger, George Dillon and William Marsh.

A delightful buffet luncheon was served by Billy Flynn, steward of the Automobile Club.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

This Exhibitor Made Pastor His Firm Friend and Patron

J. A. McGill, Port Orchard, Wash., exhibitor, is making every man, woman and child in town his friend. He makes of himself a live-wire citizen of the community and a public benefactor.

As the Seattle news letter has been coming into the World office each week for preparation for Exhibitors' News and Views, we've been noticing more and more each time that McGill's name is mentioned that he is doing a great work. This week brings additional evidence of that fact, and we hope that every exhibitor reader of this department will peruse every word of what follows.

Exhibitor McGill recently showed "Grandma's Boy" at his Port Orchard theatre. Evangelistic services were being conducted at the Christian Church. Both the minister and the evangelist wanted to see "Grandma's Boy." They called on Mr. McGill to propose that he give a matinee so they could attend. McGill couldn't see a matinee for two, but he had a better proposition.

"Suppose after services are over tonight," he suggested, "you come to the show. Bring the congregation with you, and I'll run a special matinee for you then."

They packed the house and their laughter shook the rafters.

Now here's the value of what McGill did. When the minister first came to Port Orchard about nine months ago, he was bitterly opposed to motion pictures. He even preached sermons against them. McGill forthwith sent him a family pass for the season, with a sincere letter asking him in all fairness to attend a show and see for himself what he was passing judgment on before he condemned. The minister visited McGill's theatre, found nothing to condemn and became an ardent fan. Now he never misses a show and he tells McGill that he frequently draws a theme for his sermon from something he's seen on the silver screen.

Now, McGill may have had every reason in the world for bursting into print with a strongly worded come-back at the minister's criticism of the screen. But he didn't do it. Instead, he manifested that same tolerance and spirit of fair play that this industry expects of others. McGill did not tell the minister he lied; he courteously invited him to convince himself by visiting the theatre, and made a friend of him. Moral: There is time enough for fireworks AFTER argument and persuasion fail. We're not saying that fireworks very often AREN'T necessary.

But this isn't the end of the story about Brother McGill. There was another item about him in the news letter this week, and it, too, is well worth passing on to all exhibitors. Coupled with what appears above, we think it gives a pretty clear idea not only of McGill's enterprise but also of his character.

Recently, the Port Orchard school children were very anxious to purchase a phonograph for their school, but there were not sufficient funds in the treasury. At the same time McGill was about to show the first episode of Universal's serial, "Robinson Crusoe," and he made the children this proposition:

"If you youngsters," he said, "will get out and sell tickets for my show, I'll give you half of the gross receipts to buy your phonograph and you can be the hosts at the theatre, to boot."

The youngsters got behind him 100 per cent. Many of them dressed in costumes impersonating the characters in the play. They sold out the house for the entire showing. With their share of the proceeds, they not only obtained their phonograph, but had money left to fit up a lunchroom for the school. Incidently, they're some of the most pleased kids you ever saw, and rooting consistently for McGill.

Next month McGill plans a similar stunt for the Girls' Canning Club, and the odds are all in favor of it's being a success.

And Here's an Exhibitor Who Invited Picture Sermonettes

That most any motion picture may be made the basis of a sermon of the kind that augurs for good is being proved twice each Sunday and several nights during the week by the Rev. N. H. R. Moor, rector of Grace Episcopal Church at Sandusky, Ohio.

That the average picture theatregoer relishes sermons with his picture is further being proved by the rush for seats that were vacant to a more or less extent until the clergyman announced his decision to work for higher screen standards by working with the exhibitor instead of against him, preaching a sermon with the picture projected as the theme.

Some weeks ago the minister happened to drift into a conversation concerning pictures and picture theatres with William F. Seitz, a Sandusky exhibitor who is and long has been a member of his vestry. Seitz broached the subject of "better pictures," saying among other things that he wished the clergy would "work with him" instead of against him, in the interest of betterment.

"Do you think that the church can do anything to cultivate in the minds of the people a desire for only the best in pictures?" the Rev. Moor asked.

Seitz replied in substance that he was sure it could.

"However," he said, "I want you to know that the public right now is quite exacting. You've got to present good pictures or you don't get the business."

The Rev. Moor proposed a sermonette based on the feature picture at the conclusion of the screening. Seitz accepted the idea. The newspapers were given advertising matter accordingly and the rector's effort was under way. Sunday night came—for it was Sunday night at the conclusion of the first presentation, that the Rev. Moor was to deliver his first sermonette. The theatre was packed to the door. The Rev. Moor spoke. When he concluded there was a round of hearty applause.

So well was his picture sermonette received that he asked other exhibitors of the city if he might not do in their theatres what he was doing in Seitz's theatre. The result has been that he has been kept pretty busy preaching.

The Rev. Moor believes that if some clergyman in each locality would work with exhibitors of the locality, the bad that there may be in pictures and the picture theatres could and would speedily be eliminated.

"I have found that you can do a lot more by working with a fellow than you can by bucking him," he explains. "By working with exhibitors of Sandusky I have made it possible for the exhibitors to challenge criticism, whereas had I pulled the other way, a division of moral sentiment essentially bad for any community no doubt would have resulted."

In preaching from the stage of a picture theatre the Rev. Moor uses language that the public readily understands. Exhibitors of a number of Michigan and Ohio cities and towns have sought the services of the Rev. Moor in their locality. "Get your own ministers" has been the response in every instance.

To the Rescue

The heroine, wild-eyed, was fleeing, a revolver tightly gripped in her little fist; the villain pursued; the hero, all unconscious of the sad turn of affairs, was sleeping on the mossy bank of a stream, gentle breezes flicking his curly locks.

It was a gripping moment in the feature photoplay being shown at Spooner's Theatre, 163rd street and Southern boulevard, New York City, and the audience was pale and breathless.

The heroine turned despairingly and pointed her revolver at the villain.

At the psychological moment "Bang!" went a toy pistol in the pocket of Joseph Cohen, 13 years old, a spectator. The audience rose as one man, the spell of the picture still on them, and there was something like hysteria.

A cop took little Joseph away. He said it was accidental.

Help brother exhibitors dust off the S. R. O. sign by sending tips on pictures to "Straight from the Shoulder Van." Other exhibitor's tips aid you; why not reciprocate? See page 542.

Rhoades of Indiana the Man Who "Didn't Know Anything"

"They said I didn't know anything about the show business, but I'm still here," laughingly remarked Ezra Rhoades, of South Bend, Ind., former lumberman, who started as an exhibitor when the business was in its infancy.

Mr. Rhoades for several years held a monopoly on the "movies" in South Bend, Elkhart, Michigan City and Goshen. At one time he controlled every photoplay house in the four cities except two, and also had large interests in theatres at Mishawaka. Now, however, with the expansion of South Bend, Mr. Rhoades has been obliged to yield some of his field to his competitors.

Nothing daunted, however, he has gone right ahead with his picture theatre business. As his leases drew near an end on some of his smaller theatres, he startled South Bend by taking a lease on the Blackstone Theatre at a price that is staggering. This theatre, erected two years ago at a cost of $750,000, provided a problem for the company that promoted it, and when Mr. Rhoades came forward with a proposition to lease the theatre at an annual rental of $126,000 a year for five years and $132,000 a year for the following five years the offer was quickly accepted.

Despite this enormous rental, Mr. Rhoades has not only lived up to the contract in the matter of payments, but he has laid his plans in such a manner as to cause the stockholders in the Blackstone corporation to believe that the showman is quietly buying up stock to the end that eventually he will be the controlling factor in the organization. This is said not to be very much to the liking of the big stockholders in the company, and they have tried to offset Rhoades' activity with a published appeal to the "little fry" to hold on to their stock.

This action has been followed by the formation of the Rhoades Corporation with a capital stock of $450,000, of which $30,000 is preferred. Its directors are Ezra Rhoades, his wife, Maude Rhoades, and his advertising manager, Earl Reeder. The organization of the corporation is believed to be for the purpose of getting control of the Blackstone Theatre Corporation.

Within another month, the Auditorium, South Bend's largest picture theatre excepting the Blackstone, is to be torn down to make way for a six-story department store, and Rhoades, it is reported, is planning to take up the contracts for pictures which that house has held for several years. By showing these pictures on the screen at the Blackstone he hopes to add to his patronage the present customers of the Auditorium.

Mr. Rhoades has three South Bend theatres, the Blackstone, the LaSalle and the Castle, operating on different lines. The highest class pictures are shown at the LaSalle, popular pictures at the Blackstone and the pictures that have been shown at these houses are run at the Castle at a lower price several days after the first local releases.

When this plan was started eighteen months ago, experienced showmen said Rhoades was committing suicide. But Rhoades just smiled his broadest smile and remarked that "I'm still here," to which his friends added, "and going strong."

Pupils of the Sullivan high school at Sullivan, Ind., have just received a new moving picture machine, half of the purchase price of which was contributed by Will H. Hays. Mr. Hays is a graduate of the high school.

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed in the Federal Court at Fort Wayne, Ind., by Clayton W. Buck, proprietor of a picture theatre in Angola. He lists his assets at $550 and his liabilities at $7,259.

Two thousand invitations have been issued by the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays for a special showing of the photoplay, "Silas Marner," at the Palace Theatre next Saturday afternoon. The guests will include teachers, pupils of English classes of the high schools, ministers and clubwomen of Indianapolis.

F. J. Rembusch has taken over the Crump Theatre at Columbus from the heirs of the Crump estate. Under the agreement he will operate it for a period of three years. It is probably Mr. Rembusch's plan to run both the Crump Theatre and his American Theatre with high-class picture programs, and possibly vary occasionally with road shows at one of the houses.

Detroit

Michigan exhibitors are still talking about the second annual motion picture day held the last week in February and which proved so successful. In the afternoon there was a business session and in the evening a banquet and dance. At the meeting Sydney S. Cohen and other members of the national association discussed the uniform contract and other important affairs. The Michigan association is opposed to the uniform contract, contending that it is one-sided in favor of the distributor.

At the banquet 500 persons attended, including exchangemen, exhibitors, their ladies and friends. It was held at the Hotel Statler. There were at least a dozen vaudeville acts and specialties before the speaking started.

W. S. McLaren, president of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association, was toastmaster. The speakers were Marcus Loew, Arthur Friend, Clarence Buddington Kelland, Alfred J. Murphy, Ray Branch, Supt. of Police William P. Rutledge, E. W. Hammons and George Walters, Sheriff of Wayne County. The talks were brief and in each instance, the speakers touched upon the friendly cooperation existing in Michigan between the exhibitors and the exchange men. Marcus Loew spoke for the independent producer, saying that it was up to the exhibitors to encourage the independent as otherwise they would force them out of business and put the producing in the hands of a few, which would prove a menace later on.

After the banquet there was a minstrel show in which various exchangemen and exhibitors took part. The evening wound up with dancing, which lasted until 2 a. m. It was the most successful get-together in the history of the industry for Michigan.

The motion picture industry of Michigan received a terrible shock recently when Larry Hayes, former manager of the Dawn Theatre at Hillsdale, died as a result of burns he received in a fire at the Hotel Norton. He leaves a widow and four children in dire circumstances. The exhibitors and the exchangemen have hit upon a plan to raise $3,000 and are selling tickets at $1 each. The film men of Michigan are assisting very ably and already more than $1,000 has been raised for his family.

The Orpheum Theatre, Flint, has been taken over by Lester Matt, who already has the Strand. Charles Garfield remains as manager of the Orpheum. Mr. Matt contemplates a new theatre on the site of the Orpheum within a year.

Toledo

The Lenten season has created havoc among the Toledo movie houses. Each and every one of them, with the exception of the Rivoli, have noticed a big drop in receipts for the past month. This condition is expected to prevail at least until after Easter. Even the combined special vaudeville acts and feature pictures has failed to bring the desired results, so both the Valentine and the Temple managements announce the discontinuance of the special vaudeville part of the program.

The local managers are watching carefully the movement on part of the Toledo Council of Churches to introduce a bill in the coming Ohio Legislature to prohibit Sunday movies in Ohio. If the local movement shows signs of any great strength throughout the state, the Ohio Motion Picture Theatre Owners, it is said, will call a meeting to formulate plans to oppose the move.

The Rev. B. F. Lamb, executive secretary of the Ohio Council of Churches, in a letter to the Toledo Council of Churches, predicts defeat of the present Ramey bill which seeks to legalize Sunday movies in Ohio. Active resistance to legalized Sunday movies was directly inspired by the Ramey bill, Dr. C. McCleod Smith, executive secretary of the Toledo Council of Churches, points out.

Milwaukee

M. Homs, president of the Eau Claire, Wis., Theatre Company, has bought the Cutter property, adjoining the Elks' Club, and will build a large theatre on the lot, which measures 53 by 160 feet. The house will seat between 1,000 and 1,500 and be the last word in modern theatre architecture. There will be a main floor and balcony with party loges. Cushioned seats, widely separated, will afford the utmost in comfort for the patrons.

Washington D. C.

J. D. Hofheimer, of Norfolk, Va., was a visitor in Washington during the present week. He called at the local exchanges and recommenced booking for the Capitol Theatre (colored house), in Portsmouth, which has been closed for some time. Mr. Hofheimer anticipates good business from now on, particularly at his Norfolk house, the Manhattan.

The motion picture business here was not as badly hit during the Lenten season as perhaps was expected by the exhibitors. Harry M. Crandall, head of a string of houses that bear his name, declares that business has kept up in a most satisfactory manner. Some of the exchanges state that they have received complaints of slack business from other cities, and it is reported that in Baltimore trade has fallen off somewhat, but in Washington the admissions are keeping up very satisfactorily.

Oklahoma City

Strand Theatre Company, Muskogee, has incorporated with a capital stock of $4,000. The incorporators are Roscoe S. Cate, Allen D. Myers and Hill Moore, all of Muskogee.

Robert D. Hutchinson, for seven years manager of the Lyric Theatre and for four years manager of the Folly Theatre, at Oklahoma City, and one of the best known theatrical men in the country, has been appointed manager of the Liberty Theatre at Oklahoma City, succeeding H. W. McCall, resigned to enter private business. Charles E. Hutchinson, brother of Robert D. Hutchinson, and at present assistant manager of the Orpheum Theatre, has been appointed manager of the Folly.

Northwest Shows Beginning of New Co-operative Spirit

The outstanding feature of the recent trip to Olympia of over 400 exhibitors, exchangemen and film representatives, most of whom left by special train from Seattle, to attend a public hearing of the proposed 10 per cent admission tax on theatre tickets, was the co-operation existing throughout the entire proceeding. It marked the first time in the history of the Pacific Northwest that such a representative gathering was held. For the first time exchangemen and exhibitors sat across from each other without that usual feeling of veiled animosity. No competitive spirit was displayed upon the part of one exhibitor toward another. The poster clerk was of as much importance at the meeting as his boss. Furthermore, no salesman "weakened" and lined up a bunch of contracts. The only "shop" talked was the common cause that united the boys and brought them before the legislative committee—the defeat of the proposed tax!

From the moment of leaving Seattle until the return dignity and order marked the gathering. It was no undisciplined mob that invaded the Senate Chamber, each one for himself. Looking down from the balcony, the assemblage presented the appearance of business men gathered together in a common cause. That the effort was to some purpose was later witnessed by the fact that the bill died in committee.

The precedent has been established. It would not be surprising if it was the first step towards a permanent organization between the various branches of the industry.

"Doc" Clemmer has bought "Doc Coué" for his Spokane Clemmer Theatre, which proves that there's one "Doc" who has faith in the better and better theory.

I. A. Iverson, of the Alcazar, Great Falls, has booked the entire season's product from American Releasing.

"Dad" Abbott, of The Dream, Sedro Woolley, Wash., spent three or four days in Seattle lining up bookings.

Hugh McCredie, Jr., who operates the Multnomah, a Portland suburban house, will erect a theatre in St. John's, also a suburb, this spring.

Ed J. Myrick, general manager of the Moore Amusement Company, of Tacoma, the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, has appointed Neil V. Conklin, formerly with the Seattle First National exchange, house manager of the Rialto. This leaves Myrick, who formerly managed the house himself, freer to attend to his other duties.

Ray Grombacker, prominent exhibitor of Spokane, brought his organist, Arthur MacDonald, to Seattle with him this week to select music for "The Pilgrim" and "Robin Hood," which he has booked for early showings at advanced prices.

The Columbia, Portland, formerly operated by Jensen & Von Herberg, has become the property of the Universal Pictures Corporation through the purchase of the entire building housing the theatre. The house is being thoroughly renovated and will be reopened within two weeks as one of the finest houses in Portland. William Cutts, general manager of theatres for Universal, is supervising the work. A house manager has not yet been named.

A new Seattle "movie paper" has made its bow. The Blue Mouse Theatres Company is issuing a weekly organ, which was named through a contest, a season's pass being the prize awarded. The prize was won by a 13-year-old schoolboy, Adrian Woollery, who was the first to suggest "The Blue Mouse Tales." Over 350 names were submitted. The new paper is being well received. Vic Gauntlett is editor.

Al Raleigh, formerly manager of the Columbia Theatre, Portland, has become Portland manager of the Blue Mouse. Fred Teufel, former manager there, goes to Astoria in the same capacity. Art Hile, former Astoria house manager, is managing the Oregon Theatre, in Salem.

When R. L. Ruggles showed "Dr. Jack" at his Liberty Theatre, Chehalis, Wash., the minister's family attended in full force. They were observed to be enjoying the picture hugely. As the party came out an official was standing in the lobby bareheaded. Mistaking him for one of the management the minister's wife said:

"That really IS a splendid picture. Do you know, I actually had to laugh out loud!"

Employes of the Greater Theatres Company, numbering 100, held a get-together party and dance Friday evening at the Liberty Theatre on the occasion of the formal award of prizes for the coupon book contest. It was a very enjoyable evening, ending with a supper. Stunts and musical numbers by some of the finest artists in the city, members of the company's various orchestras, contributed to the evening's pleasure.

Charlie Chaplin's "Pilgrim" was so well received that two special matinees were crowded into a single Saturday. A 10 o'clock performance for kiddies and a midnight matinee were staged. It is playing the Strand. Bookings are so heavy that but one week could be secured.

Succeeding Frank Steffy, Coliseum manager, whose term on the censor board has expired, Leroy Johnson, manager of the Liberty Theatre, has been appointed by the mayor.

On March 7 the House of Representatives, meeting at Boise, Idaho, decided to indefinitely postpone house bill 195, for the creation of a bureau of film standardization in the department of public welfare. The vote prevented debate, disappointing a large gallery brought out by a discussion of the proposed censorship at a recent public hearing.

Three cash prizes were awarded Seattle children presenting to Oliver Wallace, guest organist at the Liberty during the showing of "Robin Hood," the best musical program of three compositions, suitable for a special Sunday concert. Hundreds competed. Liberty News pictures were taken of the crowd and later shown on the screen.

Wesley Barry is making a decided hit at the Coliseum this week with a clever personal appearance stunt, which captivates the imagination. He arrived just in time to figure as one of the judges of an annual kite-flying contest conducted by a leading newspaper, thereby gaining much publicity. The theatre has been taxed to capacity throughout the showing. The young star is the house guest of L. K. Brin, Warner Brothers' Northwest representative, while in Seattle.

GIVING THE GREATER DISPLAY TO A SERIAL STORY

This was the start of Pearl White in "Plunder" at the Princess Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and the feature was made to take second place in favor of the first episode of the chapter play. The man who said serials are dead was dead wrong.

Montana

George Brewerton, theatre manager of Shelby, Mont., the oil city, is wearing a broad smile these days due to the spreading of oil wells and the development under progress in his city that spells good business for him. In fact, so great is the rush to Shelby that newspapers are urging people not to come there on account of lack of sleeping accommodations.

A swimming party was the happy diversion for the members of the Rialto and American theatre employes recently after the closing hours of their respective theatres. About fifty in five autos drove to Greston Hot springs and enjoyed the delights of the big hot plunges, after which they all took possession of the ballroom of the hotel and tripped the light fantastic until morning dawned. During the hours of festivities the dancers were served a splendid lunch in the dining room of the hotel.

San Francisco Theatre Plays to 2,085,142 in First Year

The Golden Gate Theatre, San Francisco, is celebrating its first anniversary with a special combination picture and vaudeville bill, the feature picture being "Catch My Smoke," with Tom Mix. During the past year this house has played to a total of 2,085,142 paid admissions, of which 65 per cent were women. A total of 136,000 children attended during this period. Thirty per cent selected seats in the balcony, where smoking is permitted. The staff includes 105 employes. A rare collection of oil paintings was recently added to the interior decorations, including the Grand Prix de Salon of 1873. Simultaneously with the announcement of the birthday celebration a change was made in the photoplay policy and in the future only first run First National, Paramount and Fox releases will be shown.

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, closed its doors on March 16 for several weeks for extensive interior and exterior changes. A small army of carpenters and decorators at once took possession of the house and when it is reopened it will be one of the finest small theatres in the West. In its new dress it will offer long run engagements and will feature its musical programs. Sol Pincus, who has been in charge of the house of late, has been made outside exploitation representative of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, handling billboard and similar publicity work. Milton F. Samis, now of the California Theatre, will be in charge of the Imperial Theatre when it is reopened.

Several changes will be made shortly in the alignment of men connected with the California, Granada, Imperial and New Portola theatres, San Francisco. Leon Levy, house manager for the California Theatre, will take over some of the duties formerly handled by Eugene H. Roth and will make his headquarters at the Granada Theatre. Charles Pincus, house manager of the New Portola Theatre, will become manager of publicity for all four theatres and will be succeeded at the New Portola by Henry Pincus, now at the California.

The California Theatre, San Francisco, recently held the world's premiere showing of "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," the first starring vehicle of Walter Hiers, and also presented the rotund comedian in person. The latter was so pleased with Greater San Francisco that he extended his stay to include a four-day engagement at the American Theatre in the eastbay suburb of Oakland.

Bob Sharp, of the Liberty and Strand theatres, Fresno, Calif., is rapidly recovering from a serious operation and expects to be able to attend to theatre duties again shortly.

Mrs. Maude Strong, owner of the Airdome at Corcoran, Calif., has decided to share some of the troubles of an exhibitor and is receiving congratulations as Mrs. Williams. Her husband is connected with the Standard Oil Company.

The Richards Theatre, a beautiful house of 900 seats, has been opened at Modesto, Calif., by A. A. Richards, veteran California exhibitor.

Among the recent trade visitors at San Francisco have included Sam Dubois, of the Rink Theatre, Dos Palos; Messrs. Byrd & Lewis, of the T. & D. Theatre, Hanford; Joe Blumenfield, of the Strand Theatre, Gilroy; Mattie Sheibley, of the Star Theatre, Reedley; Henry Heber, of Sequoia and Majestic theatres, Sacramento; C. H. Power, of the Strand Theatre, Dunsmuir; "Orpheum" Wilson, of the Granada Theatre, Red Bluff, and J. J. Wood, of the Redding Theatre, Redding.

"The Pilgrim" is making a three-weeks' run at the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, and about $40,000 will be realized on the engagement, despite the Lenten season. This showing is considered a very satisfactory one, especially when it is realized that Tivoli prices are lower than most other downtown first-run houses.

Carlston Dahnken, manager of the Oakland T. & D. Theatre, has returned from a stay of several weeks at New York.

Milton F. Samis, of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment managerial staff, has hung up what is declared to be a new record for joy, the occasion for this being the arrival of Jean Edna Samis and the good health of both Mrs. Samis and the wee daughter.

L. Eaton, who conducts theatres at Pinole and Bay Point, has taken over the Albany Theatre, Albany, Calif.

Samuel H. Levin, San Francisco theatre owner, has commenced construction work on a complete business block on Union street, between Buchanan and Webster streets. A picture house seating 1,800 will be erected in addition to a bank, market, drug store, candy shop, restaurant and twenty-six other stores.

The trustees of Arcadia, Calif., have decided to lift the ban against the showing of pictures on Sunday and it is announced that work on a new theatre will be commenced as soon as an ordinance to this effect is passed.

The Gordon Enterprises, of San Rafael, Calif., headed by S. K. Herzog, E. S. Rake and M. Blumenfeld, has purchased the partly completed McNamara Theatre at Martinez, Calif., and will open it within a few months.

Sid Grauman has booked "The Covered Wagon" into his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre to follow "Robin Hood." No play date has been set yet, as Doug's picture, now in its twenty-second week, is still hitting on all six.

Sol Lesser is holding "The Voice from the Minaret" over for a second week at the Kinema.

Mary Pickford and Doug Fairbanks have united with West Coast Theatres, Inc., Sid Grauman and Joseph M. Schenck to build a big new million-dollar theatre on Hollywood Boulevard, in Hollywood. The exact location has not as yet been announced. The theatre is to be used for legitimate attractions, and Sol Lesser, representing the West Coast chain, will soon depart for New York to arrange with Shuberts, Klaw & Erlanger, Belasco and other New York producers for the booking into the new theatre of notable Broadway successes. It is expected that construction will start in June.

A Paramount Release

YOU HAVE HEARD OF FAMILY JARS. GLORIA HAD THEM

Ray Beall, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., painted these vases blue, draped them with red roses and letters of the title as shown. He does all of the saw and brush work himself to keep expenses down and receipts up.

Howard Smith Defends Screen at Buffalo Women's Meeting

The censorship law and censorship of motion pictures were the subjects of discussion by the Erie County League of Women Voters in the Hotel Iroquois, Buffalo, last week. Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace Theatre and president of the Western New York Cohen unit, spoke against censorship.

"From a business point of view, censorship does not hurt us," said Mr. Smith. "There was a time when we believed that it would interfere with business. It has since been proven that this is not the case. The censorship law, as enforced on August 1, 1921, nevertheless is an unnecessary law. It is like the 18th amendment, a rich man's law, hitting the poor and exempting the rich. As the old laws stood, police enforcement regulated pictures.

"Good or bad pictures are a matter of taste and their demand can be checked neither by the old law nor the new. It is a matter of raising the standard of taste. The producer is subject to this demand. If better pictures are wanted, better pictures will be produced. Censorship paralyzes art expression. The most ridiculous things are thus produced on the screen merely to soothe the censor. The tendency of the producer today is much the same as yellow journalism, to cater to the mass instead of the class. But with 55,000 theatre seats in Buffalo alone, what would the theatre man be without the masses? We have more theatre seats than church seats and people want to be entertained. Censorship will not remedy any evil. It is an invasion of free speech and I am, therefore, against it."

Mrs. O. E. Siegesmund contradicted Mr. Smith, saying that the board of censors had done great work. "They had removed sex from the screen, bedroom scenes and that which incites to crime," she said. Mrs. Siegesmund rapped Will Hays, saying that he was the tool of selfish interests. Women's reproaches kept him from bringing Arbuckle back to the screen, she said. Mrs. Johnston J. Haman also defended censorship, saying that police vigilance was not sufficient and quite inadequate.

Arthur Ashley, former screen star, appeared at the Lafayette Square last week. It seems that he became involved in a misunderstanding, or whatever you may call it, over some alimony, with the result that he became very much attached to a deputy sheriff who accompanied him from the local hoose-gow to the theatre and back again between his appearances. Arthur made such a hit at the theatre one evening that he was called back several times. However, he told the folks that he would like to do more, but that a deputy sheriff was awaiting him off stage and that "they put them to bed early over there." The audience roared its merriment—not knowing the sad truth of Arthur's utterances.

George Mason, who has been managing Shea's North Park, has been appointed house manager at Shea's Hippodrome and has been succeeded at the North Park by John Carr, a brother of Henry Carr, manager of Shea's Court street vaudeville house. Ed Wickham who was house manager at the Hipp recently last week.

It was one big week at Shea's Hippodrome last week. What with the Hengerer Fashion Revue, "Adam's Rib," a great prologue, and other attractions, business came within a few bones of reaching the house record. Manager Vincent McFaul, manager of the Hipp, staged an unusually colorful prologue. The stunt opened with the slide, "A Prologue to 'Adam's Rib'," being flashed on the stage curtains, which, when drawn back, disclosed a mammoth painting on transparent material of a dinosaur skeleton. Gradually the lighting was changed until a woodland scene was revealed with two characters, a man and woman, dressed in pleistocenic period costumes. The two danced to an exquisite musical accompaniment by the Hipp orchestra. The picture started as the dance finished.

Another big hit of the week was the Hengerer Fashion Review, which brought to the Hipp on living models the newest styles for 1923. The stunt made a big hit with the fair contingent and the house got a lot of fine publicity through big displays in the Main street windows of the department store and its page ads.

John Stevens, manager of the Central Park Theatre, pulled a good one last week when he offered a new Easter bonnet to the young woman on whom it looked the best. Fair patrons were invited to the stage and the plaudits of the audience decided the winner. John is also starting community singing in the house.

A jury in Supreme Court has handed down a verdict of $2,000 in favor of John Finnegan, of Lockport, N. Y., against the Olympic Amusement Company, of Buffalo, for injuries sustained by his wife, Anna Finnegan, when she tripped and fell down a stairway in the balcony of the Olympic. Mrs. Finnegan died since the commencement of the action, but not as a result of the injuries, and her husband was substituted as plaintiff.

The Criterion got under way again this week with a "Three in One" show, pictures, tabs and vaudeville. Ben Holmes is manager and Lionel Edel assistant. The prices have been made attractive: 10 and 20 at matinees, and 10 to 40 at nights. Second-run Paramount pictures are being shown. There will be special shows on Sunday. The house is under the direction of the Strand interests, Walter Hays, Moe Mark and Eugene Falk.

Niagara Falls is to have a new picture theatre. A group of Italian residents have formed a company to build a house at East Falls and Portage road. The company has purchased the old seats in the Buffalo Strand. These will be used in the balcony of the new house.

Manager Howard Waugh, of the new Palace Theatre, Jamestown, provided the show at the smoker of the Old Guard in the State armory one evening last week. Howard transported his entire show to the hall. The stunt brought forth much space in the local newspapers.

Charlie Hayman has booked Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim" and Will Rogers in "Fruits of Fate" as his Easter Week show at the new Strand in Niagara Falls. Ought to pack 'em in with that program. The stock company has left the Cataract Theatre, next door to the Strand, and the house is back with a picture policy.

Howard Carroll is doing special publicity work for the Lumberg, Niagara Falls, on its Paramount attractions. Howard was formerly manager of the Cataract.

One of the coolest attempts at robbery to be staged in some time was made last Sunday night at the Regent Theatre, Dunkirk, N. Y. Forcing one of the front doors of the house, the yeggs gained entrance. Going upstairs, the office door was jimmied as was the door leading into one of the inner offices. After opening the desks and finding nothing of value, the burglars went after the vault. Here they knocked off the combination with a sledge. Getting inside, however, they were surprised to find nothing of value—except to the theatre company. The yeggs, it is believed, became frightened at this stage of their job and ran away, as they left their tools behind. While the burglars got nothing for their work, they did considerable damage to the property.

Bob Finlay, formerly appearing in comedies with Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray and Chester Conklin, is appearing in Western New York houses with what he calls his "Cinema Girls Revue." The act is the headliner this week at the Lafayette Square.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue, Niagara Falls, is "sitting pretty" on his coming attractions. They read thus: "Robin Hood," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Safety Last," "The Chrisitan," "Brass," "One Exciting Night," "Main Street," etc.

The new house being erected in the Black Rock section of Buffalo on the site of the old Try-It will be called the Community Theatre. It will cost $60,000 and seat 750. J. D. Parmelee, who has managed the Try-It for many years, will manage the new house.

Men, Beware!

Women are finding good openings as managers of picture theatres in Albany and vicinity. Miss Janet Noon has been handling the Crescent in Schenectady for the past seven years, and what is more important, the house has made money. Mrs. Georgia Wallace owns the new Grand at Whitehall, while Mrs. McGraw is making a success of a house in Little Falls.

No Mushers' Paradise

Mushers are not wanted in either the Mark Strand, in Albany, or the New Troy, in Troy, N. Y. And what is more, the management has no use for the flapper and her friend who loll far down in the seats, and cheek to cheek watch the picture. As for the man who changes his seat frequently or attempts to annoy women patrons, the gutter is good enough for him.

Uly S. Hill, manager of the two houses and an oldtimer in the business, has set his foot down fairly and squarely, and as a result these two houses are free from a pest which came with the picture. On one occasion, Mr. Hill noticed a man changing his seat no less than ten times one evening. That man was called into the lobby and politely informed to get out and stay out.

Furthermore, Mr. Hill believes in telling the truth about a picture. When he first started in as manager of the Mark Strand, many parents would call him up and ask him if the picture booked for Saturday was suitable for their children. Mr. Hill told them the truth, and as the result he has the confidence of all Albany and Troy. These are the things that go far in making a theatre a success.

Advent of Spring to Bring New Theatres Around Albany

While several picture theatres in this section of the state are scheduled to open within the next few weeks, the advent of spring will bring the actual work of construction on many others. The new Rose in Troy, which has been under course of construction for several months, and which is owned by Jacob Rosenthal, formerly of the Majestic in the same city, will open on March 31. The Capitol, also of Troy, which has been closed for several months, will reopen on the same date. The Majestic, now undergoing repairs, and which will hereafter be known as the Astor, will open later on. The American in Troy, owned by Ben Apple, will celebrate its third anniversary during the week of March 31. William E. Benton, proprietor of the Congress Theatre in Saratoga Springs, last week purchased a plot of ground in Whitehall for $12,000 and will erect a theatre during the summer. Mrs. Georgia Wallace, of Whitehall, owning the Grand there, also announces that she will break ground for a new house this spring. In Little Falls two new picture theatres, involving an expenditure of nearly $400,000, are to be erected this coming summer.

Bunny Grauer scored a big hit at the Lincoln in Troy last week in a personal appearance in connection with the showing of "The Town That Forgot God." Heavy advertising preceded the picture.

Jake Rosenthal of Troy, who has been under the weather for some time with carbuncles, is now out and around.

Jack Hogan, formerly managing the Leland in Albany, is now handling the Palace in Troy for W. W. Berinstein.

Several exhibitors in this section have been sick during the last few weeks. Ben Apple of the American in Troy was confined to the house for a few days with a bad cold, while Samuel Suckno, who owns a chain of theatres in Albany, has been ill with the grippe.

Abe Stone of the Rialto in Schenectady announces that he has completed his spring and summer bookings and that from now on the house will operate seven days a week.

Otto Eigen, proprietor of the Academy in Sharon Springs, and who has wintered in Albany, leaves this week to reopen his house.

H. E. Wilkinson, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, spent a few days in New York last week completing some bookings.

John Hogan, of Elizabeth, N. J., formerly manager of Proctor's Leland Theatre, in Albany, N. Y., and who was lately named to manage the Palace, in Troy, died last Sunday in one of the Troy hospitals following a four days' illness. The remains were shipped on Monday to Elizabeth, N. J., where the funeral was held. Mr. Hogan was very well known to the motion picture industry throughout Central New York. He leaves a family.

Ben Apple, running the Griswold in Troy, as well as the American, has made a notable addition to his orchestra in the person of Edgar Best, formerly of the Olympic in Watertown.

D. S. Regan, of the Star in Greenwich, announces that plans are out for extensive improvements in his theatre. The lobby will be enlarged and a new system of ventilation will be installed.

The old Keith Theatre in Troy, which has been closed for some time, is now being remodeled into a mercantile establishment.

During Anniversary Week the American Theatre in Troy will be resplendent in national colors. Having enjoyed three years of uninterruuted prosperity, Ben Apple is preparing to go the limit in the way of celebration. Under Mr. Apple's able management the house has always been known as one of the biggest money-makers in the Capital District. Mr. Apple, at the time of the opening, announced that he had but one policy, and that was in giving the people their money's worth.

The Women's Club of Troy has just taken action protesting against all Arbuckle films.

The new Troy, one of the Mark Strand group, gave a clever musical program of Irish melodies on St. Patrick's Day. Early presentation is promised of "Adam's Rib" and "Robin Hood."

The organ being installed at the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany will provide the music at this house from Easter Monday on. New seats and new drapes are also being installed.

Rochester

The Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., will be exempted from the taxes by municipal authorities on the basis of an opinion written by Corporation Counsel Charles L. Pierce, who points out that the theatre, as well as Kilbourn Hall, is a part of the University of Rochester, a corporation in the city of Rochester for more than fifty years and entitled to tax exemptions under state laws affecting the property of educational institutions.

Petitions of university officials that no tax be levied on the theatre were sent by the board of assessors to Corporation Counsel Pierce for a ruling. A total valuation of $2,500,000 was placed upon the Eastman Theatre and Kilbourn Hall, each being assessed at $1,125,000. City officials entertained no thoughts of taxing Kilbourn Hall, an educational institution, but some doubts were held as to whether the Eastman Theatre should be taxed or not, for the reason that admissions are charged for attractions there.

Citing a number of cases fixing a precedent to the absolving from taxation by city authorities of property for educational purposes, Mr. Pierce explained that the theory was that such institutions took nothing of profit from operations. On the contrary, he wrote, they give back to the community which they serve something of benefit. "It amounts," he said in his opinion, "to the subsidizing of such institutions from the public purse, because when the people forgive them their taxes they must make it up by increased levies against their own property. As to the portion of the building which includes Kilbourn Hall, there can be no serious question."

Arthur Alexander has announced his resignation as musical director of the Eastman Theatre orchestra. The announcement came as a complete surprise to persons familiar with his work in organizing and directing the pretentious orchestra. No explation was given. It is expected that Victor Wagner, who has been assistant conductor, will fill Mr. Alexander's place, temporarily at least.

EDWARD H. CRAWFORD

As business manager of the new Troy, the latest in the Strand chain of houses, Edward H. Crawford, formerly manager of the Lincoln, in Troy, is scoring a marked success. Mr. Crawford came to Troy last summer from Loew's in New York. During the past few months he has made many friends in the Collar City, and in handling the Troy has shown himself conversant with all angles of the motion picture business.

E. F. Albee and J. J. Murdock, of the Keith interests, are expected in town soon to look over the Temple Theatre and make plans for the improvement of the interior. Manager J. H. Finn predicts that the entire interior will be redecorated and that new equipment will be installed during the summer months.

Sam Rothapfel, managing director of the Capitol, New York, is coming to town to put on "The Christian" at the Eastman Theatre.

The difficulty surrounding the theatre combination in Corning, N. Y., made by the announcement of the Associated Theatres, Inc., that that company had taken over four theatres there, and the subsequent denial from the Liberty Theatre management, ended last week in a formal statement from C. V. Stowell, of the Liberty. The statement is that four theatres—the Princess, Liberty, Regent and State—will be operated by the Corning Theatres Company, in conjunction with Associated, which will act as fiscal agent for the local theatres. Arrangements have been made whereby the State and Regent will be closed, except on Saturday and Sunday, while all road shows will be booked at the State, recently taken over and remodeled by Associated.

Revenge At Last!

There was a bowling party in Buffalo last week. It was terrible! The exhibitor team beat the exchange men's outfit four straight games. The exchange bowlers were Harry Dixon, J. Emerson Dickmon, Earl Kramer and Bob Murphy, while the exhibitors were George Hall, George Hanny and D. S. Parmelee. It is understood that if Harry Dixon had had a little support from the rest of his colleagues the result might have been different, as Harry rolled 204 once and is still talking about it.

Official Connecticut Survey Shows 196 Picture Theatres

The Connecticut State Police Department's survey of all theatres in the state has been completed, the records showing that there are 196 picture theatres with a total seating capacity of 145,853. Theatres devoted to the showing of pictures are located in 86 cities and towns.

The investigation was under the general supervision of Robert T. Hurley, superintendent of the State Police, and directly in charge of Lieutenant Walter F. Stiles and a corps of three officers. These men are at work virtually all the time and constantly are checking up on theatre conditions to see that all state safety rules are obeyed. The investigators refused licenses to 24 places which were to have been operated as picture theatres. Licenses were granted to 256.

The activities of the State Police in this connection have been based on making picture theatres safe for the public so far as fire protection and other risks are concerned. The report states that three theatres have been completely remodeled by the owners to make them conform with all requirements. A total of 900 seats has been removed from various theatres because they were too closely crowded or were in dangerous locations. Aisles were ordered enlarged in five theatres so that patrons could reach the exits quickly in an emergency. Additional exits have been provided in 35 theatres and new fire escapes have been installed in 12.

Lieutenant Stiles has given special attention to projection rooms. Forty-eight were ordered enlarged. In approximately 40 others various alterations were ordered, varying from the repair of safety shutters to placing metal coverings on shelves.

An important safety device which the State Police have ordered installed is panic bolts, so that all doors may be readily opened. Eighty-two of these bolts have been placed on doors in various theatres throughout the state. In four houses the balconies have been closed because of the lack of proper facilities for egress or other dangerous circumstances that could not be abolished.

Lieutenant Stiles and his staff average an inspection of each theatre every month. At first several theatre owners and managers opposed this constant surveillance, but it has been demonstrated to them that by even placing the entire matter on a strictly commercial basis it is cheaper to have a theatre safe in all respects than one that is a menace to lives of its patrons. Following the installation of special safety devices, both fire and liability insurance rates invariably have been reduced, thereby effecting a constant saving.

The report shows that Hartford has 11 picture theatres with a total seating capacity of 14,766. Bridgeport evidently is the state's leading film city, with 24 theatres with a seating capacity of 25,376, or one seat for every 5.6 persons in its population. New Haven has 19 picture theatres, providing one seat for every 10.3 persons. Waterbury has 13 theatres, which offer a seat for every seven persons.

North Carolina Lawmakers Leave Industry Unmolested

The session of the North Carolina General Assembly, which adjourned early in March, was conspicuous for the absence of any serious legislation aimed to curb the picture business. Nothing tending towards a censorship agitation was promulgated during the entire season, and so far as is known no demand was made on any legislator.

The only law affecting in any manner the picture theatres is a local bill applying only to one county—New Hanover—and which makes it unlawful for children under 16 years of age to attend theatres or any other place of amusement, dance halls, etc., after 8 p. m. unless accompanied by a parent or legal guardian. This law, affecting the home county of President Percy W. Wells, of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., was railroaded through without giving any opportunity for a hearing, although it is not presumed that it seriously affects the Wilmington theatres, since the attendance of children at night, unchaperoned, is very small.

Upon the eve of the opening of the New Broadway Theatre, Columbia, S. C., by its new owner, R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, "R. D." was showered with an avalanche of congratulatory messages from over the entire South and many from the New York film centers. It was Craver who first built the Broadway and operated it for quite a while, it later passing into other hands. He is extremely happy over regaining control of this house, and had it closed for several weeks so that it would open no March 19 as one of the finest theatres in South Carolina.

Ralph H. DeBruler, who also is manager of Craver's Broadway, at Charlotte, N. C., is managing director of the new theatre, and in his opening announcement he requests the Columbia Better Films Committee to allow him to co-operate fully with them in every way. A real motion picture orchestra, pipe organ and soloists enlivened the opening bill, which was "The Dangerous Age."

The Ideal, Columbia, S. C., reopened on March 19 after being closed for several weeks for extensive alterations and improvements, including the installation of a new pipe organ and new projection equipment. The entire theatre was also redecorated, and it will play the highest class feature pictures with orchestra accompaniment.

J. S. Wadsworth, for many years travelling the Southeastern States for Southern Theatre Equipment Company, is making a name for himself as an exhibitor at Great Falls, S. C., a live cotton manufacturing town. His elaborate lobby displays have been the talk of the entire industry of the state.

J. C. Duncan, who has managed the Majestic, Asheville, has been transferred to the Strand. Ray Beall has been sent from Spartanburg, S. C., to manage the Imperial, Asheville, and is succeeded in Spartanburg by Frank Strozier. All are Southern Enterprises houses.

A new theatre for colored people is to be built on South Mint street, Charlotte, N. C. Sam Craver already has a colored house in Charlotte.

Dr. R. P. Lyons, owner of the Lyric, Wadesboro, was a Charlotte visitor during the past week.

Maine

With the closing of the Jefferson Theatre, Portland, Me., representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have been in the city looking over the theatrical situation with a view of building a house. There is little doubt that the film company will go through with its plans. Agents of legitimate producers also have been investigating the matter.

The Colonial Theatre, Belfast, Me., recently destroyed by fire, will be rebuilt. Tentative plans for a handsome theatre especially adapted for the exhibition of photoplays have been submitted. The Colonial was owned by Belfast Theatres, Inc., a New York concern. Picture shows are being given in the Armory, pending completion of the new house.

The Jefferson Theatre, Portland, Me., which was to have closed as a place of amusement on Saturday, March 10, has been leased for a period of one year to the Maine and New Hampshire Theatre Company. The Catholic diocese of Portland, the new owner of the Jefferson, acquired the Jefferson several weeks ago. The first mass was celebrated in the theatre on Sunday morning, March 11, when the announcement of the lease was made by Bishop Walsh. He said the Jefferson will be used for religious services on Sunday.

Louisville

Better weather in Louisville is resulting in improved attendance at the local picture theatres, and it is claimed that business is now very fair and will continue good during the period to June 1, at least, although there is generally a slump as soon as really warm weather hits. Spring business is not generally as good as fall business, but conditions in Louisville this year are fine and the suburban houses are doing an especially attractive business.

General business is active, labor in big demand and wages increasing, there being a shortage of skilled labor. This is resulting in money circulating more, and larger payrolls are helping the picture people, especially in the matter of children's business in the suburbs. It also is claimed that prohibition has made for better picture house business, especially in the working districts.

Colonel Fred Levy, of Levy Brothers and of First National, Big Features Rights Corporation and theatres in Louisville and Lexington, was elected president of the Louisville Y. M. H. A. at the annual directors' meeting, succeeding Charles W. Morris, who had held the position for three years.

Louis Steuerle, of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, has recently been elected Exalted Ruler of the Louisville Lodge of Elks. This will mean a busy term for Mr. Steuerle, as the club is now erecting a $1,500,000 hotel and clubhouse.

Fred J. Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, Fourth Avenue Amusement Company and organizations operating a large chain of local picture houses, is mentioned as one of a number of local men who are behind organization of a company to erect a $3,000,000 hotel in the heart of the business section.

A report from Columbia, Ky., states that a new town, known as Wildcat, Ky. is being built seven miles from Columbia, in a sawmill district, and that a new picture theatre, dance hall and other buildings will be erected at once.

Boston Mayor Reads Riot Act, Alleging Unsafe Conditions

Despite the fact that there has been no loss of life in a theatre fire in Boston in the past forty years, Mayor James F. Curley called thirty managers of Boston picture theatres into conference at city hall last week and read the riot act to them. He pointed out the dangers to children who are patrons of these houses, some of which, it was declared, are conducted without regard to the primary rules of fire protection. It developed during the discussion that the legitimate, or so-called first-class houses, are obeying all the rules for safety.

Mayor Curley said: "I will not shoulder the responsibility of the loss of life by fire in your theatres any longer. You men will or else the state fire marshal shall. You managers may as well get together among yourselves on this proposition. If you don't, the state will act, and then you'll have a two-headed supervision."

Commissioners Glynn and Mahoney made a report to the mayor on what they termed the seriousness of the present situation. They said that district chiefs, after personal canvasses in their territory, reported that of the forty houses visited twenty-eight have no fire patrol, as required, eight houses have the required one patrol apiece, and four houses have a patrol of two men each.

These patrols are given training by the Fire Department attaches. They are supposed to wear distinctive badges, to keep unceasing vigilance for the protection from fire of their charges, and to drill theatre employes twice each week. They also are obliged to report regularly to the district fire chiefs as to conditions.

Commissioner Mahoney scored the managers for their alleged laxity. He declared they were running wild in the matter of overcrowding their patrons in some of the theatres, and he pointed out their alleged failure to remove snow from side door exits, fire escapes, as well as take other precautions necessary to the protection of the public.

After further testimony from Fire Chief John O. Taber and Commissioner Glynn as to the leniency extended theatre managers in the past by fire department officials, and the statement that this would continue no longer, the theatre representatives present unanimously agreed that theatres now having but one fireman for patrol duty would add a second, and those without any patrol whatever, would immediately place two firemen in their theatres.

The new patrols to be hired by the theatres will be required to pass an examination as to their knowledge of the fire regulations and of the use of fire extinguishers, by the chief of the particular district in which the respective theatres are located, before their appointment is approved by the department.

Police were called to the Modern Theatre at Lawrence last Sunday to quell a small disturbance at the entrance to the playhouse, where a great crowd had gathered seeking admittance to a performance of "The Third Alarm." One of the doors of the theatre was torn from its fastenings in the rush. The management called the police to prevent injury to patrons in the waiting line who were being crowded by the late comers.

L. H. Raymond, of Pittsfield, has taken charge as manager of the Capitol Theatre at Springfield, following a service of three years and a half as manager of Goldstein's Colonial Theatre in "The Heart of the Berkshires." Before going to Pittsfield Mr. Raymond was manager of one of Marcus Leow's theatres at Fall River.

The Rialto Theatre, at Lawrence, has been leased for a term of ten years by Edward F. O'Brien and John E. Tierney, of that city. The theatre will be made into an auditorium and only the stage will be left intact. The entire interior will be made over, a new floor will be laid, and the place made adaptable for conventions, lectures and sporting events of all kinds, including boxing, wrestling and basketball. Work will be started forthwith, and it is expected the auditorium will be ready for occupancy by Labor Day. Mr. O'Brien is the owner of Merrimack Park and Mr. Tierney is a well-known resident of South Lawrence.

Last week was anniversary week at Loew's State Theatre, marking the conclusion of the first year of a highly successful existence. Manager J. H. Brennan took advantage of the occasion to present a very attractive bill, showing "Where the Pavement Ends" and "Nobody's Money" as the film leaders, and, as an added attraction, a delightful vocal program by Miss Marjorie Moody.

Marcus Loew came on from New York for the birthday event, met every one at the State Theatre and the Metro exchange and departed well satisfied. All through the week the theatre was sold out at every performance, and even standing room was almost at a premium. Manager Brennan says that the first year has far exceeded the fondest hopes of all connected with the theatre, both from the great amount of business done and from the well-earned reputation the house has acquired. On Saturday nights, particularly, the bills have drawn unusually well, and practically all through the year long lines have extended down the street from the box office in both directions.

Sunday, March 18, Worcester, Mass., theatres began the new policy of opening their performances on the Sabbath at 4:30 o'clock. This was due to a ruling by the license board, made because some theatres had started shows at 1:30 o'clock. Chief of Police Hill expained to the managers that the new ruling was intended to establish a definite policy, which would be followed by the board. He added that the decision was not based upon complaints against early afternoon shows on Sunday. One of the theatres in its advertisement in a Sunday newspaper had a line saying the afternoon show would begin at 4 o'clock.

Gordon Wrighter, otherwise just as well known as Doc Rawhide, was forty-eight years old on March 13. When the popular Springfield manager of Poli's Palace Theatre came to his office that morning he found an immense bouquet of forty-eight roses on his desk, a gift of employes of the Palace. Mr. Wrighter has been with the Poli circuit nineteen years and at the Palace nine years.

The Randolph is holding "Driven" over for a second week showing, as the house has been playing to good business with the film.

It's rather unusual when two of the largest movie houses feature the same song in the same week. Both the Chicago and the New McVicker's used the Irish ballad, "Mother of Ireland," to a good adantage for St. Patrick's week shows.

Jail looms for ticket scalpers, if the bill introduced in the Illinois Senate by Senator Denver, of this city, becomes a law. His bill prohibits the sale of tickets at any place but the box office, unless sold at advertised prices, and the penalty is a fine up to $500 and imprisonment for a year or both. It also provides that the license shall be forfeited on conviction and the purchaser of a ticket at an excess rate is given action against the owner or manager for $20 for each ticket. So the future of the ticket scalper in this State looks black, indeed.

A feature of the presentations at the Senate Theatre, the ace house of the Lubliner & Trinz chain, is the jazz orchestra conducted by Art Kahn. Philadelphia Showmen Again in Daylight Saving Battle

Though the topic of vital interest to the entire picture industry in all the centers of population of Pennsylvania—enactment by the legislature of the Derrick bill prohibiting establishment of any other standard of time than the normal one or popularly the anti-daylight saving law—seemed but a few days ago to have received its quietus, the battle has been reopened by the postponement of its second reading until next Monday night.

The delay is being taken advantage of by the opponents of the measure to re-align their forces and to present new attacks. While the moving picture interests had been of opinion that the overwhelming sentiment in the legislature in favor of the bill would prevail, the possibility of the last-minute exemption from the law of first and second class cities, meaning Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, now exists.

Propaganda advanced by the opponents of the Derrick bill has attempted to place on the industry responsibility for its alleged thwarting of the popular will. The cold facts in the case are that both the booking agencies and the exhibitors were actuated solely by the purpose of giving real public opinion, not newspaper agitation, an opportunity to express itself. In all the picture houses arguments both for and against the measure were expressed by speakers who were given the privilege of appearance, and opportunity was given patrons to express their opinion at the box office.

It is true that a majority of the picture interests are not favorably inclined towards a modification of the Derrick measure, because they believe that attitude truly reflects the sentiment of a majority of the people. But they are not prejudging the case, and with a fairness that is commendable and might properly be taken as ad example by zealots who are moving heaven and earth to defeat the passage are giving real public sentiment an opportunity to make itself audible.

It is significant in connection with the whole subject that Councilman Charles B. Hall, the dominant figure in the local legislative party, and who most intimately is identified financially with the picture industry, is drafting a resolution to be presented to the City Council the purpose of which is to give moral approval to the desire of Philadelphia financial interests, many leaders of industry and the baseball magnates to set their clocks in harmony with those of New York and on the daylight saving schedule of past years.

Reports presented to the board of managers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania indicate that in the centers of population and of business public sentiment is opposed to daylight saving, while in suburban residential sections and in neighborhoods contiguous to the two national league baseball grounds in this city it very generally is in favor of the artificial time.

Though the precedent of the four years which have passed since there was conducted at the Eaglesville Sanitarium services and entertainments for those who are inmates of an institution so richly endowed by the munificence of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, established the date of April 1, there will be a postponement this year until April 15. This is due to the fact that Jules Mastbaum, brother of the benefactor and president of the Stanley Company of America, is sojourning in the picture colonies of California and will not return until the middle of next month.

However, the delay will give opportunity for an elaboration of the program, to be graced this year by the presence of a Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Harmon M. Kephardt, and a man of the ermine of the local courts, Judge John Monaghan, of Court 5. The jurists will make the formal commemorative addresses. In addition there will be presented, in an immense tent to be raised for the occasion, a galaxy of the most brilliant stars of the speaking stage appearing in Philadelphia at the time, and as well two eminent figures from filmdom, a man and a woman, choice of whom is yet to be made. There will be in addition a musical program by two orchestras, that of the Stanton, headed by Sydney Lownestein, and that of the director of the Stanley, conducted by Albert F. Wayne. A special program will be arranged for the invalids who will not be able to participate in the outdoor under tent exercises.

Closing the most phenomenal run and the longest ever consecutively held in this city, "Robin Hood" will wind up its showing at the end of this month. During its eight weeks it played to over 300,000 at each performance and even at the last attracted capacity audiences. It will be followed by "Adam's Rib."

A further investment of at least $10,000,000 of capital by the Stanley Company of America will have been made when at the close of this year there will be completed three great Philadelphia playhouses on the prosecution of which work is now under way. Most prominent of all, of course, is the mammoth Elrae at the southeast corner of Eleventh and Market streets, on the famous Bingham House corner that was, and which is being reared in conjunction with the B. F. Keith interests. It will seat 4,500. In the select Logan residential district on Broad street, near Louden street, there is rising the new Louden Theatre, providing for 3,000, and at Woodland avenue and Sixtieth street, a rapidly rising residential and business section, there is the Benn Theatre, with a capacity of 2,500.

Under the expansion plans made possible by the recently authorized increase of capital from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, Hunt's Theatres, Inc., with executive offices at 1324 Vine street, propose to add to the chain of eighteen now being operated in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The first of the addition was made last week in the annexation of the Palace Theatre of Coatesville, and this new house will be under the management of Frank Platt, who formerly was assistant manager to John Peterson of the Salem, N. J., house. Negotiations are pending for three additional theatres to be included in the near future.

In June there will be opened in the heart of the Cape May Boardwalk section the new Cox Pier and Theatre, seating 1,200, now in the process of construction and which will be devoted to a combination picture theatre and amusement pier. W. C. Hunt is one of the best known members of the exhibitor interests in the Quaker City, having begun his career with the industry twenty years ago when he opened the small theatre, the Bijou Dream, in Camden. Today he is the executive head of the new $1,500,000 corporation.

Maurice Stanford, long field manager for the big chain, has been identified with the industry and is well known as director of Emily Smiley, who made fame in "The Third Degree." Mr. Stanford's work is being supplemented by the work of Earle Western as publicity man.

George Pepper has disposed of his interest in the Lincoln Theatre at Forty-ninth street and Woodland avenue, and the Broadway at Fifty-second and Greenway streets, to John Bell of Camden, N. J., a newcomer in the picture industry. The disposition of the property, consisting of the building of the Broadway Theatre, was made for the sum of $65,000. The Pepper interests in the Lincoln Theatre consisted of a three-year lease, which was transferred to the newcomer.

A. Steifel, who for sixteen years has been actively interested as proprietor of moving pictures in the City of Brotherly Love, has added to his chain the Fairmount Theatre, seating 500, and for which he has been the lessee for over five years. The Fairmount, located at Franklin and Fairmount avenues, was transferred from L. Greenstein, proprietor of the Penn Theatre, to the new owner. For eleven years Mr. Steifel has conducted the Poplar Theatre, Sixth and Poplar streets, having purchased the equities, and previous to that time was the owner of the Crystal Palace, 3900 North Fifth street.

Additions to the chain of four theatres under the control of Green and Altman Syndicate, 608 North Broad street, two new houses, have been listed, one in the Richmond district, known as the Richmond, seating 2,000, and the other the Becker, on Snyder avenue, near Eighteenth street, seating between 1,200 and 1,500.

Pike is manager of the house.

Descutner has secured a new lease on the Capital Theatre at Bellwood, Pa., to run for another year. He states that Bellwood is not a very good picture town, and a man barely makes a living out of the proposition.

Charles Yeagley, of the Liberty Theatre, Confluence, Pa., says that business is getting better at last. He is open three nights a week at present, having formerly been open but two nights.

Phillip Reich, of the Auditorium Theatre, Meyersdale, Pa., has purchased a new Willys-Knight sedan. Says he bought it to drive to the exhibitors' convention in Pittsburgh during April.

Bert Redfoot, manager of the Arcadia Theatre at Windber, was a Pittsburgh visitor a few days ago. Bert gets to the city about once a month.

San Francisco

Jack Brehany, who has been connected with the distribution of "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera" since its initial showing in San Francisco, is mighty proud of the success of this picture, but is still prouder of the fact that he is now a granddad, a daughter having arrived to grace the home of his son, Ed. During the next few days an effort will be made to revive the F. I. L. M. Club, of Albany, in connection with a suggestion which has been made to C. R. Halligan by Joseph Unger, of New York. The Film Club was organized in Albany about four or five years ago and always operated with marked success. Mr. Halligan was its first president. Later on, the club became known as the Film Board of Trade. It has been inactive for the last nine or ten months.

R. A. White, general sales manager for Fox, was in Albany the past week, attending a conference.

Ed McShane, formerly salesman with the Al Lichtman exchange here, has joined the Goldwyn sales force.

Montana

C. W. Koerner of Butte has gone to Portland to take charge of the Associated First National exchange of that city. This is a distinct promotion from the Butte First National exchange, which he established here January 23, 1922. Mr. Koerner was born in New Orleans in 1894. After finishing his high school education he entered Columbia, where he was a student of the journalism department. Instead of following his professional career, like many other newspaper men, he entered the film business via the exhibitor route. At the beginning of the war he sold his theatre to serve as commanding officer, Headquarters Company, 54th Field Artillery. At the end of the war he became a salesman for the Universal Film Company, but was soon promoted to manager of the Universal office in Portland. Later he went to work for the First National at Portland, which office sent him to Montana to establish the Butte exchange for the Associated First National.

The various film men and exhibitors of Butte assembled at the Francis in a banquet to honor Mr. Koerner. A riotously happy program was staged for the event. The entertainers included Lawrence McGinley, of Famous Players; Manager W. J. Sullivan, of the Rialto Theatre; Jack Sullivan, manager of the Fox exchange; J. H. Rue, manager of the Universal, and others who were called upon for impromptu numbers. Songs and toasts closed the evening. Mr. Koerner was presented with a handsome silver humidor. The committee in charge included Lawrence McGinley, Jack Sullivan, W. J. Sullivan and Jack Rue. Covers were placed for 35. Among those present were: Garry Shields, James Griffin, Chris. L. Dahle, M. J. Dunne, William Lloyd, H. J. Binney, Victor Grandpre, R. J. Monohan, F. H. Smith, Ted Hackley, Lou Marcus, J. J. Harrington, O. K. Whipple, Don Isham, C. J. De Maio, E. T. Cale, C. C. Pratt, C. H. Parker, W. M. Breen, O. E. Bourck, F. H. Smith and R. J. Monohan.

Harry Sigmund arrived from Seattle on March 6 to take the place of Mr. Koerner, and so the farewell to Mr. Koerner was also a welcome to Mr. Sigmund, who comes to Butte with the hearty indorsement of the former incumbent of the First National.

M. J. Dunne, manager of Greater Features, Inc., has a branch office established here, with headquarters for this division at Salt Lake.

E. T. Cale, salesman for the First National, recently returned from a tour of Western Montana, including in his itinerary Hamilton, Missoula, Kalispell, Troy and a number of small towns. He reports all the exhibitors decidedly optimistic for the future theatre business and says that the lumber mills of the Northwest are operating with a full force of men that spells prosperity for that section.

Seattle

C. H. Feldman, one of the best known film men in the Northwest, who has hosts of friends everywhere, this week assumed his duties as manager of the Seattle branch, Associated First National. Mr. Feldman comes from two and one-half years as Portland First National manager, where he established a remarkable record. Prior to that time he was special representative out of Seattle for the same company. G. G. Maxey will be assistant manager and have charge of the booking department.

C. W. Koerner, former Butte manager, goes to Portland in Mr. Feldman's place, and Harry Sigmond, special representative out of Seattle, will become Butte manager. SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Exploitation Stunts Cannot Replace Simpler Forms of House Advertising

BECAUSE of the results obtained from the use of stunt exploitation, it would seem that many managers overlook the old-fashioned devices and trust entirely to spectacular appeals. Some managers seem to go even further and to value a stunt according to its cost rather than the return it brings to the box office. The twenty dollar stunt, to them, must be better than the ten dollar stunt, even though some ten dollar stunt may bring more money to the ticket till than a stunt costing two or three times as much.

Properly exploitation should have but one standard of value—results—and the smaller the cost in proportion to the result, the better the stunt.

Work Old Schemes

Because it is more interesting to him, the manager will work several days on an idea to arrest attention in the lobby and will ignore the screen slides which make a direct appeal to the hundreds seated in the theatre in a receptive frame of mind. Even if he uses the screen, he is perhaps prone to trust to the slide furnished by the releasing company instead of seeking to back this up with one or more slides with copy written to appeal particularly to his own patrons.

At best the supplied slide is of general—perhaps even perfunctory—appeal, offering little more than star and title with perhaps one selling slogan. It has no local angle where the home-made slide can be nicely gauged to the response of that particular clientele. Not to use these supplemental slides is to ignore one of the cheapest and at the same time most efficient mediums of publicity.

Foyer Work

The foyer—where there is one—is often another neglected point. Sometimes a banner facing the departing patrons is worth a double banner on the street; particularly if the impression made by the picture just witnessed is a favorable one. The patrons come from the house in a receptive frame of mind. They file past a banner which starts off, "If you liked ——— (the play just witnessed), you will like ——— (the coming feature) even more." The spectators go out determined to come the following week. They might not be sold by a banner displayed from the marquise or arch a week later.

Sometimes it is a special stunt; the flashing of the coming title immediately following the showing of the current feature; the display of a cutout on the stage or perhaps a prologue stunt. These things cost little and appeal to a group one hundred per cent sold on the theatre-going idea.

Do Both

The exploitation stunt, whether it be a street perambulator or a special lobby display is useful in reaching the prospect who has not attended the current performance, and in this it supplements the house advertising, but it cannot sell a certain class of patrons as fully as the screen appeal. It does not catch them at the right moment.

Another type of patrons can be sold only through the newspapers, and to argue that the stunt can replace newspaper advertising is to lose this source of income, which generally is in excess of the cost.

Good exploitation is never limited to a single stunt. It is good only when every angle of audience appeal is fully and carefully developed. Work with the new mediums, but do not neglect the old. They are still good.

Minnie the Penman

Once more Minnie took her pen in hand, but this time it was in Bridgeport, Conn., and she wrote to real men. The letter ran:

Dear ———:

Please don't throw me down because I am a plain girl. You know I still love you. Won't you please meet me in front of 1250 Main street at eight o'clock Sunday evening?

The names were filled in to match the addresses. The street number was that of Poli's Theatre and the date the opening of the picture. Hire girls to write these instead of using the printing press. It is worth the difference in cost, even though you may send out fewer. The same idea can also be applied to the "lost" letter idea.

The theatre also tied the paper to a contest on "How Plain a Pretty Girl Can Look." Entry was made with before and after photographs. It gave something novel in the pretty girl contest idea, and it helped put the receipts up to a point where the manager hated to let the picture go.

Eight Book Windows Gained in Cleveland

Eddie Carrier got eight windows on the Grosset & Dunlap edition of The Christian when the Goldwyn production played the Allen Theatre, Cleveland. One large store went further than the window idea and advertised the sale, with the advice to see the production at the Allen.

Carrier got out 500 "employees" cards in as many shops, and put out 10,000 "ten names" circulars to the school children. More than half of the lot were turned in at the special matinee.

He tied the local good films organizaton, The Cinema Club, to an advertising campaign and filled in with posters, window cards, hangers and other accessory work.

As a result the Allen opened to a huge business which kept up through the week.

Kicked In

Ric'k Ricketson, Paramounteer, dropped in on Otto E. Schmidt, of the Colonial Theatre, Idaho Falls, to tell him a few about Kick In. There was plenty of ice on the streets, so they hired a sleigh and drove it around town, decorated with lithographs.

Each time they passed a kid he was invited to kick in by climbing aboard. They made as much noise as a brass band and cost a lot less. They were even willing to waive union hours, but after they had covered the town competely they gave the horse a rest, figuring that he might belong to the Union if the kids didn't. It's a cheap way to put a ballyhoo over.

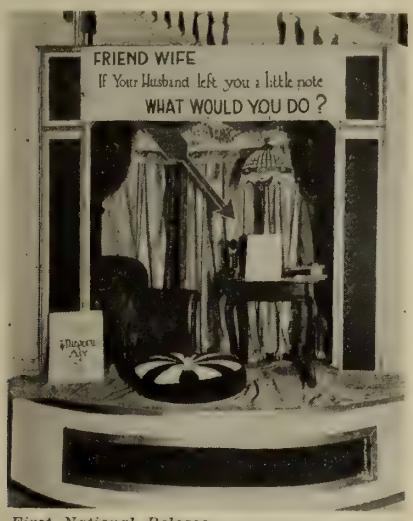
CANOPY AND BUTTERFLY MAKE A STRIKING LOBBY EFFECT

How J. S. Wadsworth, of the Republic Theatre, Great Falls, S. C., got attention for "Rich Men's Wives" with a small investment for material, and the use of his brains. The canopy is suspended from the ceiling of the lobby by fine wires.

Foyer Displays Are Bridgeport Factors

Most of the Poli theatres seem to put stress upon the inside displays as well as the lobby work, and the appeal of the week before is carefully done. Fred Valles has a miniature stage built in the entrance, alongside a stairway, and in this he makes a special display, each week, as shown here.



A First National Release.

THE BRIDGEPORT STAGE

This is a display for The Dangerous Age and calls attention to the note on which the chief dramatic episode hinges. The setting is merely to suggest a comfortable home. The letter itself, in large script, is the chief attractor, and is valuable in that it makes people stop to read because the sign above challenges attention.

In this it has a greater value than the showing for Java Head, which can be taken in with a single glance in passing. This latter is more elaborate, but it is by no means as effective; another proof that cost is not always the gauge of value.

Make them come to a dead halt in front of a display and you clinch the title and the impulse to see the picture. The passing glance may sell, but it does not sell as surely.

A Lighting Hint

One of the prettiest lighting effects lately obtained by Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, employed a cloth of silver cyclorama. This was lighted from the front with a pink flood. Light green spots were thrown from the upper right and lower left hand corners and light blue from the lower right and upper left corners, mingling on the screen with the pink flood. Try it some time.

Another stunt in the same number was flooding the performer on one side with amber and from the other with orange, giving a double shade.

Bread for Banquets

Goldwynner Charles Raymond writes that you can get a hook-up window on The Stranger's Banquet with the old barrel stunt. He worked it in Oelwein, Iowa, where Mrs. R. C. Ingersoll, manager of the Orpheum, wields a mean brush and does all her own sign painting.

You put a loaf of bread at the bottom of a barrel with a sign reading that "Bread is the Stranger's Banquet. Eat McGee's." Then you leave the barrel out in the lobby and everyone crowds around to rubber at it.

An the pleased McGee, or whatever your local baker may be named, gives you a window space and wraps a herald in each package of bread for a couple of days. Pleasant and profitable for all. But Raymond writes as though he invented the stunt for Forbidden Fruit, some time ago. That was old dope when Charlie didn't need a toothpick after his meals because he had no teeth.

Here's another one he pulled. He set the Stranger's Banquet in the window of a furniture store (1), borrowing the silver from a jeweler, who used his window for a reference card, (2) and the napery from a department store, which urged window shoppers to see the furniture window, (3), and if you work it a little further you can get a fourth window through a hook with the grocery.

A STRIKING DESIGN FROM SAN ANTONIO

The Rialto Theatre built up the pillars to a hanging top piece for The Voice from the Minaret, carrying the design into the back wall. A straight arabesque in dull reds, blues and greens will be even more effective than the checkerboard.

Hyman Sells Two With One Hook-up

Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, had Robin Hood and The Christian on successive weeks, so he sold them both through the Grosset & Dunlap photoplay editions. Most of the large department stores, only a short distance from the theatre, made a display of the books for two weeks, and the hook-up cards were devoted to getting the crowds to come to the matinees where possible, as each attraction ran but a single week.

During the Robin Hood week a special drive was made on the classes in the grade schools and a special morning performance was held on Saturday for the pupils of the high schools. This was a decidedly dismal day, rainy and depressing, but the house was well filled.

A REAL HORSE AND A NEAR JOCKEY HELPED THE HOTTENTOT

Of course, they had to put the horse out on the street when the audience wanted to come into the Marshall Theatre, Marshalltown, Ia., but he hung around in the morning and hallyhooed in the afternoon to get the crowds in to be pleased, and they were

Not Even Blizzard Stopped The Flirt

Down in Texas a blizzard is no real aid to the show business. They come infrequently, and when the do every one stays home, as a rule. They broke the rule lately, when The Flirt happened along, because E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, had the co operation of Jack Meredith, special Universal exploiteer, and what one could not think of the other did.

They started teasing with the proverbs, running into direct advertising in increasing sizes until the opening, when the space dropped down again. Meantime, a Flirt sundae had been unloaded on the soda fountains—old stuff, but good until the blizzard made cold drinks out of luck.

There was a drive on window displays and half a page of real estate advertisements headed "Don't flirt with your earnings," the alternative being to invest in real estate. Classified ads called for twenty-five strong men to help handle the crowds The Flirt would attract, and others asked for as many young women of good address to direct the strangers seeking the theatre. Cora Madison, whose street address and phone number were those of the theatre, offered $100 to any one who could tell her how to recover her diary, and there was a full hook-up page with fragments of a portrait and two letters of "Eileen Percy in The Flirt." You had to paste up the picture and put the caption under it, then tell from which ad each section was obtained, mentioning the advertiser, his address and his telephone number. A lot of people went to all that trouble.

Next day a Raffles woman visited all the hook-up stores with free passes, and in the lobby a flirt winked at you over the top of a copy of the book.

It all served to draw extra business where ordinarily there would have been none.

Bamberger Again

Amike Vogel, Paramounteer, sold Vance Minton on the story of the Bamberger To Have and to Hold contest page idea, but he worked it in a new way.

He was trying to sell Other People's Money, so they took a thousand of the money heralds and imprinted them with the statement that it was Nobody's Money, but it was good at the box office of the Columbia Theatre, Erie, Pa., for one free admission to see Jack Holt.

They not only came back, but six out of ten bought in a paid admission and nearly $95 worth of business was the direct return. This is not up to the average in some places. Generally it is seven paid tickets to every ten passes.

Got the Women

Getting the endorsement of the Federation of Women's Clubs was what chiefly sold The Christian at the Lyceum Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., according to Goldwynner Charles Reynolds. The endorsement was paneled in the Lyceum advertisement, which otherwise carried merely the admission prices and house signature. It sold strongly because the letter was a whale of an endorsement.

Covered Teasers with Tack Cards

One interesting point in the campaign of De Sales Harrison, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, on the Christian, was his use of teaser cards. Well in advance cards were put up merely stating that "The Christian is coming." Later boys went over the same route and put up full details where the teasers had been, in most instances covering the teasers. This made a perfect hook-up.

Harrison also gave a special performance to selected clubs, for the sake of the criticisms to be obtained, and mailed out 2,000 stickers and an equal number of personal endorsements, the latter going to the swagger clubs, as distinguished from the uplifters bidden to the special performance. A huge float carried a book ballyhoo, four horses being used, and much use was made of the endorsements from the special performance. Backed by a good foyer and a lobby dress, which have been shown, it ran the receipts up.

World Applauded

For The World's Applause, De Sales Harrison, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, persuaded a tire company to alter its sign to read that their tires deserved The World's Applause. It was a modest little thing only about 22 feet wide, but it helped. A cooperative page announced that the advertisers deserved The World's Applause, and the various merchants rode in on the same idea.

The lobby display was two miniature stages with figures posed in tableaux from the play.

In Medicine Hat

Medicine Hat, where the weather comes from, made a celebration when The Old Homestead came to town. John Finlay, of the Monarch Theatre, persuaded the merchants to make it a big bargain week, and then got the newspapers, in view of the extra merchant advertising, to make a play on the event.

They rolled into town to buy the bargains, and most of them took in the show.

Picture Player Is Silk Show Feature

During the recent Silk Show in New York City Malinson made a hook-up with Poor Men's Wives whereby Consuelo Flowerton, of the picture, appeared in the Malinson booth in a display of silks, and in return the attraction, then at the Criterion, was given a fine display card as shown in the cut.

MISS FLOWERTON APPEARS

All of this would have small bearing upon exploitation other than that it offers a suggestion to the smaller houses. Get a girl who looks something like a star you are about to play and let her appear in a miniature fashion show at any local event, hooking up to some merchant for the costumes. Probably you can get him to take up the cost of the display if you supply the idea and the cards.

Caveman Window on Adam's Rib Date

Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, made a hook-up with a sporting goods store in Los that is within the reach of any exhibitor in a town where a dealer has even one gun to sell.

Crude bows and arrows, stone headed clubs, skins and pottery were displayed with modern firearms, hatchets and camping goods. The sign tells that "the cave men and women you'll see in Adam's Rib" at the theatre "fought and hunted with these crude weapons. In striking contrast is the perfect equipment afforded the sportman of today, a complete stock of which is carried" by the advertising store.

Anyone can get a few springy boughs for the bows, and straight sticks for the arrows, fastening stone to crotched sticks with leather shoe laces for the clubs. It is simple and very effective.

MORE OF THAT "FOOLISH" STUNT OF LEON BAMBERGER'S

Macomb, Ill., is not a particularly large place, but more than 700 lists of words were turned in, with a gross of 105,000 words, on the word-forming contest, and it brought Manager Andrew Hainline the usual result of crowded houses. It's good stuff.

Pigeon Prizes

Getting away from the book and ticket prizes, Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, and the management of the Premier Theatre, Valparaiso, Ind., offered a pair of pigeons in a different sort of contest.

They were putting over The Ghost Breaker, and the press stories told how pigeons had been Wallace Reid's hobby, adding that a pair of prize birds would be given the kid writing the best letter of condolence to the dead player's widow. The letters were to be sent to the contest editor and only the winners sent Mrs. Reid, with explanation.

It not only put the picture over, but it brought out many naive tributes to the actor.

Wrote Prize Menus from Hook-up Page

All the Goldwynners are talking about something to eat in connection with The Stranger's Banquet, but they do not all say the same thing.

One of the best of the stunts was worked by William H. Branch for the Blue Mouse Theatre, Minneapolis.

He hooked food purveyors to a co-operative page in the Evening Tribune and then offered a prize for the most attractive menu to be composed solely of foods advertised on that page. Cash prizes of $10 and $5 were backed by 50 pairs of tickets.

A New Slant

This gives a new and valuable slant on co-operatives, and can be applied to other titles, though none of the current titles will work quite as well as The Stranger's Banquet.

And getting the page of ads enabled the agent to slip over two Sunday specials in addition to all the talk the menus made.

NO HOUSING PROBLEM WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

There were castles on every cliff, according to Ray Beall. He had three in the narrow lobby of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., and he painted them all himself. He could have built a city had he been given a wider lobby.

Gelabert Was Victim of His Fake Suicide

Jaime Gelabert, of the Victory Gardens, Santurce, Porto Rico, used a modification of the suicide stunt when he played Crazy to Marry. He is well known on the Island and newspaper readers were startled by a headline announcing that he had been drowned while on a joy ride to the bay. Reading the small type they discovered that he was drowned in his tears of joy when he was notified that he was to be given the Arbuckle picture on a certain day. They enjoyed the sell and most of them later enjoyed the paper, not being bothered by the reformers down there, apparently.

Mr. Gelabert had read that the fake suicide was dangerous, but using his own name and handling it as a joke, he used the same stunt without the slightest danger of a kickback.

He writes that business is not good just now in P. R., but that he is getting a little more than his share through exploitation stunts. He used a cutout of Mae Murray for Broadway Rose, giving her a crown of electric lights and retaining the color rays on the poster to carry on the effect. That style of cutout was worth a lot of money in Santurce.

He gets most of his stunts from this department because he argues that while he might think up something, it is easier to turn over the pages and select a stunt, reserving his brain effort for other angles. Getting money is a regular job down there and he needs his brain power for the financial angles and thanks his brother exhibitors for the suggestions which save him time and trouble.

Made Three Castles for Tudor Knights

Ray Beall has recently been transferred to the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., replacing A. C. Cowles, called to the Atlanta headquarters of Southern Enterprises.

His first big job was to put over When Knighthood was in Flower, and he did it in an eminently businesslike way, trusting to no single stunt, but hitting on all cylinders.

Starting his advertising on the testimonial copy, he tied the public librarian to a distribution of 1,000 heralds as inserts in books taken out.

Then he sought in interest the principals of the schools in the story. He was not able to obtain permission to address the literature classes, as was his aim, but the story was brought to the attention of the pupils by their teachers.

Thorough Campaign

He put out eight 24-sheets in the residential section and 100 window cards in the business district, then raised an oilcloth banner over the entrance with ornamental shields on either side, parts of which show in the photograph of the lobby front. The shields were blue and red with gold lions and fleurs de lys. The banner itself was a cream ground lettered in red and white.

One hundred and fifty leading citizens were given a pre-view and their comments used in the advertising, and 500 special sales letters were sent out to a select list.

For the narrow lobby he used wood wings in front of which were set compo board profile castles. The castle on the backing was set above the painted pedestal and was molded from papier mache, all of the painting being done by Mr. Beall. The tournament scene just below was cut from a large poster. It was an unusually pretty front, suggestive to others.

Purses Were Real

Real purses, costing three cents apiece and stuffed with newspaper and a money herald on Nobody's Money were dropped all over Boise, Idaho, for the benefit of the Pinney Theatre. There were 500 purses in the job lot, and since it had the town talking, the stunt was well worth its cost.

Voice Did Barking

After urging his patrons to "Listen for the Voice from the Minaret," I. E. Phelps installed a couple of magnavox machines, one over the theatre and the other on the street corner, concealing the device. They were hooked together and one operator was able to bark at the crowds day and evening, getting a lot of extra business for the Talmadge feature.

REVIVING OLD STUNTS FOR THE NINETY AND NINE

The cross arm and the locomotive cutout have been used on other railroad pictures, but they work just as well on the Vitagraph story of the forest fire, and this display did a lot for the Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, on this run.

Marshall Field Has Large Book Display

One of the largest book hook-ups of record is reported from Chicago, where Walter D. Nealand, Goldwynner, sold Marshall Field the idea of a special drive on the Grosset & Dunlap editions of The Christian and The Stranger's Banquet, attractions at the Chicago Theatre.

A section of the book department 30 by 60 feet was set apart for the display, and boxed in with the front, as shown in the cut. Trailers for the two productions, a special film, known as The Celluloid Salesman, and two comedies, were run through a portable projector and at stated hours the Goldwynner lectured the crowd.

Grosset & Dunlap and the store spent about $1,500 on the display, which will later be used for other reprints, and the store devoted a considerable portion of its space in the newspapers to the pictures and the books.

Some time ago we printed a letter from the head of the book department of this huge store telling of the good results obtaining from a tie-up, but this is a more practical testimony than letter writing. It means real four-figure money spent by one of the largest retail merchandising organizations in the country. Tell that to your local book store man when he hems and haws about making display of half a dozen books. Tell him that Grosset & Dunlap reprints are paying the rent for hundreds of shops all over the country.

Nealand also used the menu tops recently employed in Milwaukee and hooked a taxicab company to a new rate card in which Marshall Nielan advised the rider to tell the driver to go to the Chicago Theatre. In Chicago 150 restaurants were supplied with menu tops, 30,000 slips being printed up.

It should be easy to argue your local bookseller into handling the Grosset & Dunlap photoplay editions of popular reprints. This shows the special section set apart by Marshall Field, of Chicago, for The Christian and The Stranger's Banquet.

Paramount Cashier Planned This Lobby

John (once Max) Rosenfield, of Claud Saunders' staff, says this lobby idea on The Covered Wagon was planned by Edward A. Brown, cashier of the Famous Players-Lasky, but perhaps Max—er—John—merely wanted to touch the box office for an advance on his salary and is trying to smear Brown up.

Anyhow, it is a good lobby and a simple one to make. The stockade matches the block house box office, and the ticket receptacle is masked in with slabs, while the doorman is dressed as a pioneer. The wagon is a compoboard profile, unless you want to make a real covered wakon, and the tepee is as real as you can make it. The tree is thrown in for good measure and is not essential to the general scheme.

If you want to change, you can sell the tickets from the covered wagon and shoot the block house.

Almost Beat Norma

Norma Talmadge in The Voice from the Minaret holds the record at the Pheil Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., but The Hottentot came within 300 patrons of her record because Manager W. J. Melvin got out after the first show each night the preceding night and told the audience he had a real treat in store for them.

Hotel clerks were suborned with passes to boost the attraction to guests, and heralds were placed in all key boxes. There was also an automobile perambulator.

HOW PARAMOUNT'S CASHIER WOULD GUARD THE MONEY

Dr. Jack Tonic Was Good for Business

Having heard that other managers of the Southern Enterprises had acquired large takings on Dr. Jack, A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., decided that he should be able to get some coin with the comedy.

Outside of breaking all records by doing double his usual business, he did not do much, but the flock of busted records looks pretty good to him.

He was to open the picture on a Wednesday and the Friday before the Rotary Club of Gadsden held a ladies night, and three times a hotel bellhop paged "Dr. Jack." The third time the president told him gently but with forbidding firmness that Dr. Jack was not on the guest list and would he kindly go to Gehenna away from there. Then a local physician who looks something like Lloyd when he has his glasses on, dropped in to ask if anyone had been inquiring for Dr. Jack, mentioning that he would be found at the Imperial Theatre the following Wednesday. The crowd caught the idea of the sell and roared its delight.

Teaser ads in the newspapers brought a lot of appointment calls for Dr. Jack, and the day the picture opened a boy went around town with a half mile of bandage on one foot asking if anyone could direct him to the famous physician.

The lobby was dressed as a physician's office with three pseudo patients who every now and then would hobble into the theatre to come out smiling and tell the bystanders of the wonders of Dr. Jack's cures.

The Kiwanis and Rotary clubs were guests on succeeding nights and every physician in town received a letter of the usual sort. Here are three new stunts which helped to break one complete set of records.

J. C. Hewitt writes that he has discovered the shipping receipt for the Chaplin Autogobile. It was sent to Granby, Mo. Now, will Granby be so good as to tell us where it went from there? It would be interesting to know the ultimate fate of this early exploitation stunt

KASHIN HAS A BRAND NEW STUNT: A CUTOUT WITH A VOICE

The black circle in the centre of the cutout of Harold Lloyd is a phonograph horn and the other end is tied to a phonograph laughing record. Better than a band for a ballyhoo and the record costs only seventy-five cents. It made money for the Rialto Theatre, Newark.

An Ample Campaign Helped Knighthood

Knowing that he would have to do a lot of extra work to get the most out of When Knighthood was in Flower, H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., did plenty.

He started well in advance to tell about the cost, magnificence and splendor of the production, and began his newspaper advertising several days ahead of his usual time.

Three weeks in advance he set painted shields in the lobby, lettered for the attraction and got a banner 20 feet by four in the courthouse square at the same time.

Several days in advance "Henry Tudor, Rex" announced the marriage of his daughter, Mary, to Charles, Duke of Suffolk, adding that they would be at home at the Empire Theatre on specified dates. These were printed in royal purple on good stock, a four-page sheet with only the first page printed. A small crest adorned the top of the sheet and was repeated on the envelope flap. There was no advertising on the square envelopes, and they were all addressed by hand, and neatly, to ensure opening with interest. One thousand were sent out.

Letters were sent to school teachers giving the opinion of a local authority and offering to collaborate should the teacher addressed desire to bring her class in a body.

A composition contest was landed on one of the papers and the prices were in cash and copies of the book. The books were purchased as the only way to get the local store to stock a few. It had sold out on the original edition years before and did not renew. Buying the books also won the privilege of placing book markers in every book sold before and during the run.

Three hundred first performance passes brought a two-page co-operative display which gave the house the centre space without other cost.

Bucking a show sponsored by the local post of the Legion, the house went over the top for four days, and at advanced prices, which generally is a deterrent in the South.

Phonograph Record Put Over Dr. Jack

M. A. Kashin has not been heard from as much since he went over to Newark to run the Rialto Theatre, but he comes to the footlights again with a new idea destined to be widely copied.

For Dr. Jack he had a cutout made, but touched up to show a hand holding a megaphone to the lips. This really was the horn of a phonograph extended from the tone arm by means of a rubber hose. A small boy sat in the cab and ran a portable phonograph with the Okeh "laughing" record, with the result that Lloyd went rollicking down the street. There was little expense attached the stunt, for the cab and phonograph were borrowed, but the boy cost two dollars and the record represents an outlay of seventy-five cents, which is not great when it is considered that it is better than a brass band for getting attention.

The beauty of this stunt is that it is capable of being put to almost any use. The laughing record serves for comedy, but a saxophone record could have been used for Clarence, a straight cutout can sing the plugger song and at a pinch the new, make-your-own records can be used.

The horns can be replaced by tin funnels where they cannot be had; though in these radio days they can be borrowed easily, and a Y connection can be made by any tinsmith to give a voice to a cutout on either side of the cab. Use a large rubber hose as will fit on the tone arm, and the tube will take up all the sway of the vehicle.

Mr. Kashin has made an important contribution to exploitation ideas. Do not overlook this bet.

Jackie Kicked In

Because the Springfield, Ohio, Sun was starting a contribution for a day nursery about the time Ed. Paull, of the Regent Theatre, had Oliver Twist, he arranged to have Jackie supposedly wire a starting contribution of $25 to the fund, and all of the local kids wanted to follow his example. He also put an iron pot into the lobby for contributions, and set his screen to work. The "more" cutout would have been better than the pot, but he didn't happen to think of it.

In return the newspaper naturally had to play up Jackie, and it also ran the First National tabloid version of the story.

Jackie put over the drive and the drive put over Jackie and both sides are happy.

TWO DISPLAYS FROM THE HOWARD THEATRE, ATLANTA, ON "THE CHRISTIAN"

On the left is shown the foyer display for the week before the run. This faces the departing crowds in the brilliantly lighted inner lobby. Just what the mission design has to do with the London locale is more or less of a mystery. On the right is the lobby display the week the picture was run. This does not show up very clearly, but large set pieces with cutouts frame the posters.

Society Models Put Fashion Show Over

Save this item, for perhaps some day you will be up against the same trouble, and it will come in handy. Maj. I. C. Halloway, of Columbus, Ga., wanted a fashion show and approached the local merchants.

That's when the cold wave hit. The store manager put the boots to the idea on the plea that no one would purchase the costumes after they had been used on the stage. That did not worry Major Halloway at all. He engaged one of the smart set, and put the matter into her hands. She went after the same merchant and got his enthusiasm worked up to the point where he sent in a $6,000 order to New York for stuff to be worn by the three society girls who consented to act as models. Hats and shoes were added by other stores and the three stores and the theatre jazzed up the advertising. Also Major Halloway spent all of ten dollars on stuff for the stage.

It shot the house business up 75 per cent and more than that, before the show was over every costume had been sold for full price, for the buyers had not the slightest objection to wearing a gown worn a few times by the girls who posed as models. The shoe and hat stores also reported important increases in their sales and the three collaborators were so well pleased with the results that they gave each of the models a complete outfit, and they already have their applications in for the next show.

If it is not worked more than four times a year—once for each season—the fashion show is the best bet in any small town and most large ones, and Major Halloway shows the way to overcome the one objection. Get the right models.

He worked the stunt for My American Wife, which is cleaning up down South.

SURE, GOOD MEALS COME HIGH. THIS BANQUET IS TEN FEET UP

The over-the-door display of Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, for The Stranger's Banquet. The artist has shown everything but the banquet—just two candlesticks and a centrepiece. Not even a salt cellar, but the patrons were attracted.

Texas House Front Is Food for Wonder

When Omar the Tentmaker was played at the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas, the house front was a tent effect which looks a lot more like a large American flag than it does like a tent. It fooled the press agent for First National, who hazards the guess that it might have been in honor of some patriotic week.

We believe it is intended to be a tent, but the striped and a starry background for the title leaves it open to a guess as to whether the management thought that Guy Bates was a new Legion Post.

Portland Raffles Was a Sourdough

Because the Shipman production of The Grub Stake is an Alaskan story, they used a "sourdough" for a Raffles when the Shipman picture played the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, with Nell Shipman making personal appearances. A sourdough is a prospector, who is supposed to carry a lump of old dough in his pocket to make the yeast for his next batch of baking, and they are common enough in Seattle and Portland.

This one was no piker. He carried a nugget and four twenty dollar gold pieces to hand out, and all you had to do to get it was to tap him on the shoulder with a copy of the Portland News and remark: "At the end of the rainbow, wuz it?" If only one person made the identification, the nugget and $80 went to him, if there were two, the first got the nugget and $40 and the second the other $40. Three brought the nugget and $20 to the first, $40 to the second and $20 to the third, and if there were four the first got the nugget and one gold piece and the others one each.

It got the front page every day, with a turn to an inside page, and there was a lot about the Blue Mouse and the American release as well as about his travels. It was a big campaign, because the prizes were made worth while and gave the paper something to brag about, but the publicity was worth many times what the stunt cost.

A First National Release

IS THIS FRONT A TENT OR AN AMERICAN FLAG

We believe it is intended for a tent, but the First National man says it is a flag. The stars certainly carry out that suggestion. It is the way the Queen Theatre, Austin, Texas, put over Omar, the Tentmaker.

Suggested a Feature to Ride on the Story

Practical press work was exemplified in Louisville recently when Fred Campbell, of the National Theatre, sold one of the local papers the idea of a "Famous Heroines in Song and Story" feature series, to be played up as a circulation feature.

That was why Lorna Doone was the first and foremost heroine, and Campbell loaned them a cut to make that article more interesting.

Papers are looking for good ideas and would just as soon pay for them in space as in cash—perhaps rather.

Prize Jokes

Fred V. Greene, Jr., of the Rialto Theatre, Jamaica, N. Y., is giving prizes for the best jokes contributed to his program each week. He prints them with the name of the joke-smith, thus evading responsibility, and a pass is given for each joke used. It makes for interest, and as the passes are singles, they come back with some paid admissions. Fred is a regular Bamberger on the subject of free tickets, for he knows that the free pass really spells profit.

Found a New Angle for Little Church

Showing The Greatest Picture of The Age—

"THE LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER"

A Beautiful Drama Set In The Bethlehem Of To-Day, Wherein A Modern Eve Tempts A Modern Adam. Every Man, Woman And Child Should See This Wonderful Production.

A Warner Bros. Release

THE REVIVAL CARD

Five hundred of these were put around the neighborhood, and a revival always pulls down South. In addition he used the regular paper from ones to 24-sheets, and in the lobby used a miniature church, electrically lighted, along with some cutouts. For street work a bridal couple were sent around in a decorated car with a sign reading, "Just married and on our way to the Daisy Theatre to see The Little Church Around the Corner."

Mr. Kauffman writes that Zerilla and Maceri, the managers, are fully sold on exploitation, and have used a lot of stunts with decided profit. By saving stunting for the big stuff, they get results when most needed.

Doubles Helped

When the Colonial Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., ran When Knighthood was in Flower, a merchandise prize of $250 was offered the best double for Miss Davies, and of course the newspaper hooked in had to run pictures of Miss Davies for the benefit of the contestant and pictures of the contestants for the benefit of the circulation, so the house got plenty of space which cost it nothing. One layout was a full page of 25 portraits.

John G. Rosenfield does not tell how the Colonial got the $250 merchandise prize. That part of it sounds rather Golemish.

Lectures Pay

Lectures are the latest stunt of W. J. Melvin, of the Pheil Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla. W. J. Melvin found that talks from the stage did well and, to broaden the scope, he bannered an automobile and toured the town with a megaphone, giving brief talks where he could catch the crowd, including the close of the public band concert in the park.

His message was to the effect that One Week of Love was the cat's beavers, and a lot of persons must have believed him, for the business was at a 60 per cent increase for a cost of only $15 above the usual advertising costs.

Chaplin and MacLean Form Comedy Team

Of course all the Chaplin impersonators in the country are getting their old jobs back with The Pilgrim going the rounds, but Julius K. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, added a MacLean to the Chaplin when he doubled Bellboy 13 with The Pilgrim.

A First National Release.

THE NEW COMEDY TEAM

He got hold of an old horse-drawn fire truck, stripped of its ladders, and let the Mac Lean impersonator drive this around town, holding the lines in one hand and the bellrope in the other. The Chaplin "raced" the outfit, kicking his hat along in front of him in his vain endeavors to recover it. Then he would loudly announce that he had won the race over the fire department and Mac Lean would come off his perch to argue the question and putt some comedy work. It made a decidedly effective ballyhoo and had a marked effect on business, which was bound to be good anyhow, but was better for the extra advertisement.

To help along, all hotel guests were given a card in their key boxes, requesting them: "Do not call for Bellboy 13. He is doing his stuff at the Rialto Theatre this week, along with Chaplin in The Pilgrim." It served to hand the guests a laugh while telling them where to go if they wanted the best show.

Way Down East still holds the record at the Rialto, but it had a narrow squeak when this combination came along.

A PRETENTIOUS DISPLAY ON THE CHRISTIAN FROM THE STATE THEATRE, PITTSBURGH

On the left is shown the lobby, with an illuminated title sign in the centre, paintings above and below. On the left is a hand-painted six sheet (shown in the smaller cut above), to balance the six-sheet lithograph on the right. On the right of the lobby cut is the display of the Grosset & Dunlap photoplay edition of the book in the window of J. R. Weldon & Co., one of a dozen similar hook-ups.

A Rocking Runaway for The Hottentot

Mounting the cutout from the 24-sheet showing MacLean and Miss Bellamy on The Hottentot, was the chief house appeal on the First National's big laugh when it played the Liberty Theatre, Seattle.

LeRoy V. Johnston mounted the cutout on a rocking base, pivoting it at the centre and supplying the power with a low geared motor. It looked more like the nursery product than a steeplechaser, but it had movement, and that is what counted. It gave the idea of action, and the crowd went in and decided that the poster was no liar. As a matter of fact you can't get a poster that is funny enough to fit The Hottentot, but this helped. It was lighted at night with reflectors on the marquise.

A First National Release

BASEBALL IS NEAR, SO THEY MADE THE HOTTENTOT A PITCHER

The Liberty Theatre, Seattle, mounted the cutout on a rocker base and then hooked in a motor to keep it in motion. It is a simple, but effective, animation, and helped to bring the crowd shown in the lower half of the picture.

Helped Miss Doone

Getting his print of Lorna Doone in advance of the showing, Roy C. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., gave a special show for the Better Films Committee and then sold their endorsement to the library for a display of stills and an announcement card. These were shown both in the entrance and in the reading room.

Then he arranged to give a special price to all children who came between 3:30 and 3:45 on the afternoon of Washington's Birthday and filled a swing show while keeping the children out of the way of the holiday-making adults. This matinee was announced in all of the schools and was treated as an event.

Coin Got Coin

That money begets money is an aphorism Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., firmly believes in, and he wants real money; not the stage variety.

On From Rags to Riches he got 85 new one-dollar bills from the bank. Some of these he used to frame the stills in the lobby frames, under the glass, others he placed on the glass of the box office window and the remaining ones were used to alibi a few sacks of washers which formed part of the lobby display.

This design was a scales with one pan containing an old suit of clothes and the other showing the money bags.

Mr. White says that real money is one thing his patrons cannot pass without giving the once over, and that it works better for him than even the toy railroad.

ANOTHER USEFUL IDEA FROM MORRISON, OF THE MEMPHIS

The frame is outlined in gilt with spots of as many colors as possible in the mat. Prismatic colors will be best, if you can get them. The backing is a figured wall paper, with a cutout from the 24-sheet for My American Wife.

Society Stunt Gets Worse Than Red Ink

Eddie Bonns surely started something when he broke in with the Brothers Under the Skin League. The "society" stuff is getting more prevalent than the red ink extra was in its palmiest days, and that is second only to newsboy parades.

The latest is the Adam's Rib Society "for combating the pernicious interference of pedagogue bachelors, antiquated spinsters and for the elimination of the Flapper Mother from the home."

John P. McConville, the Boston Paramounteer, sprang it on Lowell when the picture played the Palace Theatre, and S. G. Sladdin, of Cleveland, is copying the idea in his section.

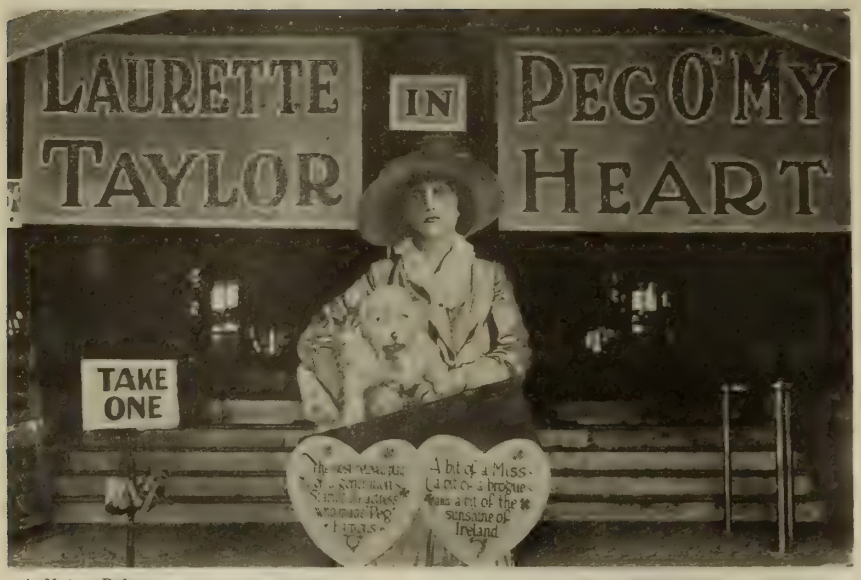
The society stunt is becoming an epidemic in spite of the fact that it no longer enjoys the bloom of youth.

Still Helpful

The reminiscence idea, originated by the late Max Doolittle for The Great Moment is working well for The Sin Flood in the smaller towns, the angle being the writer's moment of greatest peril to hook to the situation in which the players in the film find themselves.

In Fargo, N. D., a standing two column head was used for several days on the contest, which cost only $10 in prizes, split three ways. This worked out at less than a dollar a column; which is pretty cheap for pure reading notices.

Using the copy prepared by the veteran John C. Green, of Guelph, helped the Capitol Theatre, Kitchener, Ont. This was the tribute to Wallace Reid, which we printed at the time. Setting this in a black border brought the Capitol a splendid three-day business.



A Metro Release

THIS 24-SHEET WAS MADE TO HELP THE EXPLOITEERS

All you have to do is to cut it out and mount it, and there it stands, ready lettered and all. Good on the billboards and better in the lobby. It permitted Charles E. Sasseen, of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, to keep his costs down to seven dollars.

Passed for Widows Helped The Flirt

H. B. Clarke, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, tied up to the Piggly Wiggly stores when it came to selling The Flirt. He gave the stores a number of passes to be given widows making purchases to the extent of the price of a ticket, explaining that widows were notorious flirts. It got a laugh, some business for the stores and more for the theatre.

The window displays were supposed to show the front of the Strand Theatre, with a billboard for the attraction and a mechanical figure which is a sort of trade-mark for the stores.

He repainted a curtain for the lobby display, and had a cut-out of The Flirt, with a flasher lamp in one eye to do the winking necessary to support her reputation. It did not cost a lot, but Mr. Clarke felt that the picture would sell without a heavy investment and he saved the money. That he was not dreaming is proven by the fact that receipts went more than $1,000 above the average, and gave the best business the Strand has enjoyed in the past couple of years.

Just as a by-product a window was hooked to the books and more than 150 copies were sold during the display.

Playing on feminine curiosity, the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, used sealed letters for a mailing list, the envelopes being printed up: "For married women only. Don't show this to your husband." Inside was the advice to the reader not to take her husband with her when she went to see The Dangerous Age.

The stunt is first cousin to the "We dare you to show this to your wife," and rather newer.

Marriage Helped to Stir Buddy Stuart

Buddy Stuart, who is Herschel's brother, is the Boston Goldwynner. He ran over to New York recently and got married at the Little Church Around the Corner (stealing Warner Brothers' stuff), and then hustled back to Boston and put over The Christian at the Park Theatre to a $1.65 top, including the tax.

His campaign included an extra big newspaper run, which was not without its influence on the length of the reviews; 180 24-sheets, mostly with electric lights; 2,000 block twos, 2,000 regular ones, 10,000 window cards and 500 cloth banners, 2½ by 4 feet. The banners were for the street cars, and the paper was spread out into the suburbs for a 25-mile radius.

He used 10,000 door knobs, 20,000 regular heralds and 20,000 special eight-page heralds for package enclosures, along with 7,000 stickers.

Fifteen thousand bookmarks were put into the library books and 10,000 announcement cards were sent to a mailing list.

He made a special lobby display with paintings, got the Mayor and a lot of public officials to the first showin, stuck out a new electric sign and hooked seven book windows on the photoplay edition.

And they are still coming. If Buddy had been a bigamist we bet they would have needed a circus tent. Just goes to show how matrimony affects some people. Some men lose all their pep after they get hitched. It hits Buddy differently.

Stole Hearst Window

Out in Los Angeles, as part of an advertising-circulation campaign for Hearst's International Magazine, they hooked the Sun Drug Company to a display of articles advertised in the magazine with a huge globe to give point to the slogan "It enriches the globe."

Naturally, much of the stuff was for the toilet, so that gave a suggestion to Charles Condon, of the Louis B. Mayer staff, and he smacked a sign right under the globe which read "This is the Dangerous Age for your health and beauty. Hearst's International invites your inspection of the abundance of reliable information therein contained." Backed by a couple of stills, the production got the lion's share of the display.

A Universal Release

PIGGLY WIGGLY STORE SOLD THE FLIRT FOR THE STRAND THEATRE, IN MEMPHIS

Of course, H. B. Clarke, the manager, did his share, as the lobby display on the left will show, but the chain store gave special windows, as seen on the right, and distributed tickets to widows, because widows are supposed to be more flirtatious than other persons. Maybe it is not true, but it gave the town a laugh and they got another from The Flirt.

Old Display Made Better Than New

J. M. Edgar Hart has gone from the Palace Theatre, El Paso, but this is one of the displays he made just before he left. It is mostly old material, save for the cut-outs, but you could not tell it without the aid of a map.

The pillars are the pasteboard tubes on which newsprint paper is shipped instead of the old iron tubes. These were gilded and no one recognized them as having been used for The Bonded Woman. The cross piece was also cut from compo board used on other displays, and the velvet drapes are part of the old box curtains.

The only new material is the paint and a set of cut-outs from one of the lithos for Trifling Women, which gives Stone standing in the doorway of the dungeon and Ramon Navarro and Barbara La Marr more or less registering surprise. It is not exactly true to film, but close enough, and it made for interest. The cross piece was painted with the title and the names of the co-stars. Lights under the ceiling were thrown upon the display. The cash outlay was only $15, which is getting a lot for the money.

We are going to miss J. M. Edgar until he gets set in his new charge.

Hart also used some teasers, parodying the Dr. Jack style of some weeks before and headed "I am NOT Dr. Jack." It got more attention than usual, because people wanted to see if Dr. Jack was coming back and stick around to be sold on the Metro.

A Metro Release

HOW J. M. EDGAR HART USED UP SOME OLD MATERIAL

The cutouts are new, but the purple drapes are from the house and the columns are from the display for The Bonded Woman and were usd to roll newsprint paper on. It was remade into a flash for Trifling Women at the Palace, El Paso.

Made the "Colyum"

Leslie F. Whelan, Washington Paramounteer, broke into the humor department of the Washington Times.

He wrote the humorist that now that Tutankhamen's heart and liver had been found, he thought it would be a good stunt to conduct a search for Adam's Rib.

Get it?

And Adam's Rib was right there at a local house.

What do you want to bet that Whelan didn't send a box of cigars along with the note? It was worth more than that..

Modern Improvements

Word comes from Medinah that Mohammed's coffin did a triple somersault lately. Probably that was because of the news from Bridgeport, Conn.

The Voice from the Minaret was at Dawe's Theatre, and Manager Dawe got hold of what is said to be the Mohammedan prayer, in Arabic, and this was ground out on the victrola and relayed to the sidewalk through a magnavox. The machine was sent into a minaret.

It was effective, but not accurate. The voice of the muezzin calls to prayer, but he does not recite the fateh, the call being a certain number of repetitions of the phrases "God is great" and "Come to prayer." That is why Mohammed did the flop, over in Medinah, though in Bridgeport they did not know the difference and packed into Dawe's Theatre—in bunches.

Mostly One Sheets

For Trifing Women, Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., pinned most of his faith to fourteen one-sheets, in three styles, mounted on compo board and hung from the front and sides of the marquise. He also used a peacock, which looks as though it might have been on the job for Mae Murray in an earlier day, but Trifling Women are apt to be peacocks, so it was all right. Anyhow, it got the money.

Human Dummy Was Window Display

No theatre card went with the display in a trunk store in Louisville during the run of Bellboy 13 at the National Theatre, but the title was displayed on the entire front of a suitcase, and a human dummy was dressed as a bell boy with a huge 13 on his badge.

The dummy was paid by the theatre, and he could stand for an hour without a quiver of his eyelids and then relax for a minute and do it all over again. The display caught the crowd in sufficient numbers to make himself worth his salary to the theatre, with his sales value to the store thrown in for good measure. He also brought some newspaper notice of the about-town type, which is always better than the stuff in the theatre department for ticket selling purposes.

Fred Campbell, of the National, also worked a window for Lorna Doone, hooking in to the books. A heart-shaped card was the main display, with "Take a book along" for the slogan. Seven large stills helped to sell the play.

who wrote the Sheik" and further works this idea in his top lines which tell that in The Sheik the man sought the woman, while the woman seeks the man in Burning Sands. This is about the only sales copy he uses, but it must have gone over, for it is the best line to work on this story, which was intended to ride on the earlier success. This is 175 lines by three. A larger four column space is given The World's a Stage, this dropping 150 lines. This is less convincing, but the title is trusted to put it over, in combination with the author's name. The only sales talk is the "refreshingly different" mortised into the cut. The designs are up to the Washington average, where sales talk does not seem to be needed as much as in some other towns, but even at that, we think that this copy falls short of what would sell best. Smaller cuts and more argument—where there is anything to be said, would perhaps influence the many visitors to the Capital.

Puts Over Tess on the Remade Angle

About the best handling of Tess of the Storm Country comes from Pat Argust, of the Rialto, Colorado Springs. For one thing Pat announces that because of the press of patrons, he is going to give an extra de luxe performance. Extra performances are not uncommon, but this is the first time we recall an announcement of an extra de luxe performance. He gets the orchestra in at one o'clock and has two big shows in the afternoon and two in the evening, with a supper swing at five. But most of the selling is done on the angle that this represents the best play the star ever used in a new and most carefully done production. In every advertisement he drove this fact home, not so much to tell them it was not the old production as to stress the importance of a play so well worthy of being remade in the light of the most recent developments in photography. He takes large spaces, with plenty of white, and illustrates with plan book material. The big splash is a drop of 19 inches down six columns.

Ruff Makes Strip Beat Larger Space

This 100 by 7 display from the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., looks better than a larger space on the same attraction. It is simple and open, and it gets the eye and the interest at the same moment. This interest is capitalized by the well written copy and the sale is quickly made. Probably it could have sold on this sketch and the title, but there are three good punch paragraphs to back it up, and if there was not a large sale it was because there was no money in town. The larger space probably was taken to use the second cut, but it does not sell as well because it lacks the appeal this cut makes. It is one of the few examples in which a cut attractor really possesses a sales value of its own and does more than merely bring the eye to the copy.

Dick Has Changed But Still Sells

It takes the lettering to tell that the person in the drawing for the display of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, is Barthelmess. It does not look much like him and this looks as though he had a deformed neck, but the cut probably gets attention and helps sell the names. We regret to note the revival of the scratched lettering. There was a drop in this for a time, but it seems to have been revived for Fury, and we do not like it any better than we did last time. Wriggly lines across a space do not suggest fury or anything else, and the white in the black detracts from the value of the letter. In an advertisement a solid black is the only thing to use—unless you are using all white letters. To streak lines across is to cut down the sales value and reduce the benefit of the investment. The half tone does not look much better than the wry necked line drawing. The Allen was rather unfortunate in a choice of illustrative matter, but probably it does not detract greatly from the sales values of the names. You cannot spoil that combination.

Rides on Hottentot for a Second Week

The second week display for The Hottentot at the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, was better than the first; possibly because the agent had seen the attraction in the meantime and could write with greater enthusiasm, for The Hottentot is one of the really funny comedies, and the more you see of it the better you like it. Using a press book cut, he achieves an advertisement that really will sell, and sell many on a second viewing. He takes a 200-line drop down the page and goes across four, but he has something to say and the expense is justified. The typographical display is as good as the copy. One of the points to be noticed is that the cut of Sam is used to hold the smaller lines down to a width that permits them to be read. If they ran across the entire four-column space they would be more difficult to follow, but the cut serves to shorten them without making them too short, and as the text refers to the character, the connection is apt and the pose increases the force of the allusion. And someone in the press department of First National has a word of praise coming on the spirited cut of the horse. It is one of the best bits of drawing to be found in recent press books. It conveys the proper idea of speed and action and in itself will help to sell tickets. It makes a wonderful attractor. That cut is going to be worth thousands of dollars to First National exhibitors through the country.

Marks the Features Best for Children

In the very intelligently handled program of the Elks Theatre, Prescott, Arizona, the formal program is carried on the second page, with the underline in the last column on that page. A special notice calls attention to the fact that films aproved for children are specially indicated by three asterisks. Not many of the attractions are lacking this mark, but now and then a picture is indicated as being unsuitable for the children and the management is frank enough to tell, losing a little business, perhaps, on those nights, but more than making up for it on the patron esteem they gain. About two pages of trade advertising is carried, but the house reserves plenty of space for chat about the coming attractions and goes beyond that in some general chat about attractions in the distant future. One item, for example, tells of a minstrel company which played Phoenix the week before and was heading into Texas, to return through Prescott some weeks hence. Doubtless the attraction was already booked in, but the non-committal item carried greater interest than would a definite announcement of the coming of the attraction. It would seem that in the craze for stunt exploitation too many managers are overloking the week to week value of an intimate house organ. Well handled, the house program is still the most profitable form of exploitation. But it must be well done, and it must be something more than a mere recital of the titles of the coming films. It must tell about the house and its plans and comforts, and arouse interest in pictures generally.

Makes Miss Pickford Act as Sandwich Man

This looks like some of Ralph Ruffner's dirty work. Evidently he had to use a column cut of Miss Pickford for Tess and wanted a double, so he sawed the cut and set in a type panel, obtaining an odd effect instead of a very perfunctory result. Up in Vancouver, where Ruff holds forth at the Capitol, it is not always possible to get what you want when you want it, and Ruff often has to make bricks without straw and sometimes with darned little mud. He does not lie down on the job just on this account and sometimes he achieves results that are better than he would probably gain with all the press book material at his command. This is only 95 lines by two, but he gets as much value as he could out of most three column spaces, and he puts the money saved into the bank account. He did much the same thing, in a different way with Elsie Ferguson in Outcast. Here he had a one column portrait to work into a two column space, and he did it with a double panel effect that is odd and artistic in a way, and puts over the idea in better fashion than would the unframed cut. These are both follow advertisements where large spaces are not required, and to get what he wants in small space he had to play up the single columns. For that matter it will probably be found that sometimes a two or three column cut can be chopped to get some one feature to work with similar treatment. The man who thinks he cannot get out an advertisement unless he is given precisely what he wants can get some idea from these two displays. They are helpful in the extreme.

Novelty Ads From Philadelphia Hit

Once upon a time the Rialto Printing Company, Philadelphia, used to keep shooting novelties in, but the first batch in something like a year turned up the other day.

One is a member card in a Jackie Coogan Club, membership in which entitles the holder to half rate on a special matinee of Oliver Twist. It is in effect a half rate ticket, since there is no further extension of the privilege.

Rather better is a white envelope, printed in red with large type asking: "Would you like to live to be 150 years old?" The stuffer relates to A Blind Bargain, warning the reader to enter into no unknown bargains until the Goldwyn release has been viewed.

Two pieces are for The Stranger's Banquet, the menu, as written by the home office, on one side and the girl in the cocktail glass on the other, this side being in two colors. The second piece has a triangular card in the upper left hand corner reading "An invitation from a stranger." Inside you are invited to The Stranger's Banquet at whatever house uses the idea.

This helps the local exhibitor in that he can get the idea ready made instead of having to labor to explain to a non-show printer how the work should be done. The invitation is the best idea of the series. Now perhaps Lew will send along some more.

American Releasing

BLUE BEARD, JR. (5,000 feet). Star, Mary Anderson. A neat comedy-drama. Cast well selected. Will go over good almost anywhere. Used six, three, one, slide, lobby. Fair attendance. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HIDDEN WOMAN. (4,626 feet). Star cast. Fair story; an ordinary program picture. Used six, threes, ones, slide, photos. Good attendance. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

QUEEN OF THE MOULIN ROUGE. (5,000 feet). Star, Martha Mansfield. Very poor picture for me. One of my best patrons complained it was "off color," and so it was. This type of picture, put on in the way it was, certainly offers the would-be censors a chance to holler. Ordinary exploitation. Poor attendance; glad of it, owing to the off-color picture. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SISTERS. (6,285 feet). All star cast. A special production. Many favorable comments passed on this one. Wonderful cast. I'd say you can't go wrong on it. Used six, threes, photo, slide, lobby. Attendance poor on account of intensely cold weather. Big city; pull all classes. Always charge ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Associated Exhibitors

WHEN HUSBANDS DECEIVE. (5,708 feet). Star, Leah Baird. Bought right, and it drew well in face of bad weather. Pleased about eighty-five per cent. Used threes, ones, photos, slide, mailing card. In small town, drawing from every class; had fair attendance. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

F. B. O.

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES. (5,000 feet). Featured cast; a Sherlock Holmes story. A picture that, if you set it properly to music and give them lots of the mysterious stuff throughout, will please fairly well. That sounds funny: I looked it over at the matinee and my orchestra did not quite get in the spirit, but at night you'd have thought it was another film. It's a good enough picture, but there's so little action; whereas patrons look for it after seeing "Sherlock Holmes" with Jack Barrymore and "Face in the Fog" with Lionel Barrymore. The cast is good with the exception of the feminine lead, and she is pitiful in looks, and her "acting" very amateurish. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists. Fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHEN LOVE COMES. (4,800 feet). Star, Helen Jerome Eddy. Good, clean picture. Photography above average for F. B. O. Paid too much money for same; a short program. Used two papers, ones, three, photos, slide, with poor attendance. Town of 2,400; draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

First National

CROSS ROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). All star. Very poor picture with "Robt. Burns" cigar ad running through the picture as I see it. Paid too much for picture. Very bad. I'd stay off it. Good advertising pulled poor attendance. City of 35,000; draw family trade. Admission 25-50-60. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. (4,192 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. A pleasing program picture. Will please all classes. Usual advertising to small town class. Attendance very poor; no fault of picture; snow storm. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

EVEN AS EVE. . (6,000 feet). Star, Grace Darling. Drew a good attendance. Played well and enjoyed by everyone. Used a three, two ones, cards, paper. Good attendance. Town of 2,000; draw from residential class. Admission 10-25. W. F. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

ETERNAL FLAME. (7,453 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Wonderful production in every way. However, it is not a small town picture. Rental entirely too high to come out even. Used every advertising slant known. Had excellent attendance. Small town, 1,500; draw usual classes. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Stars, Richard Dix, Claire Windsor; a Marshall Neilan production. A very good picture, but—why don't producers turn out pictures more suitable for family entertainment? Regeneration theme good, but no entertainment value, consequently no business. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. Best melodrama since "Go and Get It." Didn't pull much, but pleased those who did come a hundred per cent. Fair attendance. Town of 4,000; draw family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. A good picture. Ran with the "New Leather Pushers" and do not know whether the feature or the "Leather Pushers" brought the business; but we had the business! Used billboards, window cards, newspaper. Good attendance. Town of 9,237; draw general class. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. We played this picture during First National Week and in that way got away with it. I can't laud it much. Beautiful settings and scenery; pleased about seventy-five per cent of our patrons. Used cutouts of Madge Bellamy in lobby. Attendance above average. Town of 5,000; draw the home class. Admission 10-28, includes war tax. C. L. Laws, T. & D. Theatre, Watsonville, California.

LOVE'S PENALTY. (4,685 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. This is an old one but a good one, just the same. Pictures like this are a credit to any theatre to show. It will keep your patrons coming. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 1,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

LOVE EXPERT. Star, Constance Talmadge. Sent as a substitute for "Dangerous Business" and gave entire satisfaction, although it is so old that several had seen it before and we didn't get any reduction in price on account of age either. Eidently a great number of the male patrons found many things to laugh at. Ordinary advertising, with poor attendance (blizzard). Draw rural and from town of over two hundred. Regular admission 20-30, specials 22-39. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

NOT GUILTY. (6,923 feet). Star, Sylvia Bremer. It is a pleasure to show a picture such as this. This can be classed as a "production" and shows extreme care in the making. The better class of our patronage gave many favorable comments. However, if you book it, advertise it well and push it, for it has no great drawing power. Attendance fair. Draw rural and town of 500. Admission for this one 20-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE. (5,000 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Badly disfigured, but still in the ring. Nothing but kicks on this. Film chopped all to pieces. Why—oh—why do they try to put off this stuff on us country lads? Regular advertising. Attendance of house employes and a "few" friends—glad they stayed at home! Draw regular small town class. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Why talk about this one? You all know the star and what he can do; you know the story. Story and star made for each other. I would advise any manager to stick to his regular price and not boost. You will find many who will ask who "Mr. Dickens" was. It is Dickens' poorest story. Used radio stunt, newspapers and window cards. Had big attendance at advance. City of 17,000; draw family trade. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28 regularly. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

OLIVER TWIST. (5,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Fine business. Jackie is a real box office attraction. Used window cards, billboards, newspaper. Attendance good. Town of 9,237, draw general class. Admission 10-20-30. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

OMAR, THE TENT MAKER. (8,000 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Excellent picture; good photography, and well acted. A real drawing card and box office coin getter. Crowded houses; general draw. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONE CLEAR CALL. (7,450 feet). Special cast. A good picture. Fine acting by Walthall, Milton Sills, Irene Rich. We played it while the newspapers were full of K. K. K. stuff and the Ku Klux end of the picture drew them in fine. Used extra advertising, street stunt. Great attendance. Large city, draw high class people. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Very good and well liked by the kids. A real kid picture from beginning to end. Ran it four days. It was well advertised. Attendance was good. City of 12,000; draw mixed class. Admission 10-20-30. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. (6,137 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Fair; time for Constance to make a picture. Used regular advertising to get fair attendance. Town of 1,500, usual small town draw. Admission 10-25. S. G. Hirsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa. (Had a fire Feb. 21—not much damage, but accounts for delay in reporting).

PRIMITIVE LOVER. (6,172 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. A nice little picture. My people like Connie in this one. Attendance good. Town of about 2,000, regular small town draw, including surroundings. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

R. S. V. P. (6,000 feet). Day by day, in every way, Charles Ray is getting punker and punker. Used regular advertising for fair attendance. Town of 1,500, usual small town draw. Admission 10-25. S. G. Hirsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Featuring dog, Strongheart. Splendid production. Pleased a hundred per cent. Strongheart does wonderful acting in this picture. Book it and you'll clean up. Exploited with everything possible and had exellent attendance. Town of 2,150; draw better class. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Starring dog "Strongheart." This is a wonderful dog, in a wonderful picture. Used paper, slide, one, 11x14, to draw mixed class with good attendance. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Starring dog "Strongheart." Not as good as "Kazan," which it somewhat resembled; cost a lot more, too. We shall have to buy cheaper pictures or quit the business. Poor attendance. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Starring dog "Strongheart." Splendid picture. All comments favorable. Weather bad, but business holding up to "good." Used extra newspaper ads. Town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

SMILIN' THROUGH. (8,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Good picture for intelligent audiences. But for lower classes it may not appeal. Used lobby, heralds, window cards, newspaper. Attendance fair. Draw retired farmers and small town class. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

SONNY. (6,900 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Sonny is the "dead image" of another man, and takes up the other person's position in life. This is an impossible, overworked theme—but!—it is a fine picture, well acted, very entertaining and comparable to "Tol'able David" in the opinion of many among my patrons. Play up as a successor to 'Tol'able David." Good attendance. Draw typical small town class; population 3,000. Admission 15-20. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Getting the most out of these reports is the thing we all want.

E. W. Collins, whose three theatres in Jonesboro, Arkansas, have helped with many reports, sends a good talk on the best way to use reports.

It's so good that he gets the floor. Read what he says. Think it over. Try it yourself.

VAN.

STARDUST. (5,600 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. A wonderful production. Will please any audience. Attendance good. Small town, drawing general class. Ten cents admission. Dr. J. E. Cuibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

TEN DOLLAR RAISE. (5,726 feet). William V. Mong in featured cast. A good picture. Considerable comedy. Regular advertising pulled fair attendance. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

THOUSAND TO ONE. (6,055 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. Another old picture worth about $2.00 to me. Then, you will be razzed for running old, cheap stuff. This was our third picture on a First National Week. After seeing it we arranged to get the balance of the week's program from other exchanges. People expected to see something unusual during this week—and—they did! Very unusual! Attendance poor. Draw small town type. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. I had a hard time getting this picture. Advertised it twice and had a buy-out the first time; but when I did get it, it did the business. Buy it and boost it. Title and star are advertising slants. Attendance good. Small town of 2,300. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

TWIN BEDS. (5,000 feet). Star, Carter DeHaven. A good comedy drama from start to finish. It does people good to laugh once in a while and this will surely make them do it. Town of a thousand, draw all classes. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

WEDDING BELLS. Star, Constance Talmade. A good comedy drama that pulled capacity business and pleased. Constance is a sure bet here. Regular advertising gave good attendance. Town of 2,000; draw general types. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Oklahoma.

WOMAN CONQUERS. (5,102 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Good picture; the best of this star's that I have run. Good cast incdluding Bryant Washburn and Mitchell Lewis. Used ones, newspaper, slide, photos. Fair attendance. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. Star, Mildred Harris. Very good. A one hundred per cent entertainment. It should be pleasing to any audience. Used regular advertising, had good attendance. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WONDERFUL THING. (6,880 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A very good picture, but a little bit long. Norma's acting in this one is excellent. Good attendance. Town of 2,000; draw town and country. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. Very good Jones picture. He usually goes good with me. Used programs and newspaper and had good attendance. City of 12,000; draw all class. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Just the ordinary Tom Mix picture. Nothing to brag about. Usual advertising and general patronage in big city. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Different from other Mix pictures. It will get many laughs. It is full of thrills, and a money maker. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MONEY TO BURN. (4,580 feet). Star, William Russell. A number of patrons imagined they had seen the picture before. To a certain extent they were right; they hadn't seen "Money to Burn," but the story was such ancient screen material that they had seen at least 365 varieties of it before. So quite a few thought I was putting one over. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Large city, draw medium and working classes. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MONTE CRISTO. (9,828 feet). John Gilbert in star cast. A gem of photographic art. Everything perfect, but not much drawing power for small town. Used heavy exploitation to pull fair attendance. Town of 7,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

NERO. (11,500 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture of its kind, but the public here do not like such. The picture is too long and monotonous. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,970 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The boys that like the Western pictures sure made a fuss over this one. They all liked it. This is our first Tom Mix picture, but we feel sure we will run them all after seeing this. Used ones and lobby. Bad weather, fair attendance. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. (8,279 feet). Special cast, with Betty Blythe. Good picture only it is too long and tiresome. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Town of 1,800, draw mixed class. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. (8,279 feet). Special cast, with Betty Blythe. One of the most spectacular pictures I have ever shown, pleased everybody. The settings are magnificent, the acting is unsurpassed. The picture has a real plot to it and holds the interest from the first foot to the last. You can't go wrong on this one, boys, as it is all that Fox claims it to be. Print couldn't have been better; not a single misframe. Used twenty-fours, sixes, threes, ones, slide, heralds. Fair attendance. Town of about a thousand, draw general class. Regular admission 10-20, Special 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ROUGH DIAMOND. (4,458 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good program picture; one your people will like if they like the star. Plenty of action that's different. Used ones, six, 11x14, slide. Fair attendance. Town of 1,100, draw general class. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

ROUGH SHOD. (4,085 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. Not up to Jones' standard, neither in my judgment nor in that of my regular critics. The cast is well selected, but the story is overdrawn in many scenes. Used extra advertising. Excellent attendance. Town of 282, pull small town and country classes. Admission 10-15-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Bought this for a Super-special before seeing any reports. The only thing Super about it is the footage. Used heralds, newspaper and lobby. Poor attendance. Town of 2,000, draw general class. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre, Quinton, Oklahoma.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Class this along with "Over the Hill," which was very good. Title draws for me. Had large attendance. Town of 3,500, draw mixed class. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

SKY HIGH. (4,546 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good Tom Mix picture. No kicks on this one. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

STAGE ROMANCE. (6,416 feet). Star, William Farnum. Poor Farnum picture for me. Bill seems out of place in other than Westerns. Attendance was below normal. Town of 1,600, draw high class folks. Admission 10-25 to 50. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

TRAILIN'. (4,355 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is a real picture; better than the average, full of pep and action. In fine shape. Fine scenery and lots of good stuff. Boost this one. We have played a number of Mix and Fox service, and have lost on all of Tom Mix stuff, they ask too much money for me. Will be glad when I play the last one. We get other service that don't cost us half as much that gets us as much money, but can't say anything against the service—it's O. K. If you can buy this right it's worth while trying. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

TRAILIN'. (4,355 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A wonderful Western, one that will please a hundred per cent. Played this one on Saturday night and turned them away. Any audience that likes Mix or Westerns will surely like this one. Used ones, photos, slides. Good attendance. Draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Delgrande, Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

WHILE JUSTICE WAITS. (4,752 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. This is a good picture for those who enjoy its kind, but it did not take very well with my patrons. Attendance was normal. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

WITHOUT COMPROMISE. (5,173 feet). Star, William Farnum. Better than "Moonshine Valley." Pleased a typical Farnum crowd. Quite a good deal of action in this one. settings good, but big Bill will have to give us something better than this one if he ever gets back where he was a couple of years ago. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

How to Use Reports

Says E. W. Collins, Grand, Liberty, Empire, Jonesboro, Arkansas:

"I have discovered a way of getting more value out of Straight From the Shoulder reports and I want to pass the idea along to my fellow exhibitors.

"Many exhibitors complain because the reports are conflicting. That is easily explained: What is meat to one man may be poison to another. Different men react differently toward any picture.

"I have, therefore, by a careful comparison of reports from regular contributors, weeded out those exhibitors whose opinions on pictures both of us have already played have agreed with mine or my public's. I then depend upon the judgment of those exhibitors in regard to pictures I have yet to play.

"As an instance: Dave Seymour, of Saranac Lake, almost always agrees with my opinion of a picture. By this I deduce that he has much the same type of audience to please as we have here, although his is a health resort, while our town in a farming and manufacturing center.

"By experience I have come to know that when a picture goes over strong for Mr. Seymour, it is almost sure to do the same for us.

"Somewhere in these pages is an exhibitor—or there are exhibitors—whose ideas will coincide with those of another exhibitor; by marking your men and following their lead, the reports will have a far greater value. Trusting that this idea may be of some slight service to other exhibitors and that the department may some day find all of the space in Moving Picture World do which it is entitled, I am, Sincerely, E. W. Collins."

That's straight from the shoulder help for you! Mr. Collins not only reports helpfully; he uses the space that is always open for such things to tell exhibitors his ideas. Talk it over here—any time!

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Some beautiful scenery in this and the picture will get by if they like D. Farnum. Quite a lot of action. Town of 7,125, draw from miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

HUNGRY HEARTS. (6,540 feet). Stars, Bryant Washburn, Rosa Rosanova. A corking good picture of the struggles of a poor, indigent family in America. Well liked here. Played it on a Saturday night and it turned out to be an ideal picture for here on that night. Usual advertising and good Saturday evening attendance. Health seekers and tourists attend. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

NIGHT ROSE. (6,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Very good melodrama which ought to satisfy all classes of people. Used regular advertising for fair attendance. Town of 2,400, draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star cast. Rupert Hughes understood the "mother," hence "The Old Nest" was a knockout. But he didn't grasp the "father," the harassed business man. Here's a miss. But watch out—he will give another S. R. O. puller. Usual advertising brought medium attendance. Large city, draw medium and working classes. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading Pennsylvania.

JOURNEY'S END. (7,500 feet). Star, Mabel Ballin. The picture without a subtitle. We waited a long time to play it and we're glad we did. Advertising slants are, absence of titles, and the cast. Attendance poor. City of 14,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Stars include Billie Dove and Lon Chaney. Something the matter with anyone who will call any picture a name like this. That title would kill anything. Picture too rough. One rough house fight after another. Metro needs a few titles for pictures; just as easy to buy a picture with a title that helps get them in. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

BROADWAY ROSE. (7,277 feet). Star, Mae Murray. A very lavishly produced picture, but didn't seem to draw as it should have. It pleased 100 per cent, but many remarked that it was not as good as "Fascination." It will go over if you can get them in. JUNE MADNESS. (5,600 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A nice program picture that pleased here. Good cabaret scenes, and it's got a lot of pep. You can't go wrong on this. You can't dissect it, but there's plenty of merit in it and it will entertain. Advertised usual way to get fairly good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor, who originated role in stage play. Nothing but favorable comments from the patrons. They went out of their way to tell us that they liked "Peg" and would like for a return real soon. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. We had this booked three days after Wallie died. Went over fine first night, to a dismal flop second night. Some one tell us why—we don't know, unless it might be that our people don't want to see his pictures since poor old Wallie passed away. Two day attendance was averaged up. BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. To my mind this is the best picture Meighan ever made outside of "Manslaughter." The story is wholesome and the work of the star and support is of the highest order. Usual advertising yielded excellent attendance. City of 44,000, draw mixed class. Admission 10-17-20-25. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

A Late One

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (First Natl.) Star, Norma Talmadge. The picture pleased full houses for entire week. One of Norma's best for some time. It is a real picture and you won't be afraid to face your patrons when they come out. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Be sure and get it. Used lithos, banners, heralds, newspaper. Draw middle class in town of 4,000. Wm. L. Boulware, Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Star popular here, and it is a picture you need not be afraid to boost and raise your price, although we did not. They will tell you about it when they come out—how well they like it, and it does not look to me as though this star is getting a square deal. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Can't see where there is an excuse for exchanges to set this picture loose. It gave no satisfaction. Used regular advertising. Attendance not good. Town of 1,200; town and country classes. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. The star does wonderful work in this picture. A better program picture is not made. If you are running Paramount pictures don't pass this one up. DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just fair, to say the least. Miss Dalton's good acting puts it over. Pleased sixty per cent. Good attendance. Small town, general draw. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

Miller, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

DICTATOR. (5,221 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Good. Walter Long also is fine. Will please any audience. Usual advertising drew good attendance. Town of 3,700, draw general small town class. Admission 10-20. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

EBB TIDE. (7,336 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A picture which should merit a good attendance, but the title does not lend itself properly to putting it over in a big way. All the situations were handled in an efficient manner. Attendance was poor, as are advertising slants. Town of 7,100, draw better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

EXPERIENCE. (7,000 feet). Featured cast. This will please most any kind of a crowd. Advertised in daily paper and with lobby. Attendance poor; weather cold. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

GET - RICH - QUICK WALLINGFORD. (7,381 feet). A dandy. One that will please all. Better than most Specials. Business was only fair, but think that the public got it confused with "Son of Wallingford," as I ran that some time ago. If you have run the "Son of Wallingford" be sure to tell them that the "Get Rich Quick" is not a repeat show as the titles are confusing. Used lobby and six sheet, drawing all classes. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

GILDED LILY. (6,060 feet). Star, Mae Murray. A good one in which Mae Murray shows her talent and the dance scenes are excellent. A picture that will please and it has a good story that is not improbable. I draw the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

THE GOLEM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. I heard a lot of bad criticisms on this one and the company sold it reasonably. HELL DIGGERS. (4,277 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Had the print been in good shape this one would have gone over big. Played it soon after his death and they came to see him. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Advertised with cutouts, tied up with city officials on "Manslaughter" cards, had six sheets, a thousand heralds, 500 mailing list, and played two nights in town of 2,500. Attendance good for both nights. Pictures shown here will not hold up for two nights unless above the ordinary. Moving Picture World gives you what you want. Its friends are of the type of Mr. Stanley C. Warrick, enterprising exhibitor of the Beaux Arts, Palm Beach, Florida. He had the world's premiere on Harold Lloyd's latest and here is what he tells you:

SAFETY LAST. (Pathe) Star, Harold Lloyd. Having its premiere at the Beaux Arts today. It is receiving an enthusiastic response up to the time of writing—and bids fair to establish attendance records for the theatre. Since I am writing early to get this letter off in time for your use Wednesday, I cannot await the day's results—but the matinee was the largest in the history of the house for any March offerings—and I feel sure that had we launched this picture in February, when we have the crowds here, that it would have broken any February record. Stanley C. Warrick, Director, the Fashion Beaux Arts, Palm Beach, Florida.

sion 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast includes Marjorie Daw. Outdoor picture. No star value. Picture pleased those who saw it. Large attendance of children with it. An excellent program picture. Follows the book very closely. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

SATURDAY NIGHT. (8,443 feet). Star cast. Cecil De Mille production. An A number one picture; pleased everybody, old and young. Draw farm and country types in town of 400. H. R. Dixon, Glen Theatre, Glencoe, Kentucky.

SATURDAY NIGHT. (8,443 feet). Star cast, Cecil De Mille produced. Here is one you need not be afraid to boost as they will like it. Lavishly produced and a good cast. I draw the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TOO MUCH SPEED. (5,000 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Old, but drew very well. Liked by all. His racing pictures are light but entertaining. Theo. Roberts good in support. General admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. We did not hear any kicks; rather the reverse. I don't see why they have condemned this picture so much; it has a good story for Valentino. Women sure liked it and talked about it. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HERO. (6,800 feet). Gasnier production. Just a common picture. Pleased about sixty per cent. Too much money for me. Used lobby, newspaper, billboard. Fair attendance. Draw mixed class. Admission 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

LICHTMAN PRODUCTIONS. These are good. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). All star. One of the real big ones out this year. Don't cost a lot of rental but has drawing power and pleases all who see it. You can go out for business with this. Town of 7,125, draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

SHADOWS. (7,404 feet). Star cast includes Lon Chaney. A human picture, very well acted throughout. A well balanced and talented cast. A little "sobby" for here, but it's a picture that you can get behind. Exploit Lon Chaney's performance—it's great. Used heralds and other high grade advertising methods employed by this theatre. Fairly good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Playgoers

HILLS OF MISSING MEN. (5,074 feet). Star, J. P. McGowan. One of the best Westerners I have ever run. Small town draw. Fair attendance. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Oklahoma.

Selznick

CHANNING OF NORTHWEST. (4,725 feet). Star, Eugene O'Brien. Some exhibitors said, "Hands off," but I say, for the money, you'll get by. In good shape. Regular advertising, with fair attendance. Draw country and small town of 282. Admission 10-15-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

HANDCUFFS OR KISSES? (6,000 feet) Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A little old and we had a dark print, but it has a very interesting story that pleased. Usual advertising pulled poor attendance; Hammerstein is no drawing card for us. Retired farmers and small town patronage. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

LOVE IS AN AWFUL THING. (6,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. I thought it was a good comedy, but some old crabs said it was too silly. Good and poor attendance second night. Town of 3,000, draw poor class mostly. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

REFEREE. (5,000 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. A regular he-man picture that will please all men and boys and about fifty per cent of the ladies and girls. Used posters and mailing list in small town for good attendance. . F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

REFEREE. (5,000 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. For me, just a fair picture. Nothing extra at all. Regular advertising pulled poor attendance. Town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

REPORTED MISSING. (7,500 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Opinion was divided on this. Many thought it was great, but others said it was crude. One scene showing a knife sticking through a man's throat is not very entertaining. Advertising angle, go at it as a pure farce, plot not to be taken seriously. Attendance good. Typical small town draw without foreigners, town of 3,000. Admission, 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SAFETY CURTAIN. (6,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Very good. O'Brien helps in cast. Story unusually good. Pleased all who came. Used regular advertising for fair attendance. Town of 282, also draw country class. Admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

United Artists

LOVE LIGHT. Star, Mary Pickford. Would advise anyone not to show this one as it goes back to war time, which does not fit in at this date, and film was in poor condition. I draw the better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

MAN WHO PLAYED GOD. (5,856 feet). Star, George Arliss. This was our first Arliss. Liked by everybody. Photography rather dark in interior sets. Advertised with posters and slide. Draw better class, with fair attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

POLLYANNA. Star, Mary Pickford. A little old. Print was not in as good condition as it might have been. Pleased our audience very highly. Many good comments about this picture. Used posters and slide with good attendance in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Beautiful and entertaining. Drew more people, and at advanced prices, than any picture we ever ran. Usual ones, threes, twenty-fours, 11x14s, etc. City of 52,000, draw to white class only. Advanced admission. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, Macon, Georgia.

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Ray in a good picture that moves a little too slowly. Charles spends too much time in front of the camera snapping his fingers and showing perplexity. Cut the padding just about a full thousand feet and it would have been a wonder. As it is, the picture gets going good and slows down to get a fresh start. The audience liked it, but not enough of them came. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10,000 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. A very good picture from every standpoint, and one that will make friends for your theatre. We did not make as much as we should have. Price a little too high. Every town should play it. Don't be afraid of anyone saying they have seen it before. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

Universal

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Here is Mayo at his best. Attendance was good. Town of a thousand. F. C. Butt, Ideal Theatre, Blue Ridge, Georgia.

FIRST DEGREE. (4,395 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Only fair program picture, but worth the price paid for same. Usual advertising in small town gave poor attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star, House Peters. This picture was liked by everybody that saw it. This production was larger than necessary. We had to cut out some of our short subjects. Advertised with posters and slides. Good attendance. Town of 4,500, draw better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THE JILT. (5,000 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. Not good for me. Title misleading and action entirely too slow. Actors did their best with a rotten story, but could not make it interesting. Used regular ones and photos in manufacturing town to poor attendance. M. V. Cousins, People's Theatre, Pineland, Texas.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,598 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. The best horse race picture we ever had. If your patrons like this kind, book it. Used one sheets, 5,000 population. Fair attendance. P. L. Vann, Opera House, Greenville, Alabama.

ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT. (4,473 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Rather mixed up, but a fair program picture. The hero is a good drawing card for me. They all liked him. Used usual advertising for very good attendance. Town of 1,100, draw general type. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

MARRIED FLAPPER. (5,000 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Better picture than "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," cost less than half and pleased patrons much better than

Turnaway Business

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN. (Equity). Opened up on a Monday and turned them away and still turned them away on the last day after a four days' run. Wonderful box office attraction. H. Dobbs, Empire Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

former subject. Used photos, ones, threes, newspapers. Fair attendance. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, West Virginia.

Vitagraph

FORTUNE'S MASK. (4,975 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Very good. Pleased well. Used lobby and newspaper. Fair attendance. Large city, draw mixed class. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

INNER CHAMBER. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Joyce. A nice little program picture which held attention to the end. Fair attendance. Town of about 2,000, draw from town and country. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

LUCKY CARSON. (5,000 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Program picture. Story good, but did not make any money due to opposition running Fox special, who turned them away, but I did not get them. Used six, three, ones, slide, lobby. Poor attendance. Big city, draw all classes. Ten cents admission at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SINGLE TRACK. (5,000 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. It's a nice picture. It's a combination that will please almost anyone. Advertising slant, the star. Fair attendance. Town of 2,300, regular small town draw. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

Comedies

ASSORTED HEROES (Campbell). A good comedy with child actors. More comment about this comedy than about feature. Draw better class, with fair attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BATTLING TORCHY (Educatl.-Hines). A splendid two-reeler that has lots of new gags. It kept them laughing and will, no doubt, please any audience. The prize fight is a knockout. Get this one sure. Used ones and threes. Fair attendance. Town of 4,800, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BLIZZARD (Vitagraph-Aubrey). Good comedy. One of his best. Find Aubrey comedies all very good and they don't hold you up on price. City of 15,000, draw middle class. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

CENTURY COMEDIES (Universal). We have been using one a week for years and they average better than any other two-reelers on the market. The dog (Brownie) and the Baby Peggy series are great, while the Lee Morans, the Harry Sweets and the Mule series are all better than most others. City of 14,000, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

DOUBLE TROUBLE (Fox-Lee Kids). Here you have a reissued Lee Kids comedy in two reels that will surely please both young and old. Light but entertaining. Used slides on this and attendance good. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

FAST AND FURIOUS (Fox-St. John). Al. St. John is one of the favorites in this town, as people say they like the bicycle rider the best of all of them. Town of 1,400, with two showhouses. We draw small town and country. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

FOX COMEDIES. Best comedies made. Can't go wrong in booking them. I draw small town mixed class. W. H. Moore, Nusho, Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

GLAD RAGS (Metro-Montana). Excellent high-class comedy. As good as, if not better than, "A Ladies' Man" or "Punctured Prince." We understand that there will be eight Montana comedies made this year, of which three have been released. Grab them and play with a weak feature—and Bull will do the rest. Advertised above the feature! Excellent attendance. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

HICKORY-HICK (Educatl.-Vernon). This Christie is also very good. Big city, draw all classes, get ten cents always. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HICKORY-HICK (Educatl.-Vernon). A Christie. Good, clean comedy. Had good attendance day I ran this. Town of 350, draw country class. Admission 10-22. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

LARRY SEMON COMEDIES (Vitagraph). Use one of these comedies every Friday and have not used a bad one yet. Vitagraph has a lot of exploitation on these subjects; be sure to use it. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

OUT OF PLACE (Fox-St. John). The best two-reel comedy we have had in an extra long time. Plenty of pep to this one. Advertised with ones and threes, had fair attendance that day. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

PAIR OF ACES (Fox-Lee Kids). Another comedy with these famous children which registered a hundred per cent. Where these children are known they will draw, and if they are not known, let the people know about them and they will draw. Used photos, slide, ones, threes. Had good attendance. Town of 4,200, draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.-Lloyd). If you have not played this one, would advise every exhibitor to do so. It will bring down the house and they will tell you about it and ask you to get more like it. It is a sure bet. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Serials

DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Univ.-Acord). This serial is going big. We are on the eighth episode, holding up fine. Goes big with kids. You can't go wrong on this serial. City of 15,000, cater to middle class. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

MIRACLES OF JUNGLE (Federated). Best serial I ever ran for a long time. Frederick Peters does fine in this serial. Use many posters and photographs. Fair attendance. V. Ventura, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

ROBINSON CRUSOE (Univ.-Myers). On seventeenth episode and still holding its own. We have done good business from the first chapter. Business never fell off during the serial, which is some record here. Town of 2,800, draw working class. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES and TOPICS OF THE DAY (Pathe). My patrons look for these subjects each week and I can safely say my show is not complete without them. Town of 7,000. L. Pizor, Colonial Theatre, Phoenixville, Pennsylvania.

FOX NEWS. A good News, and since I receive it while new it is a good drawing reel. The Mutt & Jeff Cartoon does fairly well, too. College town of 5,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SELZNICK NEWS. Used with "Channing of Northwest." Goes over big. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

State Rights

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED (Warner Bros.). Star, Marie Prevost. Very good, up-to-date scenes. Prevost at her best. Used newspaper, ones, threes, sixes, twenty-fours. Good attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED (Warner Bros.). (7,000 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. For me, just a program picture, nothing big. Very good cast. Pleased sixty per cent. Large city, mixed type to draw from. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

BORDER GUARDS (Russell Prod.). All star cast. A good picture that will please the majority. Business just fair. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FLESH AND BLOOD (Western Pic. Expl.). (5,300 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Very good show. Went over nicely. Lon Chaney especially adapted for this calibre of stuff. Used window cards, newspaper. Good attendance. City of 12,000, draw all classes. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Exhibitors get help; exhibitors send help in Straight From the Shoulder. Use these pages for dependable picture tips and SEND REPORTS.

FLESH AND BLOOD (Western Pic. Expl.). (5,300 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A very interesting subject, containing a long strip of Prizma color of Japanese settings. Chaney very good. Did not draw due to considerable competition. Town of 7,500, attendance fair. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

FLESH AND BLOOD (Western Pic. Expl.). (5,300 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A very ordinary picture, worth about one-half what I paid. A few more like this and I will be out of business. Admission 15-25; should have been 10-20. Used newspaper and lobby cards. Attendance good in town of 900. Draw town and country classes. H. R. Dixon, Unique Theatre, Walton, Kentucky.

HEROES OF THE STREET (Warner Bros.). (6,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. A knockout! Better than any picture Barry has made before. Lots-a laffs, a few thrills and a bunch of new comedy gags that brought down the house—especially the one with the plate. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. Town of 4,034, regular small town type. Admission 10-25-30. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

MAN FROM HELL RIVER (Western Pic. Expl.). (5,000 feet). Star, Eva Novak. A pretty little Western and will just about get by, and that's all. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT (Lubitsch). (7,650 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Boosted this one but it did not seem to hit as I expected. Personally I liked it very much. Used banner, singles and heralds. Attendance good. Town of 600, draw mill help. Admission twenty cents. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

ONLY A SHOP GIRL (C. B. C.). (6,400 feet). All star cast. After seeing picture, don't understand why my audience was poor. Picture has good theme, good acting; but didn't draw on three-day run. Used lobby display, handbills, newspaper. City of 15,000. Poor attendance. George T. Trammell, Palace Theatre, Marshall, Texas.

PEACEFUL PETERS (Arrow). (4,690 feet). Star, William Fairbanks. Good Western. Regular advertising pulled good attendance. City of 14,000, draw working class. Admission 10-25. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre, Piqua, Ohio.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner Bros.). (7,000 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. A very good picture, but film in bad condition. First picture shown here of Wesley Barry. Used many posters and photos. Had poor attendance. W. Ventura, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Great picture. Pleased a hundred per cent. Broke all previous box office records. You cannot go wrong on this; book it—advertise it. SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. This is "sure fire!" One of the best for universal appeal and satisfaction. Can't go wrong on this. Full of pep, comedy, thrills and maybe a tear. What more do you want? Advertising angles—play up comedy and thrills. Town of 4,100, draw all classes. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BARROOM (Arrow). (8,000 feet). Star cast. We should get more productions of this type. No exhibitor can go wrong on booking this picture. It has, to my estimation, more drawing power than "Over the Hill." But—be sure that you get a good print. Gave it plenty of publicity, supported by high school. Broke records. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE WOMEN? (Equity). (6,000 feet). Star cast. A wonderful production. Should make good money at any place if properly advertised. The name will help to draw a good business. M. P. W.—A superior attraction that promises satisfaction to the box-office.

N.—May be put down as a likely attraction.

T. R.—An entertaining little story with some moments of real excitement and suspense.

E. H.—An interesting little domestic drama, full of action, much good acting and is worthy of a place on every regular program.

F. D.—Good rural drama that is played with considerable naturalness; has some fair thrills.

The Woman Who Fooled Herself

(May Allison—Associated Exhibitors—5,401 feet)

M. P. W.—The picture should be a popular attraction, generally.

E. H.—This production combines virtually every element that should make it a successful audience picture.

N.—We would call it an average picture.

F. D.—Average feature, rather weak story but given satisfying production.

T. R.—This picture offers fair entertainment. * * * It is particularly rich in scenic value.

What Fools Men Are

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—6,087 feet)

M. P. W.—Offers something that is worth the attention of every up-to-minute exhibitor.

T. R.—Another triangle story that, although traversing fairly well known ground proves to be a splendid drama.

F. D.—A bright piece that will please a big majority; pretty good box office picture.

E. H.—An interesting society play, well acted and very well produced. * * * Adapted from Eugene Walter's stage play "The Flapper."

N.—There is a little lesson attached to the story and it is genuine enough to score most everywhere.

Three Who Paid

(Dustin Farnum——Fox—4,850 feet)

M. P. W.—For the most part it is consistent entertainment that pursues an even trend without rising to any great heights.

F. D.—Average Western that supplies action of usual order for those who like it.

N.—The picture will furnish a greater appeal to the boys than it will to the girls.

T. R.—Typical Western melodrama and has lots of galloping horses and gunplay to stir up a bit of action.

E. H.—A mildly interesting Western story, 'ull of sudden deaths, strenuous fights and a fire finish.

Truxton King

(John Gilbert—Fox—5,613 feet)

M. P. W.—Should bring satisfaction to the box office because it has a good cast, attractive backgrounds and plenty of action.

T. R.—It is a picture that should go over well in practical house.

E. H.—There is every reason to believe the film will be a best seller.

N.—Must be put down as a likely attraction for the everyday patron.

F. D.—A big improvement over Gilbert's recent pictures. * * * One of McCutcheon's popular Graustack stories that makes satisfactory screen material.

The Stranger's Banquet

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—8,531 feet)

M. P. W.—An impressive production with unusual cast.

E. H.—It is well produced and will hold your attention, though some may find it a bit confusing at times.

N.—Marshall Neilan seems to have lost himself in a highly complicated story which carries so many characters that as they pass a given point they resemble a parade.

T. R.—An extremely artistic and interesting picture.

F. D.—Contains many good exploitation angles and points of appeal; will please a good majority.

Poor Men's Wives

(Featured Cast—Preferred Pictures—6,963 feet)

M. P. W.—Carries much heart interest and teaches good lesson.

N.—Well staged and has a definite audience appeal.

T. R.—Possesses marked box office elements.

F. D.—An attractive box office picture that contains elements of popular appeal; what many audiences want.

E. H.—Entertaining story very well worked out with a good cast.

(Tom Mix—Fox—3,975 feet)

M. P. W.—One of Tom Mix's typical acrobatic romances.

T. R.—Highly improbable and little interest is maintained except in places where the star performs some of his riding and dare deviltry.

F. D.—Burlesque Western with good action and some novel stunts that will make it attractive to a majority.

N.—Should succeed with Mix's followers. * * * He does most of his customary stunts and adds several new ones.

E. H.—The story is slight, but it is full of "pep" and should please Mix fans.

The Voice from the Minaret

(Norma Talmadge—First National—6,685 feet)

M. P. W.—From every standpoint this is one of Norma Talmadge's best pictures.

N.—Sure fire box office attraction. * * * Holds the interest throughout its entire seven thousand or more feet.

F. D.—Splendidly made picture that will go especially big with star's admirers, but otherwise won't cause a commotion.

T. R.—Another triumph for Norma Talmadge, to be added to that brilliant star's long list of pictures de luxe.

E. H.—Well produced. * * * It has heart interest and suspense, and a good supporting cast.

Java Head

(Featured Cast—Paramount—7,865 feet)

M. P. W.—It has strong dramatic situations, though a somewhat tragic theme, well-selected types, holds the attention at all times and will appeal forcibly to discriminating patrons.

E. H.—Will doubtless stand as one of the season's most worth-while pictures.

N.—Will probably rank as one of the best things Paramount will offer this year. * * * It should find a welcome where high class productions are appreciated.

F. D.—Atractively mounted and with pleasing atmosphere; otherwise a conventional offering.

T. R.—It is an attraction giving indications of winning widespread popularity.

The Kingdom Within

Gaston Glass—Hodkinson—6036 feet)

M. P. W.—It is a picture that will appeal especially to the better class of audiences for it will make the spectators think.

F. D.—A return to "Miracle Man" theme; effective dramatic moments and a satisfying dramatic entertainment generally.

N.—It's a good audience picture, finely staged, and carrying a plot which holds the interest all the way.

E. H.—It is interesting from start to finish, carrying a genuine appeal that makes it a picture not readily forgotten. Will grace the screen of any theatre to good advantage.

T. R.—Should be well received izn places where sentimentality is enjoyed.

The Love Letter

(Gladys Walton—Universal—4,420 feet)

M. P. W.—An accepting composite of human interest, comedy and melodrama.

N.—Back to the type of story in which Gladys Walton is at her best. * * * Contains all the earmarks of success.

E. H.—Gladys Walton's latest and by far the best thing she has done of late.

T. R.—A pleasing little story into which Gladys Walton injects her winning personality.

F. .D—Bright, original entertainment with star at her best in role unusually well suited to her.

The Pilgrim

(Charles Chaplin—First National—4 reels)

M. P. W.—Is entertaining throughout, with the regular Chaplin quota of laughs, and with the exception of a possible kickback on the church situations, should not disappoint the host of Chaplin fans.

F. D.—Not up to the Chaplin standard.

E. H.—May not prove a riot, but it's awfully good fun.

T. R.—Typically Chaplin in its richness of detail and ludicrous effects.

N.—He employs some of his funny slapstick ideas of his Essanay days. * * * We'll put it down as sure-fire.

Only a Shop Girl

(Featured Cast—C. B. C.—6,400 feet)

M. P. W.—For melodrama this adaptation of Charles E. Blaney's play of the same title is a knockout in every respect.

F. D.—A lot of sure-fire hokum in film version of old stage play; will fit nicely for many box offices.

E. H.—It should prove one of the most attractive offerings of this sort.

T. R.—Has real interest and is well put on.

N.—For the theatre that wants this type of picture—and there are many of them these days—this picture has every stamp of sure-fire box-office success.

"Safety Last"

Harold Lloyd's Seven Reeler for Pathe Is His Best Picture—A Knockout of Comedy and Thrills

Reviewed by Stanley C. Warrick

In "Safety Last," his seven-reel Pathe feature comedy, Harold Lloyd has gone and done it. It is his best comedy to date. He has elevated the quality of a laugh-producer to such heights that even he will find it extremely difficult to equal, let alone surpass, this mark. It is another testimonial that one touch of Harold makes the whole world grin, and in addition to grinning it will make the fans laugh, chuckle and chortle with glee. It is a comedy of unusual merit, it is replete with healthy fun and humor that is clever and clean, and unquestionably offers excellent entertainment even to the most critical spectator.

You will experience thrills and hearty laughs simultaneously in unlimited measure, for in this picture Lloyd could compel laughter from a sphinx and make a steeplejack sit up and marvel at his display of daredeviltry. There are long spells of roaring laughter, while thrills are continually running up and down your spine.

In spite of the comedy vein, it gets a stranglehold on the sympathies of the spectators. There are no hackneyed situations, and the suspense caused by Harold in climbing the front of the tall building, like a human fly, are due to near accidents that are perfectly reasonable.

Mildred Davis is charming as usual and is a splendid foil for Lloyd. There are some splendid scenes satirizing the feminine shopper. It is another evidence that art with a capital A is invading the field of comedy.

Moreover, this comedy has an excellently sustained plot. Suspense, the lure of young love, and a dash of old-time slapstick comedy are some of the ingredients that enter into the success of this film, for it is safe to say that it is an achievement that will meet with spontaneous success. With its decidedly clever ideas, thrills and excitement, suspense and delightful comedy, it will be enjoyed by everyone, and I would not hesitate to recommend it to anyone anywhere. It is safe to say that the public will be a big medium in advertising this picture.

"The Covered Wagon"

Paramount Special Breathes Indomitable American Spirit and Is Tremendous From Every Angle

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Paramount's James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon," easily takes rank right up in the front among the screen's finest achievements. It is the story of how the intrepid pioneers with their wagon trains journeyed thousands of miles from the Missouri River to the Pacific, over the Oregon Trail, making only about twelve miles a day with their oxen-drawn teams. The way these men, and their wives as well, faced tremendous obstacles and overcame them by their indomitable courage exerts a tremendous hold on the spectator.

Stupendous in its scope and treatment, with its wagon trains made up of hundreds of wagons, so many that they stretch out and are lost in the horizon, with its cast of hundreds, possibly thousands of persons; yet even bigger and more remarkable and dwarfing its spectacular side is the truly remarkable manner in which James Cruze and those associated with him have caught the indomitable spirit of the American pioneer, the spirit which has made America the great country it is today. It is a picture that will make you glad you are an American, a picture with that rare quality, soul, which grips you and stands out above all else. With a theme every bit as big as "The Birth of a Nation," it is even more general in its appeal and to a greater extent brings out the American spirit that rises above all difficulties.

Almost as striking as the bigness of the picture and its exemplification of the pioneer spirit is the fact that while it is entirely a Western story, it is absolutely free from hokum or exaggeration; it is never melodramatic, and while intensely dramatic, it follows more the outline of a narrative than a drama. It would appear that those responsible have staked the picture's appeal on the tremendousness of the theme, its force and virility, its absolute ring of truth, and purposely refrained from overemphasis of the many big scenes or anything which would subordinate even for a moment the basic idea. This was a bold stroke, but its success is unquestionable and probably even beyond expectations.

But the human intimate touches have not been neglected, nor the definite appeal of real living characters with their love affairs, joys, sorrows and even villainy; for there is a romance which dovetails wonderfully into the theme and there are sidelights and characterizations, little details admirably executed, which, far from detracting, even serve to enhance the basic theme. The story of the leading characters is not dragged in as a frame on which to hang the idea of the production, but is a definite and integral part of the theme.

Neither is comedy lacking, for there are many chuckles and laughs naturally introduced in the character of the old scout Jackson. This, too, is real legitimate comedy, the outcome of the action and of his quaint twist of character and difference of his viewpoint from that of his chief, regarding the advisability of getting rid of the villain, and is never hokum or slapstick.

From the spectacular side, there are enormous scenes wonderfully photographed; in fact, the remarkable photography is another striking feature of the picture. There is a tremendous prairie fire, the struggle of the wagon train through mountain snows, an attack by Indians on the train, a thrilling buffalo hunt, and an extremely vivid scene of the fording of a wide river with the wagons floated by means of logs attached to them, while the oxen swim against the current. There are many other angles of excellence, vivid points and excellent touches too numerous to mention, which combine to make this an extraordinary production.

The cast is entirely in keeping with the bigness of the picture. J. Warren Kerrigan, absent from the screen for some time, stages a fine come-back in the leading role; Lois Wilson is excellent as the girl. The same is true of little Johnny Fox, Charles Ogle, Alan Hale and the other principals. The most outstanding characterization is that of Ernest Torrance as Jackson, the scout. His serious scenes stand out as well as his comedy ones. Ably assisting him also is Tully Marshall as a trader.

So vivid is this picture that it makes you feel at times that you are traveling right along with the wagon train, enduring their experiences, and in its most telling moments makes a thrill run up and down your spine. It is a production that everybody in your section will want to see and will go away praising it. Its box-office possibilities are as big as the picture itself, and that's going some.

Molly, daughter of Wingate, the leader, is engaged to Sam Woodhull, one of Wingate's lieutenants. Woodhull is a scoundrel. With the coming of another train appears Will Banion, and he and Molly soon fall in love with each other. Woodhull tries in every way to discredit Banion, spreading the report that he was fired from the Mexican army for cattle stealing. He finally has Banion and his train banished from the other trains, but Banion more than once saves his life and finally saves the train when it is attacked by Indians. Report of gold discovery in California sends Banion's crowd there. The others keep on, and after untold hardships reach Oregon. Banion's record is finally cleared and he journeys to Oregon, to Molly and happiness, as Woodhull has been killed by Jackson while he was attempting to take Banion's life.

"The Girl I Loved"

Charles Ray's Remarkable Acting Makes This United Artists Release One of His Very Best Pictures

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney

Charlie Ray's stock ought to climb several more points as the outcome of his second United Artists release, "The Girl I Loved."

It is a success from a production viewpoint, and ought to prove a financial success for exhibitors. It has what many term an "unhappy ending" but it is not tragic or distasteful. While another gets the girl, the hero reconciles himself, and the picture ends with him as a good loser joining in the wedding festivities.

Ray's interpretation of the role of John Middleton, an Indiana farm lad, brings him back to his type of characters a few years ago. The picture was adapted from Riley's poem of the same name.

For fine suppressed acting, one can hardly expect a better style than that exhibited by Ray, particularly when he realizes he has lost to another; and for melodrama one must give him due credit in the scenes where he is in the runaway, and afterward. There are two hallucinations suffered by the boy after the accident. One is a surprise to the audience, but the other does not get over as well. The settings are beautiful. The outdoor scenes are most artistic, and many will rave over them.

The supporting cast, who acquit themselves creditably, include Patsy Ruth Miller and Ramsey Wallace. Miss Miller has a very winsome role and carries it with grace and effectiveness.

Story

John Middleton's mother adopts an orphan girl, Mary, and John later falls in love with her and proposes while returning from a dance. She confesses she has become engaged to Willie Brown. Unnerved, John loses control of the horses and is thrown out and injured. Mary nurses him and Brown continues his courtship. John's mind is thrown in a turmoil and he embraces Mary against her will. Believing he has killed her, he rushes out and discovers it is a dream. Later he attacks his rival, firing three shots into his body only to find that this too is only a dream. Chastened, he adopts a more kindly attitude toward Brown and finally, stifling his own love, sees her married to Brown.

Pola Negri Gives Fine Performance in Her First American-Made Production for Paramount

Reviewed by Elmer H. Mayer

Paramount could hardly have chosen a better vehicle for the first American-made production to star the famed European actress, Pola Negri, than Robert Hichen's "Bella Donna." This novel was one of the "best sellers," and has made excellent screen material, through the masterly direction of George Fitzmaurice. Pola Negri excelled herself in this production, playing the dramatic situations with skill, and never overacting, in a role that necessitated the portrayal of various emotions. If Paramount continues to provide her with the right kind of story material, and produces her succeeding productions on a similar scale, the name of Pola Negri will mean real dollars to exhibitors everywhere.

"Bella Donna" leaves nothing to be desired in the way of real drama, settings, location shots, direction, and all the things that go to make real screen entertainment. The fog scenes and sandstorm were very realistic and out of the ordinary. The star's gowns and love scenes will make a big hit with the lady picture fans.

Chief in support of the star are Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson and Adolphe Menjou. These performers are always good, and this case is no exception.

Lovers of real drama on the picture screen will talk for some time to come about "Bella Donna." It has established Pola Negri as a real star in American-made pictures.

"The Man from Glengarry"

Ernest Shipman's Interesting Outdoor Special Released by Hodkinson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Among outdoor specials, "The Man From Glengarry" should occupy an interesting place. Ernest Shipman has exploited some of the thrilling phases of the logging industry in Canada in connection with a melodramatic story by Ralph Connor. This attraction is a fine choice for the theatre where heavy action of a somewhat primitive character is liked.

A fight on the logs, mid-river, stands out as one of the effective moments. The novelty of this scene which ends in the rescue of the girl who nearly drowns in attempting to stop the fight, will appeal to those who like to see fights staged in rather original style. Two explosions of a dam add to the excitement. There are a number of interesting long-shots, exploiting the spectacular angles of log-floating in familiar style.

The story is a many-sided glimpse of the lumberman's life. Church scenes, forest life, dance-hall frivolity and a trip to the city are combined in a dramatic narrative. The cast, while not showing unusual finesse, is capable for this type of performance. E. L. Fernandez has an amusing role as the French-Canadian braggadocio. He handles it entertainingly especially in the first part, the penitent mood later on not being altogether convincing.

Human Interest and Comedy in F. B. O. Vehicle for Johnnie Walker

H. C. Witwer's gift for attaching real human interest to the experiences of his characters permeates F. B. O.'s picturization of this popular story of his. Johnny Walker is a happy choice for the featured part, and enlists more than usual sympathy. The story is appealing throughout and has humorous touches that will be sure to please.

A domesticated prize-fighter is the leading character. After a thrilling victory, pictured entertainingly for those who like prize fights, he renounces this profession to conform to his wife's social ambitions. His wife gets a little ahead of him in the social race and this furnishes the heart interest and suspense.

The naturalness of the action is one of the picture's charms. At times it may seem more like a story than a drama, but this difference will please those who are tired of exaggerated action and intense melodrama. There are several dramatic flashes and an excellent comedy wind-up. It is the best vehicle Johnnie Walker has had for some time showing him in an exceptionally likable role, and doing full justice to his personality. Eddie Gribbon, as the ex-fighter's manager, does an amusing character very well.

"The Tiger's Claw"

Excellent Performance by Jack Holt in Paramount Picture of Indian Jungles

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Jack Holt's performance is a strikingly successful feature of this Paramount attraction. His ability in a part with heavier dramatic opportunities than usual will impress those who are familiar with his recent achievements. His characterization is the dominant note in a conventional offering.

The story and atmosphere will be effective to those who like jungle settings, East Indian intrigue and a romance intensified by a racial clash. The drama has been built to conform to standards that have met with continued favor. It is not always convincing, but because of characteristic color and permissable melodramatic flashes, it means entertainment for the majority.

An American engineer is married to a half-caste who has saved his life. Her jealousy of an English girl prompts her intrusion into social circles, where, after the manner frequently used in similar pictures, she proves a spectacular figure. An old love affair of hers is revived in time to save the day for the hero.

There is suspense at various points in the drama, but no striking departure from what might be guessed at the outset. The tiger's attack stands out as exceptionally vivid. The bursting of the dam is managed picturesquely without any extravagant effects. Jack Holt's excellent work and the even merit of a supporting cast, featuring Aileen Pringle and Eva Novak, will be appreciated.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"

Paramount Re-makes Widely Known Story with Mary Miles Minter and Antonio Moreno

Reviewed by A. Van Buren Powell

A title that has carried a book, a play and a song to success must have its appeal to the public. "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is such a title and Paramount, having given the story production some years ago, brings it back to the screen in a new version and with new faces.

As is natural in a story of a mountain feud there is little of novelty in plot. It is not so much in plot that this production makes its appeal; the ending is apparent almost from the start; but the story has a simple directness and an appeal to human sympathy and understanding that robs it somewhat of the taint of triteness.

The production was made from the well known book by John Fox, Jr., and the play by Eugene Walter. The scenario moves directly through the appointed situations, without padding. Charles Maigne has directed in a clean-cut fashion. Some directors might have seen opportunities for big settings and marked contrast to the simple mountain atmosphere at the point where the mountain girl goes into the world for an education; but Mr. Maigne keeps his story true to type and it benefits by his discretion.

The photography is of the expected good quality and there are some excellent shots of mountain backgrounds. It is mostly an outdoor story, but where interiors are used they keep strict harmony with the simplicity of the people in them.

Mary Miles Minter brings June Tolliver to life with fidelity to the characterization visualized in the book. She plays with evident sincerity. John Hale, as played by Antonio Moreno, is a vital, likeable chap living up to the character adequately. Ernest Torrence, Edwin Brady and others of the cast provide well played mountain types.

The title should draw and the story should please all who know and like the book and the play. The old song provides a good music motif to enhance the charm of the story.

From the novel by John Fox, Jr., and the play by Eugene Walter Directed by Charles Maigne.
Scenario by Will M. Ritchie.

Story

A mountain feud between the Tollivers and the Falins is temporarily suspended by the coming of Law and Order, represented by John Hale, who falls in love with June, the mountain girl. He is instrumental in giving her an education, supplying funds to complete her studies when the coal boom in the mountains fails. The feud breaks out again with the return of a banished ringleader, and the climax comes with an attempt at jail delivery of a Tolliver held for the murder of a policeman. The feud bids fair to exterminate both factions, but June, in a bitter arraignment of these methods when her sweetheart is shot, makes the men see the error of their way and the recovery of her sweetheart enables him to use the marriage license he has procured—with June there.

"Lost and Found"

Forceful Drama and Picturesqueness Mark Goldwyn South Sea Island Picture Filmed in Tahiti

Colorful and vivid is "Lost and Found" with the explanatory sub-title "On a South Sea Island," R. A. Walsh's Goldwyn production of a story by Carey Wilson. Of special interest is the fact that this production was filmed in the actual locale of the story, the entire company being taken to Tahiti for the purpose. As a result the out-door scenes are real and unusual and many of them strikingly beautiful, and these have been enhanced by exquisite photography.

The story itself is red-blooded and romantic and concerns the quest of a sea captain in the far-away corners of the earth, to find his wife and child who were missing when he returned from a voyage. Forceful, but not always pleasant is the development, as for instance where the hero, Captain Blackbird, refuses to save a girl who you know to be his daughter, though he does not know it, and the mental torture of the girl's lover by the savages with their never ceasing beating of drums. But these all add to the drama of the story. There is plenty of action and the interest is held throughout.

Director Walsh has taken full advantage of the possibilities of the South Sea location and a feature of the production is a fight between two rival tribes in which several hundred natives of one tribe cross a lagoon in their quaint boats and give battle to the other tribe. In addition there are attractive scenes of the natives and their customs, including their dances which resemble the Hawaiian hula-hula.

This production is not just another Sea Island story, but a picture that because of the novelty and picturesqueness and realism of its location, its strong drama and several punch scenes, including a gripping fight when Captain Blackbird finds the man who lured his wife away, and his mad race to save his daughter from the savage chief, should prove welcome in any theatre.

House Peters as Captain Blackbird gives a fine performance, and George Siegmann gives a forceful portrayal as the man who abducted Blackbird's wife. Pauline Starke was an excellent choice for the role of the girl, a wistful type which suits her well, and although he has not very much to do, Antonio Moreno is pleasing as her lover.

Arrow Has Best James Oliver Curwood Story Filmed With Great Forest Fire

Pine Tree Pictures Corporation's Dell Henderson directed production of James Oliver Curwood's story, entitled "Jacqueline, or, Blazing Barriers," is the best of its type this writer has ever seen. It is a smooth-running story, convincingly acted by a cast of able players, with a forest fire that is not only the genuine article, but also one of the most thrilling reflected on the screen. The action leading up to the fire is rapid and dramatically entertaining, with sensational fights and rides.

While the cast is an all-star affair, it remains for little Russell Griffin to stand out conspicuously. He easily "steals" the entire picture and one is ever on the lookout for him. He makes of a "kid" role a character without which the production, dramatically well constructed and acted as it is, would not be the big box office bet it is. He grips his audience from start to finish and when he is on the set—and he is before you during ninety per cent. of the picture—his work is so realistic, so cunning and artistic that the others fade into the background.

However, the cast is a good one with Lew Cody running second only to little Griffin. The others are Marguerite Courtot, who is lovely as the backwoods girl. Effie Shannon, J. Barney Sherry, Edmund Breese, Charley Fang, Paul Panzer, Sheldon Lewis, Edria Fisk, Gus Weinberg and little Joe DePew give good support.

The direction and photography are flawless. "Jacqueline" is a sensational thriller

Jacqueline, daughter of a backwoodsman, is in love with Raol. The boss proceeds to break up this match, but unsuccessfully. The girl is kidnapped by the Chinaman and hidden in his hut, where, when the boss arrives, a struggle ensues for the possesion of Jacqueline, during which a lamp is upset and sets fire to the hut. The fire gains headway. Meanwhile Jacqueline escapes, only to be followed by the Chink. The blaze has eaten its way to the forest and before detected sets fire to the tall timber. Raol, thinking Jacqueline is in the hut, having been so informed by Little Peter, rushes there, and, not finding her, wanders aimlessly about the burning forest, finally stumbling over her unconscious body. He saves her. The fire is finally subdued, and with this victory comes everlasting happiness for Jacqueline and Raol, for the boss had paid the penalty.

"Luck"

A C. C. Burr Production Wherein Johnny Hines Proves Himself a Great Box Office Star

If you want a comedy melodrama replete with a series of sure-fire dramatic climaxes, clean, wholesome and original humorous gags, plus a cast of players that work at a pace consistent with the smooth, entertaining rapidity with which the story is unfolded, land on C. C. Burr's "Luck," starring Johnny Hines—and land on it hard. Remember what we said about "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint." And you well remember how you mopped up on each one. Well, "Luck" is far better than either one. It is snappier, dramatically more valuable than "Sure Fire Flint" and just as funny as either.

In "Luck" Johnny Hines scores an individual triumph that is certain to register him as one of the best money-making light comedians of the screen. He is absolutely in a class by himself. Not even the late and popular Wallace Reid could have coped with the style of Hines. The latter is a hard worker and captivates his audience immediately. He is full of life and does everything from reckless horse riding to shaking a pair of mean shimmying dominoes. He gets more laughs out of a single gag than a lot of others do in an entire production. And they are all good, hearty laughs, too. Dramatically, he can be just as convincingly serious as he can be funny. And he is in "Luck." In fact, Johnny Hines is "Luck." The story fits him to a "t." He carries himself through the more serious episodes, such as the mine collapse, fights, etc., gloriously.

We would like to enumerate the many original bits which, in our humble opinion, are above the ordinary, but limited space prevents this. However, your patrons—no matter what their taste be—will enjoy this picture immensely. It has drama, romance, melodrama, thrills and hundreds of real laughs.

"Luck" is the peppiest American comedy melodrama on the market to-day. It is a bit of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "Broadway Jones" and "Lilliom." We say "Lilliom" because the character study enacted by Hines is on a par with the principal in that production. It is a story of humans as they really exist—and not thrown together into a story merely because the yarn necessitates the presence of individuals.

For speed climaxes "Luck" makes the most of the sensational serials seem like child's play; he hops freights, climbs rooftops a la Fairbanks, rides a horse a la Tom Mix, fights like Thomas Meighan and "comedes" with the life and ambition that Leon Errol puts into his work.

The story is a fascinatingly interesting one based on the escapades of a lad who bets $100,000 he will earn $10,000 in a year. The settings are on Long Island, small towns and in a Pennsylvania mining village. The cast is superb and typically Hinesque. Violet Mersereau plays well opposite Hines. Charley Murray, Edmund Breese, Flora Finch, Warner Richard, Polly Moran and Harry Fraser give consistent support. The titles by Ralph Spence are hilarious and serious, according to the sequence. The direction and photography both are good.

The Story

Robert Carter, a wealthy young bachelor, bets $100,000 with Crosby that he will start out in his running suit—after having luckily won a cross-country run in which Bob was being chased by an elephant—and at the end of a year make $10,000. After a series of adventures he lands in a Pennsylvania town via the freight route. With the help of an ambitious young lawyer he manages to build a village. He is selling lots when an enemy charges him with fraud. Bob has but two hours in which to raise the money, for at the end of that period the year will be up. He rushes to the home of Crosland, who informs him that Sylvia, with whom Bob had fallen in love, has gone after Pollard. The girl makes her way to the coal mine, and while in a struggle with Pollard the earth above gives way and they are buried under the debris. Bob rushes to the scene and saves the girl, wins the confidence of Crosland and incidentally collects on his wager, for he has made the money within the specific period—the ending being entirely original and a corker.

Herbert Rawlinson Is Star of Crook Melodrama Distributed by Universal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle for Universal is a crook melodrama. He has a congenial role which affords opportunities for hand-to-hand encounters and for romance. The story starts out with the as a down-and-outer, who is helped by a woman, only to later discover she is a member of a gang of crooks. There is a division of sympathy due to the fact that the woman crook and also a society woman love him. The ending, which shows the society girl as the winner in the race for his love, will probably not entirely satisfy many spectators, for the other woman, by her sacrifice, which ends in her death, has won considerable sympathy, and the society girl is not of a forceful type.

There is plenty of action, but at times consistency has been sacrificed to speed, and as a result it is a picture of only average entertainment value.

Alice Lake appears as the woman crook and gives a good performance, Edna Murphy is attractive as the society girl and the remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

While this is not the best picture in which Herbert Rawlinson has starred, it should prove satisfactory to his admirers and to those who like crook stories.

"You Are Guilty"

Edgar Lewis Production Shows James Kirkwood to Advantage—Mastodon Independent Release

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

James Kirkwood scores triumphantly in Edgar Lewis' production of Roy Middleton's story, "You Are Guilty," which Mastodon Films, Inc., is releasing in the independent market. The story is melodramatic throughout, with Kirkwood giving such a splendid account of himself that the efforts of everybody else in the picture are of a secondary consideration. As a matter of fact it is the individual effort put into the piece by the various players that wins the attention of the onlooker. There is, for instance, Mary Carr, who makes a splendid mother, and Carleton Brickert, whose heavy work is real art, for he is a finished player, there being rhyme and reason for everything he does—and whatever he does he does successfully in this picture.

The story is cleverly told, for it is not an easy one to relate cinematographically. Particularly true is this of events leading up to the trial of the hero. But this is given increased dramatic value through the splendid work of little Russell Griffin, from whom the industry will probably hear much in the very near future. The production—it is every bit that—has many luxurious settings, interior and exterior. Doris Kenyon as Alice Farrell gives Kirkwood capable support.

The direction by Edgar Lewis was faultless, with the photography acceptable.

Steve is charged with murder, but with the help of little Buddy, son of Mrs. Tennent, a widow, whom Steve had courted before disappearing, he is freed—and marries the girl of his heart.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

DAVID BELASCO made his bow as an active production partner of Warner Brothers this week. He was greeted officially into the industry by no less a notable than Will Hays. The trade press, representative exchangemen and exhibitors were on hand. It was a memorable incident, even though most of the time was spent in posing for photographs.

Belasco's invasion of the industry is a tribute to the efforts of Warner Brothers. They alone are responsible for that genius' decision to try screen production. Belasco brings himself into the business—a genius that will tend to elevate. His productions are masterpieces. He will oversee the screen pictures. That alone is sufficient guarantee of the high quality of the Warner-Belasco pictures.

The pity of it was that David Belasco was not given an even more enthusiastic welcome. We have given dinners, honors, etc., to many whose interest in the business has been merely mercenary. But here is a genius—here is a man who brings into the picture business—a heart, a soul. And goodness knows how much both are needed.

Our regret is that there are not more David Belascos. If the industry had declared a holiday to greet Belasco it would not have done too much.

Warner Brothers' gain in the acquisition of David Belasco and his productions and stars is the entire industry's gain.

We hope, in the near future, to see this gray-haired master given the pretentious welcome a genius of his standing is entitled to.

If we must hold banquets, hoorays, etc., let's give them to those who will do the industry the most good.

IN our humble opinion, David Belasco's affiliation with screen entertainment means more than anything else that this industry has done in the way of maximizing public interest in that form of diversion. Belasco is a known quantity to the theatre-going public.

He is not a sensationalist; neither is he an idealist. He is just an alert showman with artistic tendencies that are neither fantastic nor impossible. His record as stage producer bears that out.

There is not another man in the industry today—and this writer has overlooked none of the notables—who means so much to the public as David Belasco. His every move in the business will interest the public. David Belasco is one of the few distinguished gentlemen whose every act constitutes news.

The fact that Warner Brothers have been fortunate enough to induce Belasco to join their force should not prompt others to sit back and look on. The entire industry is better off when men like Belasco are brought into it. That reception at Warner Brothers' spacious offices Tuesday will not soon be forgotten.

The trade press editors met Belasco in person. If they were not inspired, we're sorry. Belasco could have told these gentlemen a lot about their own business—a lot they do not know about the show business. For, after all, the real constructive critic is the outsider—the man who has viewed the business from unbiased angles, from neutral sidelines.

David Belasco is an artist, true. But he is that rare showman this industry is so direly in need of.

Belasco—The Genius

Johnny Hines' "Luck"

Chronic Knockers

A Real "Kid" Star

Effective Exploitation

Summer and Pictures

Simon Legree, etc.

BY ROGER FERRI

WE saw Charles C. Burr's next Johnny Hines picture, "Luck," the other day. We consider "Luck" better than either "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" or "Sure-fire Flint." It is a comedy melodrama replete with original stunts that establish Johnny Hines as the Wallace Reid of the present day.

It is not fair to Johnny Hines to compare him with other light comedian-leads now on the silver sheet, for Johnny is original in his mannerisms, screen presence and personality. He is in a class by himself. We give Johnny Hines one more year—and then we expect to see in him one of the most popular men of the pantomime art.

Johnny Hines has been coming along like a tornado. He has improved with every picture. He is a finished performer, versatile, can ride a horse as well as the best of them—a fact he proves in "Luck"—can swim, box, fence, and what not. He is speed personified.

But more than anything else—Johnny Hines wins his audience. And the latter is not hasty in forgetting him, either. The impression he makes is lasting.

People adored Wallace Reid. Well, they'll idolize Johnny Hines in another year. He is a clean-living youth, who has reached the position he occupies today through hard work, persistent and determined plugging.

And he's everything a screen idol should be.

THERE are too many chronic knockers in the business. There is an army of "knockers" loose ever ready to throw a monkey wrench into any man's machinery. They are not the prosperous sort, either. You generally find them laying idly about film business, telling each other how "unlucky" they have been. They always "remember when." But that is all. We meet them every day. What a fine lot of hypocrites these birds are. They're so wise they're getting nearer and nearer the poor house—without knowing it.

CAUGHT "Jacqueline," Arrow's latest gem. Dell Henderson certainly spent a lot of time making this production. And Pine Tree Pictures Corporation footed the bill. But, after all, every dime spent on the venture will be returned with substantial interest, for "Jacqueline" is the best James Oliver Curwood ever made. It has a forest fire that beats anything this writer has seen in the way of blazes. And we have the word of Gov. Milliken for it that it is the real thing. Knowing the Governor to be a former lumberman, we do not doubt his contention. It's a spectacularly remarkable fire that all but threw the capacity audience that was present when we saw the picture out of its seats.

"Jacqueline" is a rare production. It has melodramatic value that makes its greatest appeal via the box office. The cast is replete with big names, including Lew Cody, Marguerite Courtot, Edmund Breese, Robert Edeson and many others. Included in the latter is little Russell Griffin.

RUSSELL GRIFFIN "steals" the picture. He steals every scene in which he appears. He is the real star of "Jacqueline." We have never seen a kid player do so much—and do it so well—as little Russell does in this production. He is natural, effective. There is nothing mechanical about this kiddie.

We admired the work of Lew Cody and the others. But were we an exhibitor we would bill Russell Griffin as the big attraction. He'll win your audiences any way. Just keep your eye on this blonde kiddie—he'll make box office history for you some day.

SPEAKING of "Jacqueline" reminds us of the splendid stunt Arrow Film Corporation pulled out in Paterson, N. J., on the occasion of the premier showing of that feature. An honest-to-goodness pyrotechnic display reproducing the forest fire was given—and on a spot that was visible to the entire city. Patersonians have been a "mark" for exploiteers, but this firework stunt virtually resulted in the declaration of a holiday.

The display was given despite the cold wave that blew over the city Monday night. And thousands came out to see it. Paterson won't soon forget "Jacqueline."

And we're sure Arrow Film Corporation will profit hugely by the stunt.

A CERTAIN distributor this week sent a letter complaining because we have "been throwing my publicity in the waste basket." True, that is just what we have done. And just what we will keep on doing with the bunk that emanates from his office under the guise of "news publicity." There is no such animal.

REMEMBER Simon Legree? He was one of the many "heavies" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Well, that individual had nothing on the tactics of some exhibitors we know. The picture business has many Simon Legrees. And they wield just as nasty a whip as did that slave-driver—only more vehemently perhaps.

Out in the Middlewest there is a theatre circuit. The head of the circuit booked a series of independent pictures. He did not specify the houses the pictures would play, for he was interested in another exchange—opposition. Anyway, he succeeded in virtually killing the independent man's pictures—and giving his own features the big play.

These tactics make a person of Jesse James' standing seem like a Sunday school teacher.

CHARLES C. BURR next year will operate his production forces out at Glendale, L. I., on the "stock" basis, i. e., his pictures will be all-star affairs.

Firework Display in Near Zero Weather at "Jacqueline" Opening

By ROGER FERRI

PATERSON, N. J.—Arrow Film Corporation, appreciative of the value of good and effective exploitation to a meritorious production, on Monday evening at the Adams Brothers' United States Theatre here, again came to the foreground with a stunt that left the fact that "Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers," a Pine Tree picture, was playing at that house unknown to nobody in this city or within a radius of twenty miles of this burg.

After a week of clever exploitation "Jacqueline," which was more than a year in making, the first shot having been taken late in November, 1921, and the last on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, 1923, was given its premiere here Monday to audiences that taxed every seat in the beautiful U. S. Theatre for five performances on the coldest day of the year.

But the extreme cold meant nothing in the lives of Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation; Ray Johnston, J. Charles Davis, Peter Adams and the others involved, for the huge fireworks display planned for Monday night was carried out without a single hitch in the program. Mr. Shallenberger's assistant, Mr. Davis, arranged this display, which took the storm—for a pyrotechnic display at this time of the year is indeed somewhat of an extreme novelty to otherwise quiet Patersonians.

Nevertheless, firework exhibition it was. The Arrow exploitation force very ably worked one solid week getting the necessary permission of the Mayor, Police Chief and Fire Chief to stage the exhibition. This permission obtained, the next task was that of finding an ideal spot. After much looking about it was decided to set off the pyrotechnics on Farrat Mountain, which faces Paterson's main stem wherein the theatre is located.

Newspapers marvelled at the stunt and devoted columns to announcing the display, directing the attention of their readers to the daring of those behind the movement and also informing the public of the fact that the firework display was in reality to be a reproduction of the forest fire that is so vividly and sensationally introduced in "Jacqueline."

Monday morning found rain drenching this textile city. But toward noon it cleared, only to allow the coldest wave of the year to sweep this city at tremendous velocity. For a while it was feared that the program would have to be abandoned, but that was not necessary—for at the advertised time, 6 o'clock, in the presence of thousands, some 800 in front of the theatre, the display was set off. The rip-zip-bing-bang-boom skyrockets, pin-wheels, etc., awoke the town and within an hour after the first shot was heard, every Patersonian had been made acquainted with the engagement of "Jacqueline" at the U. S. Theatre.

It was the first time such a stunt was used here—and it is proving a huge investment, for crowds are patronizing the U. S. despite the presence of Lent. "Jacqueline" is a marvelous production—the best James Oliver Curwood picture made—and will satisfy the most fastidious. That stunt will bring them in—and the picture will entertain them superlatively.

"Jacqueline" was excellently exploited and Mr. Shallenberger had every reason to feel proud upon his arrival here with a party of guests from New York Monday night. The advance exploitation of the picture was wonderful. The local newspaper devoted considerable space on Tuesday to the unusual stunt. One published a four-column cartoon, drawn by a staff artist, depicting the various guests who came here to attend the showing.

Earlier in the day Ex-Governor Carl E. Milliken, of Maine, president of Pine Tree Pictures Company, which produced "Jacqueline," was greeted by Mayor Van Nort, who gave him the key to the city, Police Chief Tracy and Fire Chief Coyle. Following the showing Manager Peter Adams introduced Dell Henderson, director of the production, who acted as master of ceremony. Others who spoke were Sheldon Lewis, who plays the "heavy"; Lew Cody, the leads, and clever little Russell Griffin, who is by far the star of the picture, having literally stolen the entire production from his older associate thespians.

Little Russell Griffin completely won over his audience. His performance on the screen was remarkable for a lad his age. He was the center of attraction at every stage of the production. Consensus of opinion among members of the audience was that he is deserving of the star mention on all billings.

After the speech-making at the theatre, the party adjourned to the United States Hotel were the guests of Mr. Shallenberger at a buffet supper. Those who attended were: W. E. Shallenberger, W. Ray Johnston, Ex-Governor Carl E. Milliken, Director Dell Henderson, Sheldon Lewis, Lew Cody, L. Case Russell, John Lowell, Maurice Kraus, H. H. Thomas, J. S. Jossey, of Cleveland, Paul Swift, Larry Urbach, H. Hirsch, of Boston; Roger Ferri, Maver Goldberg, Ray Gallagher, Larry Moen, George Blaisdell, Evangeline Russell, Mayor Van Nort and editors and special writers from the local press.

Pittsburgh Gives Ind. Pictures Big Sendoff This Week

PITTSBURGH — (Special) — Independent pictures are having their inning in first run houses down town this week. At the Cameraphone, the headline attraction is Weber & North's "Notoriety," a Bill Nigh production, while at the Cameo Principal Pictures Corporation's "Flesh And Blood" with Lon Chaney is featured. Over in East Liberty at the Alhambra, "Thorns And Orange Blossoms" is the big draw. The same picture is at the State Theatre, a Rowland-Clark theatre here.

Joe Lefko, general manager of the Federated exchange, has been working the local territory the past several days. In Altoona he booked the three newest Lichtman productions namely: "Are You A Failure," "April Showers," and "The Girl Who Came Back" to the Strand Theatre. This house also booked two of the Principal productions, "Environment," starring Milton Sills and Alice Lake; also "The World's a Stage," starring Dorothy Phillips and written by Elinor Glyn. The last two named productions were booked by Joe to the Plaza Theatre, Wheeling, while the Liberty in the same town bought "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." Back to Altoona again Notopulos bought two Lichtmans, "The Hero" and "Poor Men's Wives;" also the four pictures starring Betty Blythe, "How Women Love," "Darling of the Rich," "Truth About Wives" and "Girl Who Got Enough." This week, Lefko will visit Erie and New Castle, while next week he will go to the Cincinnati territory.

Harry Grelle, manager of the Supreme Photoplay Company, which exchange has just taken over the Iron City Film Exchange, distributors of the Warner Brothers Classics of the Screen, was confined to his home several days last week, and the early part of this week suffering with the "flu." Harry is again on the job, however, and his many friends are glad to hear him say he is feeling "as fit as a fiddle."

Harry Charnas, head of the Federated exchanges, with his home offices at Cleveland, and branch offices at Cincinnati, Detroit, and Pittsburgh, spent a few days in the Iron City last week, conferring with Manager Fischer of the local office. Mr. Charnas expressed himself as being highly pleased with the show-Lichtman product. He stated that he has found the current season the most profitable and best in the history of his rapidly-growing organization. He is already laying plans for next season, and has come to the conclusion that only the really big productions will find a ready market among theatre owners.

Joe Rock leads the Federated fun-makers in showings of two reel comedies from Manager Meyer Fischer's office this week. His "Ali Baba" is on view in the Nemo, Johnstown, and the Capitol, Washington; his "Aladdin" in the Star, Tarentum; his "Little Red Robinhood" in the Driggs, Clearfield, and the Lyric, Oil City, and the latest "The Pill," in the Liberty, Wheeling, and the Garden, Lock Haven.

The many friends of Harry Wimsatt will be glad to know that he is back again in Pittsburgh as President of the newly organized All Theatres Pictures, Inc.

Anti-Drug Bill Seen as Narcotic Picture Tie-Up

MINNEAPOLIS — (Special) — With the introduction recently in the State Legislature of a bill tending to wipe out the drug peddlers in this State "The Drug Traffic," which Ben Friedman is handling in this territory, was given added impetus. Ben is successfully tieing up this important move with his picture and is arousing considerable interest in his film by getting the co-operation of the anti-drug crusaders and women's clubs in various towns and cities in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and northwestern Michigan.

"Shadows" and "Heroes of the Street" are literally mopping up in this territory judging from reports that are pouring into this city from the out-of-town exhibitors. "Shadows" has proved a particularly strong big town picture, going best in those houses.

Milton Crandall, who has done considerable exploitation for various independent pictures, having first attracted national attention by the clever way in which he put over Clara Kimball Young while she was with Equity Pictures Corporation three years ago, is in this city. He is exploiting "Down To The Sea In Ships," which was first heralded to the trade via Moving Picture World.

Minneapolis independents will turn out 100 per cent. for the big national exhibitor convention in Chicago in May. The boys are planning a number of stunts. They are looking for Steffes to head the M. P. T. O. A. after the Chicago convention.

So far as is known it is practically set that J. Fred Cubberly's Finkelstein & Rubin exchange here will continue handling the Warner Brothers, Al Lichtman and C. C. Burr productions next season.

Although this has been its first year, the F. & R. Exchange because of its theatre association has had a banner year, every worthwhile independent picture registering satisfactorily from the financial viewpoint.

The entire South was sold this week on the 1923 Hallroom Boys comedies when Progress Pictures, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., completed negotiations with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for their territorial release.

Independent Propaganda Being Disseminated by C. B. C. Films

The launching of a systematic campaign in which all the Independent producers and distributors—especially those distributing through State Right channels—co-operate, is being advocated by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which this week started the ball rolling in that direction. The idea is to crystallize, and to push through to a finer consummation, the co-operative spirit that has lately come into being between Independents and exhibitors.

Both Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt have long concentrated their effort to getting a fifty-fifty break for the Independent—and with that idea coming more and more into the realms of reality, they believe that while each man should, of course, fight for his own product, the time has come to pool interests and effort, so to speak, for the common good of the Independents—believing that with the strengthening of the common cause there will be a corresponding benefit for the individual and his product.

Toward this end, therefore, C. B. C. is launching propaganda, and will, it is stated, have on its stationery, on special stickers and streamers, on much of its advertising copy, and anywhere that it will serve to spread the propaganda, some such line as "Go Independent in 1923"—"Keep Your Eye on the Independents in 1923"—"Watch the Independents Grow in 1923," or something else along similar lines.

It is announced that, with the hope of adding strength to the idea, Jack Cohn is asking other Independent producers and distributors to follow suit, and to use whatever means occurs to them as most feasible to spread the Inpendent gospel. He has asked those that are interested to communicate with him so that some concerted form of action may be worked out, if possible, to put it over strongly, and to so implant the idea in the minds of exhibitors in particular, and the industry in general, that it is there to stay.

Joe Brandt, who is at present visiting the important State Right franchise holders throughout the country, is also spreading the same idea, and is asking such men as Harry Charnas, Ben Amsterdam, Tony Luchese, Sam Grand, Oscar Oldknow, and others whose product and strength is recognized, to help spread the idea in every way possible. He will, if they so wish, remain long enough to co-operate with them in putting it over in their respective territory.

"Tie That Binds" Given Premier

Before an appreciative and enthusiastic motion picture audience "The Tie That Binds" was given its premiere presentation at the Dyckman Theatre, New York, by Jacob Wilk, 1476 Broadway who controls the distribution rights to the production. Mr. Wilk is releasing the feature on a state right basis, the foreign rights of which have been purchased by the Warner Brothers.

Negotiations for the sale of the picture are being made with a number of territorial buyers, according to Mr. Wilk.

HOUSE PETERS
Signed for series of pictures by Charles O. Bauman for five years.

Independents Sign Eight Big Stars

Substantiating absolutely the contentions exclusively advanced by this department, reports of an official nature poured into this office this week relative to the engagement of big stars for appearance in independent productions. Among the big stars who will be seen regularly in independent productions next season and who were signed within the past two weeks are the following:

House Peters, for five years, by Charles O. Baumann; to make a series of four pictures annually.

Elaine Hammerstein, for an indefinite period by Truart Film Corporation, for four big pictures.

Lenore Ulric, David Belasco star, by Warner Brothers, for "Tiger Rose."

Hope Hampton, by Warner Brothers, for "The Gold Diggers."

John Barrymore, by Warner Brothers, for "Beau Brummel" and "Duburau."

Bert Lytell, by Principal Pictures Corporation, for "Meanest Man in the World" and other pictures.

Guy Bates Post, by Principal Pictures Corporation, for a series.

Within the next few weeks Tom Moore, who is now in New York working on "Marriage and Morals," which Will Nigh is making for Weber & North, will be placed under a long term contract.

Three Sales on "Passionate Friends"

Three sales were announced this week od George H. Davis' "The Passionate Friends," based on a H. G. Wells story. The deals were closed by Joe Brandt who is handling C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. The sales were to R. A. Branch Productions, Inc., of Detroit, for Michigan; Celebrated Film Players Corporation, of Chicago, for Illinois and northern Indiana; Harry Landy, of the Landy Distributing Company, for western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, and Kentucky.

World Story Starts Rumors

BOSTON—(Special)—The publication exclusively in Moving Picture World two weeks ago of a situation that prevails in Providence, R. I., has started something along film row. Statistics published by the World show that something like 700 first run pictures of high merit will be needed by the six first run houses in the Rhode Island metropolis.

Just who the exchanges here will play with has aroused much comment, but independents are bound to be the winners not only in Providence, but in other New England cities as well. Circuits are bobbing up everywhere in New England, despite reports to the contrary issued by propagandists.

The independents are getting more honest-to-goodness patronage from exhibits today than ever before and the demand for big independent productions for next season is even greater.

George Fecke of Motion Picture Distributing Corporation is back in town following a trip about the country selling rights to "Yankee Doodle Jr." It is rumored that Fecke, while on the Coast, became interested in a production venture and is seeking stories.

That the Moving Picture World's exclusive story of last week relative to Federated Film Exchanges' revival is true was accepted as so here, for neither Harry Ascher nor Sam Grand cared to deny the report which was received from the Coast.

"Lost In A Big City," the Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., special, opens at the Rialto Theatre in Providence, R. I., during the week of April 9. Manager Mahoney closed the deal last week with a representative of Arrow Film Corporation. It is reported John Lowell, star, and Baby Ivy Ward, both will make personal appearances.

This is the third week for Warner Brothers' "Brass," a Harry Rapf production, at the Park Theatre here. The picture is said to have grossed about $18,000 in two weeks, despite the bad weather, at one dollar top prices at night.

Bill Shapiro of Franklin Film Exchange here has acquired the New England rights to Principal Pictures Corporation's Bennie Fineman special, "The Spider and The Rose," with an all-star cast.

Several production movements of the distinctly local stock calibre have been discovered in various parts of New England and are seemingly getting away with murder in certain sections. In one territory, the stock salesmen are being watched by the authorities.

A Correction

C. C. Burr's publicity director calls our attention to the fact that in our issue of March 10th, we had a page of stills on a C. C. Burr picture captioned "Blind Justice," but that was an error, as the name of the picture was long ago changed to "The Last Hour." The picture features Milton Sills and Carmel Myers. The original story by Frank R. Adams which appeared in Munsey's Magazine sometime ago was called "Blind Justice."

Bobby North, of the APOLLO FILM EXCHANGE, New York City, says:

"HER ACCIDENTAL HUSBAND"

—"Is Going GREAT! Every Exhibitor who SEES it— BOOKS IT!"

House Peters Has Been Signed for Five Years by Baumann

Another star of international repute and established box office value joined the rapidly increasing ranks of independents this week. The new star is none other than House Peters, one of the most popular leading men in the business, starring recently in Universal's "Human Hearts," "The Storm," and Goldwyn's "Lost and Found," which played the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week. Charles O. Baumann, who signed the star, this week also formed the House Peters Productions, Inc., under whose auspices the pictures will be made. The acquisition of Peters by Baumann confirms the report published exclusively in the Independent Department of Moving Picture World two weeks ago.

Mr. Baumann in his announcement this week made known the fact that Peters has been placed under a five-year contract, during which period he will make a series of four specials a year, all of which will be released through independent exchanges, several of which already have opened negotiations with Mr. Baumann. The first production will be ready for distribution on September 1, to be followed thereafter by a release every three months. Stories for the Peters productions will be based on established books and successful plays.

The combination of Baumann and Peters is an unbeatable one, for both are exceptionally well known and leaders in their particular lines. Peters has developed into one of the most popular and best paying leading men of the country, his pictures ranking among the best and consistent money-making of 1922. Mr. Baumann is known as a "maker of stars," for he was responsible for the introduction of Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Norman, Bill Hart and Fatty Arbuckle to the screen. He has been financially interested in picture production for many years, having formerly been a member of the production finance company known as Kessel & Baumann, which was dissolved several years ago.

Independents in Southwest Make Good Theatre Connection

DALLAS, Texas—(Staff Special).—An important change in the management of the Capitol Theatre in Dallas, a big new house on Elm street, has taken place. I. Rude, capitalist of Dallas and Denver, has retired from the ownership and management, his share having been purchased by Leon S. Gohlman and L. A. Goodwin, president and general manager and manager of the theatre, respectively. True T. Thompson, of the True Film Company, veteran states writer, has also bought an interest.

This news item is of some importance in this territory. It is in line with efforts of independent exchange men to land productions at first class houses in Dallas. According to the best information obtainable on the subject, this has been denied them in a number of instances. Cases are on record in the Southern territory where an Independent attraction has played towns of 5,000 inhabitants long before it got a first run in the big cities. While it would seem queer tactics for a states writer to do this, nevertheless these conditions prevail.

Soon after Mr. True bought an interest in the Capitol Theatre the week's attraction at that theatre was "Sure Fire Flint," a picture that his company is handling. The attraction, incidently, went over nicely.

Blank Buys "Has World Gone Mad?"

Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation, who is touring the country for that firm, this week closed a deal with A. H. Blank Enterprises, Inc., of Omaha, Neb., whereby the latter firm will release the Daniel Carson Goodman special, "Has the World Gone Mad?" The Blank Enterprises, with their vast theatre interests, are considered one of the most important independent distributing organizations in the country.

Sell "Her Accidental Husband"

Progress Pictures Exchange, of Pittsburgh, this week purchased the Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights from Joe Brandt, of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, to Belasco Productions, Inc., picture. "Her Accidental Husband."

Independents in South Closing a Winning Season

ATLANTA, GA.—(Special)—When the current season rolls by within a few weeks it will have brought to an end what independent distributors in this territory characterize as virtually the greatest year independents hereabouts have experienced. Better productions with established box-office names and based on stories that proved effective screen vehicles have contributed much toward working up unusual interest among exhibitors in independent productions.

The demand for independent productions next season, present indications point, will be even greater, for most of the big State rights pictures shown at first class houses in the South have made money for the exhibitors.

Arthur C. Bromberg has taken over the Peerless Film Company which has been operated by Steve Grow and J. A. McWhorter and will distribute "Notoriety" in the Southeast, it was announced this week. The other product released by Peerless included "Beware of the Law" and a line of Westerns. Mr. Grow is now in Miami, recuperating from an attack of the flu.

Mr. Bromberg has made some other important additions to his line of product. He will distribute the new line of Hallroom Boys comedies made by C. B. C., "The Road to Arcady," "Should a Wife Work," "For Your Daughter's Sake" and "Every Man's Price," from Appleton Productions, the new Monty Banks comedies from Arrow and the latest Arrow-Ben Wilson serial, "The Fighting Skipper," which is a 15-episode serial of the South Seas. It provides Progress Pictures formerly known as Bromberg Attractions with a strong line-up.

"Poor Men's Wives" got away to a bad start at the Metropolitan Monday when it ran into a steady rain and falling temperature, and though the weather condition righted itself and became well-nigh perfect before the end of the week the picture never recovered. There is no gainsaying the merit of "Poor Men's Wives," but the title lacks appeal and the subject failed to register at the box-office. Patrons who saw the picture were generous in their approval and comments were uniformly favorable.

Warners May Be Forced to Open Exchange

CHICAGO—(Special)—No surprise will be occasioned in local film circles in the event that the Warner Brothers in an effort to safeguard their interests in this territory are forced to open their own exchange in Chicago. The Warner Brothers' program is an extensive one and already has attracted considerable local attention. This unusual interest prevails particularly among the theatre-going public, a fact film men can not ignore.

However, the differences that have arisen between Warner Brothers and Balaban & Katz (Second National Exchange) have uncovered an extraordinary situation. The B. & K. interests control virtually the first run situation in downtown a big "scoop" for the Warners. Developments have proved otherwise, say film men, for only one of the current productions of that firm has found its way into a Loop Theatre. That was "Rags to Riches."

The situation is arousing much comment and the consensus is that the only way out next season for Warner is to open their own exchange here and operate it as they are operating their exchanges in Detroit, Buffalo and New York.

The Renowned Exchange, which is controlled by the same interests running the Renown exchanges in New York and Buffalo, promises to take quite a part in local independent distribution and is tieing up much product for next season.

While the real big independent distributors here virtually number no more than three at present, namely, Joe Friedman's Al Lichtman-Celebrated Film Players Exchange, Frank Zambrino's Progress Pictures, and Si Griever's Griever Productions, Inc., the coming season is expected to uncover several newcomers, that will operate on an extensive basis.

Two new exchanges, to operate with big independent pictures exclusively and with ample financial backing, are slated to establish exchanges in Chicago by the first of September. Representatives of these proposed firms are now in New York negotiating for product for next season.

Frank Zambrino of Progressive Pictures Exchanges here and of Indianapolis is arranging a representative showing in this city for "Jacqueline." In all probability the production will be shown either at Barbee's or Castle Theatre.

Principal Abandons "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

The motion picture industry has been accused frequently of cultivating sharp practice and unethical manners amongst producers, exhibitors and distributors, but the fact that a sense of honor is not so rare as it may seem among picture-folk has come to light in an agreeable manner in the retirement of the Principal Pictures Corporation from its proposal to produce on a big scale, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The announcement of plans for filming the Harriet Beecher Stowe story came from Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures a few weeks ago. Now, from the same source comes the statement that the picture will not be made by them.

Lou Berman, of The INDEPENDENT FILM CORPORATION of PHILADELPHIA, says:

"HER ACCIDENTAL HUSBAND"

"Will be played EVERYWHERE in the Philadelphia Territory. It's a State Right Clean-up if ever there was one."

Elaine Hammerstein Will Make Series of Four for Truart Films

Immediately after the arrival of M. H. Hoffman in Los Angeles, advice was received at the New York headquarters of the Truart Film Corporation that Elaine Hammerstein had been signed on a long term contract.

The arrangements call for four big pictures a year, which are to be directed and supervised by Edward Dillon, who is now completing "Broadway Gold," in which Miss Miss Hammerstein appears with stellar honors, together with Elliot Dexter and Kathlyn Williams.

The Hammerstein-Dillon productions will be distributed under Mr. Hoffman's direction by the Truart Film Corporation as independent state-rights offerings.

The Renown Exchanges will release the Elaine Hammerstein pictures in the New York, Buffalo, Northern New Jersey and Chicago territories, while the arrangements are now pending with the leading independent exchanges throughout the country whereby a full 100 per cent distribution will be assured the new Hammerstein-Dillon series.

Upon Mr. Hoffman's return east a drive will be made to secure the picture rights to the most notable successes of the stage and outstanding novels.

Mr. Hoffman's recent survey of the independent field resulted in the opinion that the state-right market is still a very vital factor in the picture industry. So vital, in fact, that if producers would realize its needs and make pictures of the magnitude of "Broadway Gold," and the projected Hammerstein productions, the big first run interests would be forced to open their doors to the independents, because of public pressure.

Burr Loans Johnny Hines to Warners

Johnny Hines, the fastest rising star on the screen today, will play the titular role in Warner Brothers' screen adaptation of "Little Johnny Jones," based on the famous stage success of George M. Cohan. The deal whereby Hines' services were acquired for one picture only by Warner Brothers was completed this week, following a series of conferences with Charles C. Burr, producer of the Hines pictures and who is largely responsible for the success of that star on the screen.

The Hines agreement with Warner Brothers covers only one picture, which will be made on the Coast at the Warner studio. The screen version of "Little Johnny Jones" is now being compiled and will be ready within a few weeks. Hines will go to the Coast immediately after the showing of "Luck," his latest C. C. Burr production.

Bad Weather Hurts, Box Office Estimates Show

Bad weather seemed to rule generally throughout the country, the East being hit by a series of rain and snow storms, while the Middle West was hit by cold spells. The Coast weather reports were better. However, business in the East and West was hit accordingly by this weather, although all in all—the fact that this is Lent—business was encouraging. Appended are box office estimates from representative first-run houses showing independent pictures last week:

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Victory Theatre:—Double bill, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "Only A Shop Girl," and Ivan Abramson's "Wildness of Youth." Prices: mats., 15 and 25 cents; evenings, 20 and 35 cents. Grossed about $4,000. This house has been laying hard on exploitation, doing about $5,000 the previous week on "Has the World Gone Mad?" (Equity).

BOSTON—Park Theatre:—Warner Brothers' "Brass," with all-star cast. Prices: mats., 50 cents; evening, 25c, 50c and $1. Estimated gross on week $9,000; about same as opening. Rainy weather first half and on Friday kept gross down; Saturday's sunshine helping much. This is second week for "Brass." Another week to go.

LOS ANGELES—Grauman's Theatre:—Weber & North's "Notoriety" with all-star cast. Prices: mats., 25 and 35 cents; evenings, 40 and 55 cents. Grossed about $13,000 on the week. Grauman presentation helped picture in more ways than one.

BUFFALO—Loew's State Theatre:—Warner Brothers' "The Beautiful and Damned." Prices: mats., 15 and 50 cents; evenings, 30 and 50 cents. Loew vaudeville coupled with picture. Primrose minstrel act featured. Did about $13,500 on the week, which is good considering breaks house had and the Lenten season. Picture was well lied, despite surprise close of story as related on the screen.

NEW YORK—Strand Theatre:—Warner Brothers' "Brass" with Marie Prevost and Monte Blue and all-star cast. Prices: mats., 30 cents; evenings, 55 and 85 cents. Estimated gross about $38,500 on the week. Unusual length of picture kept shows down to a minimum. Sunday business capacity at all shows and had picture not been so long house could have slipped in extra show which would have increased gross a few thousands. Saturday, closing, business boomed, with rainy weather Monday and middle of week discouraging patronage.

NEW YORK—Rivoli Theatre:—Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howell's "Othello." Prices: mats., 55 cents; evenings, 85 and 99 cents. Picture moved here from Criterion where it played two weeks. Draw estimated at a little over $21,000, which is about $7,000 under usual big week at this house. Picture well exploited and pleased, but weather hurt. Imported picture, got away to great notices during Criterion run.

A newcomer in the line of independent producers will shortly make his appearance in the East. This newcomer this week purchased the screen rights to a great Broadway success, now playing in New York, and he will make known his plans as soon as he raises sufficient capital with which to start production.

Ex-Governor Milliken of Maine, head of the Pine Tree Pictures Company, which is releasing its pictures through Arrow Film Corporation, announced this week that work on its next picture will not be started until late in the summer. "Jacqueline," the latest release, was started late in 1921 and the final "shot" taken on Feb. 22, 1923. Dell Henderson directed.

Bill Nigh, who has been working at the Metro studios for the past six weeks, on Monday of this week made known his belief that he would have his next Weber & North special, "Marriage and Morals," completed either Friday or Saturday. Ann Forrest and Tom Moore play the leads, with the latter starred.

The Independent Department of Moving Picture World during the past week has received a number of queries from independent producers seeking original script. The demand for stories among independents never was greater.

Gallagher and Shean, the famous two-act now playing in "The Follies" according to their announcement to this department this week, made known their plans to make a series of five two-reel comedies for the independent market. They will produce in the East.

New Williams Picture Nearly Ready—Hirsh

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation announces that the first "Big Boy" Williams production will be finished a few days. Since it became known that Mr. Hirsh has secured the new Big Boy Williams series, numerous inquiries are being made as to release dates. Mr. Hirsh states that the title and date of release of the first subject will be announced just as soon as the picture is finished.

B. P. Schulberg, head of Preferred Pictures Corporation whose pictures are released through Al Lichtman Corporation, arrived in New York this week. Next Tuesday night at the Ritz-Carlton he will be tendered a dinner by friends.

Bennie Ziedman, vice-president of Sacramento Pictures Corporation, whose pictures are being released through Principal Pictures Corporation, left New York for the Coast on Wednesday of this week.

Sam Morris of Warner Brothers returned to New York this week following a visit to exchange centres in various parts of the country.

J. S. Jossey of the Cleveland Progress Exchange and H. Hirsch of Lightning Photoplays, Inc., of Boston visited New York this week. So did David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia.

Herman Rifkin of Eastern Picture Films Corporation of Boston also visited New York this week.

Jacob Gluckman left this week for South America. J. A. Hoffenberg will be in charge of the New York office of Mr. Gluckman during the latter's absence.

There was a special showing of the Bill Brennan-Firpo championship fight pictures on Tuesday of this week. The pictures are bound to mop up in South American countries, for Firpo is a South American.

"Farming out" stars is getting to be quite the fad in motion picture circles. Particularly lucrative is this practice on the Coast, where players are being loaned left and right.

Ben Blumenthal is getting to be quite a Broadway impressario, for next week at the Lyric Theatre he will show another one of his foreign made specials that will be supplemented with a Ned Wayburn revue conceived by Ali Haggen.

Charles C. Burr has recovered from his illness and will leave this week for a two-week visit to a Florida resort.

Bobby North, according to C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's publicity director, is planning a big exploitation campaign on "Temptation," which he has purchased for New York distribution.

R. J. Stowe, representative of the Alexander Film Corporation, is in Seattle, and, according to a despatch from that city, he has announced the purchase of a studio by that firm in Denver, Col. Mr. Stowe will probably open an exchange in Seattle.

Says F. W. MOORE, of PROGRESS PICTURES CORPORATION, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"HER ACCIDENTAL HUSBAND"

"Is wonderful from Every Angle. Our Exhibitors are going wild over it. Congratulations. C.B.C.!"

David Belasco Welcomed Into Picture Industry by Will Hays

David Belasco, the foremost theatrical producer in America, was officially extended the greetings of the entire industry by Will H. Hays, following his affiliation with the Warner Brothers in the production of a number of his notable stage successes, at a conference held last week at the Warner offices.

Considerable interest is attached to Mr. Belasco's arrangement with the Warner organization, in that the theatrical producer for the first time in his career has become personally identified with the industry and will undertake the general supervision on the filming of his stage plays.

In extending the industry's welcome to Mr. Belasco, Mr. Hays said: "It is indeed a great source of gratification to have Mr. Belasco identified with our wonderful industry. And I am sure that every member of the industry is proud to have him with us. In this respect thanks are due to the Warner Brothers for their splendid achievement in having Mr. Belasco join our great medium for the enlightenment and entertainment of humanity."

Mr. Belasco, when asked about his new affiliation, said: "The motion picture is a new art, and I realize that I will have to start at the bottom to fully comprehend its marvelous possibilities. Its scope is unbounded, and it holds a great fascination and interest for me. I look forward with keen anticipation to my visit to the Warner Brothers studio."

According to the announced partnership arrangement between Mr. Belasco and the Warner Brothers, the latter will film "The Gold Diggers," "Daddies," "Deburau" and "Tiger Rose," which will star Lenore Ulric, while the former will personally supervise the making of the productions.

Mr. Belasco has chosen Sidney Franklin to direct Miss Ulric in "Tiger Rose," and Edmund Goulding was chosen to write the continuity. Preparations for the filming of this picture are reported under way at the Warner studios. Miss Ulric will leave for the Coast the latter part of May, following the consummation of a two-year run on Broadway in the Belasco stage play, "Kiki." With the completion of the picture she will return east to resume her interrupted performance of the play.

From Harry M. Warner came the report that Mr. Belasco will leave for the West Coast on or about June 1. Commenting on his arrangement with the theatrical producer, Mr. Warner said, "I believe that the definite identification of Mr. Belasco with motion pictures marks a milestone in the history of the business.

"When Mr. Belasco finally decided that he would take an active and not merely a passing interest in our great industry, he expressed a wish to become personally acquainted with the representatives of the trade press and others connected with the industry. And I am sure that Mr. Belasco will become familiar and as prominent a figure in the industry as he is in the theatrical world."

Guy of the New York Supreme Court last Wednesday granted an injunction restraining the Rialto Productions of 729 Seventh Avenue from disposing or transferring or exhibiting the motion picture, "Tony Sargs' Almanac," pending trial of a suit brought against them by Louis T. Rogers and Nathaniel A. Thompson, through their attorney, Samuel Schwartzberg, of 1475 Broadway.

Gus Miller with Warners

Gus Miller, well known exchange manager, has been engaged by the Warner Brothers as special representative, and left last week on a trip which will cover the entire country. He has planned to visit the leading theatres and the exchanges handling the Warner classics of the screen.

A coincidence in the engagement of Mr. Muller is that some ten years ago he was given his first start in the industry by the Warners. He was employed as a road man and was attached to the Cincinnati office, and remained in that capacity for two years.

K. C. Combination Rumor Found Untrue

KANSAS CITY — (Special) — The combination of two local independent exchanges was rumored here last week, but when the reports were run down by a representative of the Independent Department of Moving Picture World they were found to be untrue. Rumors here have been quite common during the past few weeks and none has ever amounted to anything. There are several deals of importance to the field in general pending here, it has been learned, but they do not involve any of the independent exchanges here.

Harry Hynes, former manager of Educational in St. Louis, has joined Skouras Brothers Enterprises and will operate the St. Louis Film Company. This organization was formerly known as the Grand Central Film Company. It will handle the Lichtman Preferred and Warner features and other independent product of the Grand Central Film Company. Cullen Espy, former manager of the New Lindell Theatre, has been named salesman for the new exchange.

Edward Grossman, special representative of the Al Lichtman Preferred Pictures was a St. Louis visitor of the week. He announces a very great interest in "Poor Men's Wives," the company's new special. He states it has been purchased by the Balaban & Katz chain in Chicago and by Skouras Brothers in St. Louis.

Sid Rosenthal, who last week started his own independent distributing company in Kansas City, has already secured the distribution rights for "Determination," an eight-reel special production, and a series of twelve single reel high class novelties entitled "Tense Moments From Opera."

The distribution rights for the series of western pictures starring "Big Boy" Williams which are now being produced by Seeling-Brittain Productions have been obtained by the Standard Film Co., of Kansas City, which makes a specialty of releasing feature western pictures.

Frank Sturgis of the Gardiner Screen Company has opened offices in St. Louis and will handle sales in Missouri, Illinois, Northern Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Sol J. Hankin, former president-manager of the Fine Arts Picture Corporation, has been named manager of the St. Louis Educational exchange.

Al and Mike Kahn of the Crescent Film Exchange, Kansas City, were called to Chicago Sunday because of the death of their father-in-law.

Rubicon Pictures Enter Market

Rubicon Pictures, Inc., have established offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, where they will operate an independent releasing organization. The first release, announced this week, is "For You, My Boy," a William L. Roubert production. The cast is headed by Matty Roubert, who played the Kaiser in "My Four Years in Germany."

Associated Franchise Plan Scores

The franchise plan of Associated Photoplays, Inc., announced last week, is apparently scoring with independent exchangemen, who are negotiating with him for rights to the series of Milton Sills productions. The first release is 'Why Women Re-Marry," with Milton Sills, Ethel Grey Terry and others. John German directed.

First Aitken-Price Pictures Ready

From Harry Sitken and Oscar Price this week came news to the effect that the first of a series of famous pictures (former Triangles) is ready. It is "The Americano," with Douglas Fairbanks. The other is "Dough and Dynamite," with Charlie Chaplin.

Earle Picture Staff Organized

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—A production staff has been organized for the newly formed William P. S. Earle Pictures Corporation. Production on the first picture, "Tutankhamen," by Blanche Taylor Earle, starts this week. Dick L'Estrange is production manager.

Says "Bella Donna" Is Pola Negri's Best

That Pola Negri in her first American picture, George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production, "Bella Donna," has achieved the greatest triumph of her career, seems to be the unanimous verdict of Los Angeles, says Paramount, where the picture had its world premiere Tuesday at Grauman's Rialto Theatre. The crowd at the opening performance, according to Sid Grauman, was the largest ever seen on a similar occasion in that city, with the possible exception of the one that stormed the new Metropolitan when it first opened its doors to the public a few weeks ago. With capacity audiences continuing in attendance, it seems certain that the run will break all records for the Rialto.

Unanimously superlative praise has been accorded "Bella Donna" by the Los Angeles newspaper critics. Edwin Schallert in The Times said: "'Bella Donna' proves in every respect what every one mayhap has expected it to prove, and that is the superiority of the physical equipment of our studios and the splendors of what money can do."

Florence Lawrence said in The Examiner: "George Fitzmaurice has made a beautiful creation in his film adaptation of the Hitchens play. The drama of a human soul is revealed stark and realistic." Allen Claire said in The Record: "Pola's work in 'Bella Donna' is a splendid character delineation and all the superior original creations of American cinematograph craftsmanship are employed."

The Herald said: "In what will undoubtedly be selected as one of the foremost motion picture productions of 1923 Pola Negri made her initial bow at Grauman's Rialto yesterday in 'Bella Donna.'" The critic of The Express said: "The mass effects are marvelous and the succession of scenes is interesting and beautiful."

Exhibitors Commend Viola Dana Picture

"Crinoline and Romance," the most recently released Metro picture, starring Viola Dana, has earned the commendation of critics representing the industry's leading trade magazines as well as the praise of prominent exhibitors throughout the country, it is reported. Especial emphasis is placed on the suitability of the picture as a vehicle for the popular star, whose ability as a dramatic comedienne is said to be decidedly unusual.

The Motion Picture News, in reviewing the photoplay at length, commented in part as follows: "Light, frolicsome comedy romance—one ideally suited to Viola Dana's personality." Similarly commendatory is the critic of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, who said: "An attractive screen offering. The picture is thoroughly enjoyable."

"Unique and pleasing romantic comedy drama," is the summary of the critical review of the Moving Picture World.

The photoplay is a Harry Beaumont production, released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

First National Scores in Times Selection

In his selection of the twelve best pictures for the first quarter of the year, J. O. Spearing, motion picture editor of the New York Times, who is retiring to devote himself to production work in a western studio, includes three First National pictures shown on Broadway between January 1 and March 15. No other company was represented by more than one production. The list was published in the Sunday Times, March 18.

The three First National pictures named by the erudite critic are "The Dangerous Age," commended for the cinematographic treatment of John M. Stahl and the acting of Lewis Stone; "The Hottentot," starring Douglas MacLean, called "a fast, fun-filled farce" and "The Pilgrim," in which Charlie Chaplin is credited with bringing "broad comedy, keen satire and revealing insight to the screen."

Then in a paragraph devoted to short subjects. Buster Keaton comes in for honorable mention for contributing "another of his hilarious and pointed burlesques, 'The Frozen North.'"

The complete list compiled by Mr. Spearing reads: "The Dangerous Age," "Driven," "Head Hunters of the South Seas," "The Hottentot," "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," "Mad Love," "Milady," "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Pilgrim," "Othello," "The Second Fiddle."

Tourneur Returns

Maurice Tourneur, who is to produce "The Brass Bottle" for First National release, has returned from Palm Springs, Cal., where he whipped the continuity for the new production into shape.

"Dr. Jack" Goes Big in Swedish Capital

Pathé quotes from Stockholm, Sweden, cables and newspapers showing that "Dr. Jack" has won a big triumph in the Swedish capital.

Display ads in the leading Stockholm newspapers announced the "premier" of the Harold Lloyd comedy on the same day and date at the three leading first run theatres—Imperial, Rivoli and Piccadilly. Newspaper reviews printed on February 26—which are of the most enthusiastic character—state that no other production, domestic or foreign, has been played this season in Stockholm at three theatres simultaneously.

A cable received by Pathé a few days after the Stockholm premiere of "Dr. Jack" confirms this, and adds: "A tremendous hit. Also playing to full houses at the Rialto, Gothenburg and two houses at Gaevle. Please ship three more prints immediately."

Big Carewe Picture Nearing Completion

With the completion of the exterior scenes, Edwin Carewe is nearing the half-way mark in the production of "The Girl of the Golden West," a First National attraction.

Work on the exteriors took nearly a month. The location was at Sonora, the heart of the gold rush in '49 and in the actual locale of the famous David Belasco stage success. Whole '49 towns were rebuilt and thousands of "extras" were gathered to make these mushroom cities thrive once more.

Carewe, who has filmed more than eighty out-of-doors stories, is of the belief that this tremendous drama will have one of the greatest scenic backgrounds ever seen on the silver screen. The wondrous beauty of the mountain fastness of Central California has been mirrored.

The company is now at the United Studios shooting the interiors. It will be several weeks before the picture is finished.

"The Girl of the Golden West" is to be known as an Edwin Carewe production.

Tom Forman to Start "Broken Wing"

Tom Forman will begin production at once on his next Preferred Picture for B. P. Schulberg, "The Broken Wing," a film version of the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, which played to large crowds two seasons ago at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre. Schulberg has selected a notable cast, including Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Walter Long, Betty Francisco, Evelyn Selbie, Edwin Brady, Ferdinand Munier and Richard Tucker.

Olga Printzlau has recently completed the adaptation and Forman is expected to begin actual shooting within a few days. He will take his company to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where Schulberg is erecting a town near by to be used as location. The filming of the picture has been set for this month in order to secure certain storm effects during the rainy season in the Southwest.

The big thrill of the story is contained in the famous aeroplane flight and crash which thrilled the playgoers. Like the other spectacular effects, this scene is much more effective on the screen than in the theatre. The picture, heralded by Mr. Schulberg as one of the big film events of the coming year, will be released through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

National Committee Names Pathe Films

In the February list of pictures for selected programs published by the National Committee for Better Films, a total of fifty-four subjects, representing sixteen companies, are represented, twelve —nearly one-fifth—being Pathé releases.

News reels are not listed. Practically every other brand of Pathé product is represented.

Does Record Business

A total box-office gross of $92,061.80 in six weeks in a theatre with a capacity of only 1,500, with a total estimated attendance of 250,000, is the record established by "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at Balaban & Katz's Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

And two of the six weeks of the engagement were "blizzard" weeks, when attendance at this and all other Chicago houses was heavily cut into.

These figures, coming from the records of Max Balaban, show an average weekly box-office gross of $15,343.63, and further reduce to demonstrate a return of $10 a week for each of the 1,500 seats in the house during the run.

Tom Mix, Fox star, and an abstainer, lectures Vivian Moses, head of the advertising and publicity departments of the Fox Film Corporation, against the use of tobacco.

Fox Gives List of Releases for April

Four feature length productions and two special two reel comedies comprise the release program scheduled for April by Fox Film Corporation, according to announcements this week.

John Gilbert, the star of "Monte Cristo," will have as his April vehicle the George F. Worts story, "The Madness of Youth," directed by Jerome Storm. The picture, which will be ready for release on the 8th, finds Gilbert supported by Billie Dove, Wilton Taylor, George K. Arthur, Ruth Boyd, Julianne Johnston, Donald Hatswell and Luke Lucas. The scenario is by Joseph Franklin Poland.

Charles Jones will be seen in "Snowdrift" on the 22nd of the new month. It is a story by the well known novelist, James B. Hendryx, and deals with the romance and hazards of the gold fields of the Yukon. Scott Dunlap directed and Jack Strumwasser adapted the story for the screen. Irene Rich, G. Raymond Nye and Dorothy Manners appear in important parts.

"Bucking the Barrier," produced under the working title of "Klondike Kit," is the Dustin Farnum offering and he is scheduled for April 1st. It is another picture of the Yukon gold trails and was directed by Colin Campbell. George Goodchild, the noted author, wrote the story and Jack Strumwasser the scenario.

A Shirley Mason feature, the release title for which has not yet been selected, will be placed on the distribution shelf April 15th. The story is by George Scarborough and the adaptation by Josephine Quirk and Jules Furthman. Albert Roscoe, the Broadway star, appears opposite Miss Mason.

The two Sunshine Comedies are "The Mummy," April 1 ,and "The Three-Gun Man," April 29th. The humorous qualities of these funmakers are far above the average and promise a new treat for calloused audiences.

To Take Picture of South Sea Natives

To do for the natives of the South Seas what he did for the Eskimo in his film, "Nanook of the North," Robert J. Flaherty, F. R. G. S., will sail next month at the head of an expedition to Savaii, westernmost of the Samoan group of islands in the Southern Pacific, according to an announcement yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under whose auspices the expedition is being undertaken.

Mr. Flaherty, whose picture, "Nanook of the North," was hailed last year as one of the most unusual films ever made, will leave New York April 12 and will sail from San Francisco on the steamship Sonoma April 24. He will remain in the South Seas for at least a year.

Mr. Flaherty will take with him a complete technical equipment for the making of motion pictures including a completely furnished laboratory.

Melford Completes Big Paramount Film

George Melford has finished "You Can't Fool Your Wife" for Paramount. Just as the period of splendid weather in Southern California showed unmistakable signs of changing, the picture, which was started in New York, was completed.

Humorously, it is suggested that "Uncle George" brought his people all the way from the East to the West to give them a bath in the bright blue Pacific. As a matter of fact, it was necessary to get beach scenes, and to do this in the East just now was obviously almost impossible.

The picture closed with a remarkable interior set, however. This was a big bathing pool with a background of flowers and trees, pergolas and canopies.

Film Pulls Student Fund Out of Rut

For a long time members of the senior class of the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., High School have been saving their dimes and quarters and placing them in a fund which they hoped would permit them to go to Washington in a body and call on President Harding.

The fund languished somewhat until the students hit upon the idea of becoming motion picture exhibitors. Their committee signed a contract with Associated Exhibitors and for three nights last week the Harold Lloyd feature, "Grandma's Boy," was shown in Wilkes-Barre as a "Washington trip fund" benefit. The project was a complete success, according to the local newspapers.

Fox's "Snowdrift" on April Release

An adventurous story of the Northwest and the territory around Mackenzie River by James B. Hendryx, called "Snowdrift," has been chosen as the next vehicle starring Charles Jones. The picture, which is now in course of production, will be released in April by Fox Film Corporation.

Makes Picture Debut

John Charles Thomas, the noted American singer, made his last appearance on the concert stage at Aeolian Hall last Sunday prior to entering the field of the silent drama. Mr. Thomas has cancelled the remainder of his concert tour and will not be heard in a song recital until he finishes his work on "Under the Red Robe," which the Cosmopolitan Corporation is picturizing from the famous story by Stanley Weyman.

In "Under the Red Robe" Mr. Thomas will make his motion picture debut. He will have the leading role. Alma Rubens will play opposite him.

Thomas H. Ince's "Soul of the Beast" to Be Distributed by Metro Corporation

Picture Based on Story by C. G. Sullivan and Features Madge Bellamy

Metro Pictures Corporation announces the completion of arrangements with Thomas H. Ince to distribute the latter's recent production, "Soul of the Beast," based on a circus story by C. Gardner Sullivan, with Madge Bellamy, Cullen Landis and "Oscar," an elephant, in the cast.

Officials of the distributing company regard this photoplay as one of its most important acquisitions of the season, containing every angle of audience-appeal which every exhibitor wants. "Soul of the Beast" is welcome because it is new, not cut-and-dried; it is clean, not suggestive; it has human interest, but no maudlin appeal; it has spectacle, fittingly introduced as part of the story; it has drama that is convincing; and it offers exploitation angles for exhibitors as varied in appeal as the photoplay itself.

Oscar, the trained elephant who moves through the picture and contributes much to its originality and effectiveness, is one of the most valuable and talented animal actors that have ever been discovered for film purposes. He has a real part in the photoplay; on him depends an important share of the dramatic action; and the manner in which he enacts his role is certain to create a sensation in film circles.

Negotiations for the release of "Soul of the Beast" were entered into shortly after Marcus Loew, William E. Atkinson and other Metro officials witnessed it at a private showing. The novelty of the story, combining as it does the spectacular, the whimsical and the dramatic, made a most favorable impression on the Metro representatives, and their determination to add it to their strong releasing schedule was then expressed.

In making the early scenes of the film, an entire circus was used. In order to preserve the realism throughout, an entire troupe was engaged—from freaks and tumblers to animals and clowns—and the members of the cast lived and traveled with it for two weeks to get a sense of the life. The circus itself, shown in a motion picture, is an entertainment angle as powerful as it is unusual.

"Soul of the Beast" is the story of a circus orphan who runs away with Oscar, the elephant, when a cyclone destroys two canvas tents. A primitive thing, Ruth lavishes all her affection on the big animal, until, in the little Canadian backwoods town, she meets a lame violinist. The latter himself is hounded by the town bully, a brute who desires Ruth as much as he hates her lover. An attempt to assert himself in the face of the bully results only in defeat for the musician. Ruth urges escape—and together they flee to happiness in another town, with Oscar their constant companion.

Mr. Ince has provided a brilliant cast to enact the roles of the film. Madge Bellamy adds a great deal in strength and dramatic power to the characterization of the circus Cinderella, Ruth. This beautiful actress reveals amazing power in her work; and her efforts are certain to carry her to even greater heights of screen celebrity.

Cullen Landis adds another sympathetic portrayal to his distinguished list by his sympathetic impersonation of Paul, the crippled violinist in love with Ruth. Mr. Landis possesses a subtle strength, a deftness in dramatic pantomime which is unfailingly fine; and in this photoplay he has achieved a completeness of characterization which is masterly. Noah Beery, Lincoln Stedman and Vola Vale are others who have important roles in the photoplay.

John Griffith Wray directed the film, under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The work of these gifted directors has in combination provided a screen play which has dramatic intensity that is very real, and a human appeal that is flashed from the screen with remarkable clarity. "Soul of the Beast" is in every way representative of the best work of C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the most celebrated of screen authors.

Cosmopolitan Film's Premiere on April 2

For the first run presentation of "Enemies of Women," William Randolph Hearst has leased the Central Theatre where the picturization of this great romance by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the celebrated Spanish author of "The Four Horsemen" and "Blood and Sand," will have its world's premiere for the public on Monday, April 2. On Easter Sunday, April 1, there will be a special invitation presentation of the film in the same theatre.

The engagement of "Enemies of Women" at the Central will entail special features similar and on just as lavish a scale as those which were in vogue at the Criterion Theatre during the run of Cosmopolitan's "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies. Joseph Urban will redecorate the theatre and give to the photoplay a setting in fitting with its magnificence.

William Frederick Peters, noted composer who wrote the musical score for "When Knighthood Was in Flower," has also composed an original score for "Enemies of Women."

Fox Picture to Get Big Publicity Drive

When "If Winter Comes" is released to theatres throughout the country, it will be backed up by the most extensive exploitaiton campaign ever prepared for a special production. Much valuable advance publicity not available for other pictures has already been received by the William Fox special feature.

By the time the picture is released in the Fall there will be a dozen different music publishing houses featuring both vocal and orchestration numbers of "If Winter Comes." The book, which has remained consistently a best seller for two years, will shortly go into another edition. National tie-ups have been arranged by the Fox Publicity Department with both the music publishers and the book publishers. There is a fox trot now being sold by several of the record companies, and one of the largest phonograph companies is considering bringing out its own number in the Fall.

"Quicksands" Booked Over Keith Circuit

"Quicksands," the Howard Hawks production distributed by American Releasing, has been booked by Arthur G. Whyte for the entire Keith-U. B. O. Metropolitan circuit.

Early spring play-dates will follow a first-run engagement at one of the important Broadway theatres, it is announced by American Releasing.

"Quicksands" stars Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix, supported by sixteen prominent players. They include Alan Hale, Walter Long, Noah Beery, Tom Wilson, Frank Campeau, Edwin Stevens, Hardee Kirkland, J. Farrell McDonald, George Cooper, Jean Hersholt, Dick Sutherland as well as the 10th U. S. Cavalry.

The story is by Howard Hawks, the producer, and was directed by Jack Conway. It is described as essentially a big story and timely as well, for it deals with a vicious ring of narcotic smugglers who make their headquarters in a sinister resort lying between this country and Mexico.

Love and treachery, mistakes and triumphs, moments of power and poignance, with a big climax brought about by the intervention of the troops are reported to make the picture truly imposing in scope.

Exhibitors Indorse Preferred Pictures

Several messages of emphatic commendation for the box office value of Preferred Pictures received this week by the Al Lichtman Corporation evidence that Lichtman and his partner, B. P. Schulberg, are making good their promises of giving exhibitors features that have a strong commercial worth.

A letter from C. H. McKinney, manager of the Arcade Theatre, Cambridge, Maryland, takes occasion to comment enthusiastically on the high calibre of the first three Lichtman attractions, "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which the house indorses as real money-makers. McKinney adds that these three are without a doubt the best pictures he has ever played, not only from a box office standpoint but from the point of satisfaction to his patrons. He expressed his satisfaction at the spirit of cooperation the Al Lichtman Corporation manifests toward the exhibitors.

Fred V. Greene, president of the Kind Theatres Corporation, reports a house record established at the Rialto in Jamaica, L. I., when "Shadows" was exhibited. Without the aid of special exploitation "Shadows" took in the highest receipts since the theatre was opened—the record held up to that time by "Manslaughter."

Paramount's "The Covered Wagon" Acclaimed by New York Critics

To James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," which had its premiere at the Criterion Theatre Friday evening, the critics of New York's daily newspapers have given unreserved praise.

"America's greatest motion picture," said the New York Commercial. "It should be shown to every citizen of this republic." And it will, if it is humanly possible to do so, for that was Paramount's idea, expressed from the moment that plans for the production began to take shape. That it will endure from generation to generation, as long as there are projection machines with which to show it, is not merely possible—it is inevitable, Paramount officials say.

"It is here at last!" said the Evening Telegram. "The film that tells a great American story in a great way was unfolded last night in the Criterion Theatre. In 'The Covered Wagon' is found the American screen epic. Yes, 'The Covered Wagon' eclipses even 'The Birth of a Nation.' It is a far better story, with a far more wholesome atmosphere pervading it. The tale is as big as a Walt Whitman poem, as superb in its homespun dignity and courage as a speech by Abe Lincoln. Just think of the film which has given you the biggest thrill you ever had. No matter which one it may happen to have been 'The Covered Wagon' eclipses it completely. A new frontier has been reached and a new standard set up in motion pictures."

"It is a scintillant, luminous, incandescent affair, which at times makes your pulses beat and gives you a score or so of throbs," said Alan Dale in the American. "It is an American picture but its spirit of adventure knows no nationality. Its appeal is universal, made to all the youth and the unyouth who can appreciate the pioneer wonders that have built up the West. To miss 'The Covered Wagon' would be to miss a film that absolutely removes the industry from its much vaunted and over-advertised 'infancy.'"

"For natural comedy and downright human touch it is unsurpassed," said the Journal of Commerce. "It is an enthralling spectacle, a tense and moving drama of picturesque human interest, that takes its place among the modern masterpieces of screen art."

"There is one adjective that one thinks of first," said Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald. "That adjective is 'honest.' The picture is honest in its simplicity, in its fidelity, in its sincerity and in its regard for the importance of its theme. It has been extensively advertised and exploited. Well, for once the advertisements don't lie. 'The Covered Wagon' is worthy of the best in the way of superlatives that its press agents have to offer."

"In this instance superlatives find justification," wrote Helen Pollock in the Telegraph, "and such tried and trusty terms as 'immense,' 'gigantic,' 'heroic' correctly describe the scale of this praiseworthy Paromunt production. We have heard a lot about 'bigger and better' pictures—'The Covered Wagon' is both."

"It's interesting," said the Times critic. "It gives you something detailed and definite for your interest to center upon. Its scenes speak to you. Many of them have the quality of greatness. They are unforgettable."

"It is doubtful if even the officials of the Paramount company, who voted for this one the largest advertising appropriation ever spent on any of their pictures, knew what a tremendous impression the picture would make," said Beauvais Fox in the Tribune. "It is the first real American epic of the screen. Genuinely thrilling from start to finish."

"We take great pleasure," said Quinn Martin in the World, "in throwing back our head on this occasion and uttering a piercing 'Bravo!' in recognition of the arrival from one of our own cinema camps of a picture play which is as good as gold. This sounds as if we have been carried away in our enthusiasm over a motion picture. That is no dream. We have been."

"The Hough disciples held that the filming of the story was a sacred trust," said the Evening Journal, "that it was a marvelous tribute to the breed of real men and women who settled the Northwest and that any director or company who failed to do it full justice should be considered a pariah. As this writer has tried to say, everyone should be satisfied with the results even to the extent of arising and giving three cheers and a tiger."

"It had the ring of truth and was inspiring. Not one lagging moment,'" said the Evening Mail. In the opinion of the Sun reviewer it is "the finest picture of America by Americans. We recommend the picture unqualifiedly to everyone whatever his taste in the theatre or in movies."

"The picture in many of its scenes is breath-taking," said the Evening World. "When Paramount officials declared, for James Cruze who made the picture, that hundreds of men and women remained out on the prairies undergoing hardships for months to give this story to movie lovers, those who saw it last night believed it implicitly."

"What makes this picture so genuinely worth while," said the Globe, "is its atmosphere of pioneer days, its spirit of restlessness and adventure, of breaking new soil, of blazing fresh trails, of digging for gold. Herein it is history recounted and made vivid. Herein it reaches heights of sincerity and rugged beauty, is magnificent and gripping and comes near to being an American epic."

"An epic of stubbornness and courage," said the Daily News. "You should not miss this picture. It has something for every one."

And the Evening Post: "With great artistic skill this thrilling period of American history is pictured. The production leaves one with a genuine feeling of patriotic love and admiration."

Unique Presentation For S-L Special

Many first run exhibitors throughout the United States who will present the latest S-L special, "Your Friend and Mine," will take advantage of the presentation values of this Metro release by an unique process of staging.

The picture unfolds the story originally written by Willard Mack, the author, as a vaudeville vehicle, presenting as part of the film the sketch enacted by Mr. Mack in its entirety. This portion of the story is in the third reel of the feature, and it is planned to stop the film at this point for the purpose of a stage enactment of the opening of the sketch, which will progress to a certain climax, at which point the screen will again take up the unfoldment of the tale.

Rabbi Uses Film as Theme for Sermon

The Associated Exhibitors feature, "Breaking Home Ties," played the big State Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, of which Howard Lichenstein is managing director, recently, and, from reports in the local newspapers and from the exhibitor, scored a triumph. It made such a deep popular appeal, indeed, that Rabbi Meyerberg, of the Dayton Temple, used it as the theme of his Friday evening sermon, in which he lauded it as an effective and eloquent object lesson in the beauties of home life.

Nita Naldi in New York

Nita Naldi, siren of the silver screen, has returned to New York from the Coast, where she went to make exterior scenes in George Melford's latest Paramount picture, "You Can't Fool Your Wife." She will begin work soon at the Paramount Long Island studio in "Lawful Larceny," an Allan Dwan production, with Hope Hampton, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody.

Large Bookings for Leah Baird Picture

Almost simultaneously with the release of "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of her 1923 specials for Associated Exhibitors, Leah Baird is leaving Los Angeles for a visit in New York. Whether divorce is a failure or not, this popular player is certain that married life isn't and to prove it she will be accompanied on her eastern trip by her husband and producer, Arthur F. Beck.

Though only released March 18, the new photoplay featuring Leah Baird already is off to a good start, a large number of important bookings having been made in advance.

The first thrill in the picture is a shipwreck scene showing hundreds perishing in midocean. A second shows a violent tropical hurricane. Another scene is described as a hair-raising life-and-death struggle between the hero of the story and a man-eating shark. Lastly, a smoking volcano is photographed at the moment when it bursts, hurling skywards the entire top of a mountain. Streams of flaming lava engulf a beautiful landscape, while the actors flee for life to a ship in the bay.

Sam Wood Starts on Big Paramount Play

After a long delay, due to the illness of the director, the company filming "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Sam Wood's production for Paramount, starring Gloria Swanson, left last week for Del Monte, Cal., where the pictures opened Friday morning with beach scenes.

Besides Director Woods and Miss Swanson, those who went to the sea resort included Huntly Gordon, Robert Agnew, Charles Greene, Assistant Director John Waters, Cameraman Alfred Gilks and property men, electricians and stage hands.

"The Flame of Life" a Big Hit

"The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel production, astonished West Coast theatre men at its recent opening in the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, when it ran away with the week's business, playing to unusual receipts despite serious opposition.

Following the opening, J. A. Partington, manager of the Granada, wired his congratulations to Carl Laemmle, praising the excellence of the picture as a box-office attraction. He informed the Universal chief that both critics and public were enthusiastic over the acting and the direction.

The Granada's chief opposition during the run of "The Flame of Life," and especially during the opening days, Saturday and Sunday, was the fine spring weather and the public parks, where thousands flocked for the first time of the season.

Partington, in his report to Laemmle, asserted that not one adverse comment was heard on the picture, a unique commendation, considering the unusual clientele of that house.

Universal Buys New Gibson Story

Universal has just completed the purchase of "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," a popular story by Stephen Chalmers, it is announced by Leon d'Usseau, head of the company's Eastern scenario department. The sale was arranged through Brandt & Kirkpatrick.

"Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande" was published in Short Stories and is a clever satire filled with action and comedy. It will be used as a vehicle for Hoot Gibson, Universal's leading Western star, whose modern comedy-Westerns have set a new mark in picture popularity.

It is expected that the new story will be adapted for the screen without delay and that it will be produced early in the summer for late summer release. Gibson's current release is "Single Handed," written and directed by Edward Sedgwick.

Begins on New Play

Shirley Mason, whose latest released picture was "Pawn Ticket 210," has begun work on a new production at the William Fox West Coast Studios, "Balance Due," under the direction of Henry Otto. Supporting Miss Mason is Albert Roscoe, leading man; Richard Tucker, heavy; Joseph Girard, Edward Martindale and Fred Kelcey.

Wray to Begin Soon

John Griffith Wray, director for Thomas H. Ince, who has just returned from a month's visit in New York City, will begin work shortly on a new Ince production at the studios at Culver City.

"Safety Last" for April 1

In announcing April as the release date for Harold Lloyd's first seven-reel comedy, 'Safety Last," Pathe declares that no other picture of any type has brought distributors and exhibitors together in the spirit of cordial co-operation for mutual advantage and service to picture patrons which has produced the admirably equitable "Safety Last" contract.

The essence of "Safety Last" contracts, Pathe explains, lies in rental provisions which enable indefinite extension of runs. Frank discussion of the individual exhibitor's problems settles the question of terms—guarantee, sharing, etc.—in a way to enable him, it is stated, to serve his community with profit to himself by continuing his run for a reasonable period after the "capacity houses" stage of his engagement has run its course.

The volume of "Safety Last" business booked throughout the United States up to two weeks before release date is reported to show a "solid front of indefinite runs," with exhibitors' interests better protected and their communities better served than has been recorded in the history of any other outstanding picture production.

The Broadway, New York, premiere of "Safety Last" will be at the Strand Theatre, where the picture is booked for an extended run beginning April 1.

Three Cosmopolitan Films for Broadway

For the first time in the history of motion pictures three productions of one company will be offered simultaneously on Broadway, when, on Easter Sunday, April 1, a trio of photoplays made by the Cosmopolitan Corporation have their initial presentations.

The three Cosmopolitan productions which will make their Broadway bow on Easter Sunday are "Enemies of Women," which will be presented as a super-special for an indefinite run at the Central Theatre; "The Go-Getter," which will have its premiere at the Rialto, and "The Nth Commandment," which will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre.

"Enemies of Women" is picturized from a romance by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. In artistry, lavishness of production and perfection of detail it is said to rival Cosmopolitan's "When Knighthood was in Flower," starring Marion Davies. The same author wrote "The Four Horsemen" and "Blood and Sand." The company which made the picture spent six weeks on location in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris, where the most striking episodes of the story are located.

In its cast are scores of beauties from the Ziegfeld "Follies" and other leading Broadway shows, and many society beauties, including Gloria Morgan, who recently married Reginald Claypool Vanderbilt, and her sister, Mrs. James Vail Converse.

For the impersonaiton of the characters created by Ibanez, the Cosmopolitan Corporation has assembled a cast headed by Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens. Alan Crosland directed.

"The Nth Commandment" is a picturization of a popular Fannie Hurst story and was created by the same combination which made "Humoresque." In addition to Miss Hurst as author, this combination includes Frank Borzage, director, and Frances Marion, scenario writer. Colleen Moore and James Morrison are featured in the cast.

"The Go-Getter" is a film version of Peter B. Kyne's story of the same name, adapted to the screen by John Lynch and directed by E. H. Griffith. Woven around the story of a wounded ex-service man and his efforts to win success in the business world, it is replete with humorous episodes and dramatic moments, it is stated. Night photography is brought to a high peak in this photoplay, one of the most thrilling scenes depicting a wild night flight of an aeronplane in pursuit of a speeding express train. T. Roy Barnes, who appears opposite Marion Davies in "Adam and Eva," and Seena Owen have the featured roles.

Griffith Finishing "The White Rose"

Motion picture enthusiasts who recall the delightful countryside scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East," and other D. W. Griffith screen masterpieces, will be interested to learn that this producer is now completing another effort wherein the major portion of his dramatic denouement moves against a background of distinctively attractive pastoral vistas.

Mr. Griffith is now finishing at Miami, Fla., his latest feature for United Artists Corporation, "The White Rose." It is a story of Southern romance and all the exterior scenes have been photographed amid the splendor of the unsullied spaces of the sunny Southland, and encompasses the wonderful architecture of the fine old stately mansions of that section in days gone.

Sign Brockwell for Big Production

Gladys Brockwell, one of the most popular screen stars, has been added to the impressive cast supporting Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the super-Jewel being made from Victor Hugo's novel at Universal City.

She will play the mother of Esmeralda, the gypsy dancer who is impersonated in the picture by Patsy Ruth Miller. The role is dramatic and has great emotional possibilities. It is felt that Miss Brockwell can be expected to realize them to the fullest extent.

Wallace Worsley, the director, aided by Perley Poore Sheehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr., the adapters, as well as by Chaney, are taking extraordinary measures to assure that every character of the fifteenth century classic will be reproduced faithfully in the screen version of Hugo's book.

Nearing Completion of Zenith Film

Word has been received from the Coast that the super-special "The Right of the Strongest" is just being completed. This is the initial production of the Zenith Pictures Corporation, a new independent producing company.

E. K. Lincoln is the star and is surrounded by a cast of well-known players, consisting of Helen Ferguson, June Elvidge, Niles Welsh, Winter Hall, Tom Santschi, George Seigmann, Tully Marshall and Robert Milash.

Built Irish Scenes on St. Patrick's Day

They celebrated St. Patrick's Day in great style at the Jackson studio in New York where they were making Irish street scenes for Marion Davies' next Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York."

"Little Old New York" is the story of a plucky little Irish girl, Patricia O'Day, who dons the disguise of a boy and comes to New York to seek her fortune.

Fox Film Going Big

"Brass Commandments," the William Farnum picture in which Wanda Hawley and Claire Adams are the William Fox star's leading support, is being received with hearty approval wherever shown. The thrilling sand storm on the desert, through which the determined hero fights his way to the rescue of two girls, has been recognized as one of the best effects of the screen.

Appears Personally

During the engagement of the William Fox special, "The Town That Forgot God," at the Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y., last week, a special attraction in connection with the picture, was the personal appearance of "Bunny" Grauer, the boy actor whose remarkable performance of the little hero of the story has been so highly praised wherever the picture is shown.

First National Adds Half Sheets to its Paper Supply

In accord with its policy of giving exhibitors a constantly improving service, First National has made an interesting and novel addition to the paper being issued with all First National pictures.

Starting with "Refuge," the latest picture starring Katherine MacDonald, two half-sheets will be supplied as well as the usual one-sheet. This increase in service was decided upon after the practical value of the half-sheets had been thoroughly tested and it became clear that they were wanted by exhibitors.

The half-sheet, as it has been worked out by First National, is an extremely effective piece of paper, large enough to permit of a striking pictorial display, yet of a convenient size for use where one-sheets cannot be placed.

Exhibitors are finding the new paper particularly handy for window showings in book stores, drug stores and in connection with special window dressings arranged to exploit First National pictures. Frequently the sheets are used instead of window cards.

Because of their convenient size, exhibitors are using the half-sheets in lobbies, either in frames, or panels, or stuck on mirrors. Also they are being pasted on boards, sometimes to fill in gaps between larger postings. Ingenious showmen are finding that the half-sheet lends itself to an infinite variety of uses.

The accompanying reproductions give a fair idea of the character of the paper. There is plenty of room for effective composition, utilizing one, or possibly two figures as the central point of interest, and permitting space for a legible billing at the bottom.

An interesting variation in treatment is shown in one of the half-sheets for Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle of Lost Ships." Here the artist arranged an interesting design with a drawing of the floating island of lost ships as the keynote. Generally, however, the point of attraction is a human figure.

Two half-sheets are supplied at the price of a single one-sheet, and the sliding price scale, according to quantity, prevails as in the case of other First National paper.

The new half-sheet being issued by First National with all pictures.

Prominent Persons See Clifton Film

One of the largest crowds that have ever witnessed a private screening of a motion picture, saw Elmer Clifton's production, "Down to the Sea in Ships" recently at the State Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors in Oklahoma City, Okla.

L. C. DeWalt, branch sales manager of the local Hodkinson Exchange, issued special invitations to a large number of exhibitors and distinguished visitors. Twenty-seven members of the House of Representatives and seventeen Senators with their wives in the audience, including Ira M. Finley, John M. Voorhees, Wilbur F. Vonhum and prominent members of local clubs. In addition to members of the Ladies' Music Club, the Sorosis Club, McDowell Club and the Apollo Club, there were 150 motion picture exhibitors from all sections of the State in attendance.

Edward Muchanan Bryan, who for several years has been in charge of all the high class operas in the city, assisted Mr. DeWalt with the invitations. He was enthusiastic over the reception accorded the picture and declared that during his entire experience in Oklahoma, this was by far the largest gathering in the State capital ever yet present at the screening of a photoplay.

The showing was held at 11:30 p. m. augmented by a special musical program. At the close of the picture the audience applauded vigorously.

It is believed that considerable interest was aroused in the picture by a special display arranged by the Hodkinson staff. A booth in the convention hall was decorated with posters, stills and other accessories, in the center of which was a shadow box lined with black crepe paper. An exact replica of the old square rigger "Charles W. Morgan," used in filming the picture, was placed in the box. A ripple or wave effect ingenuously painted and arranged with beaver board added to the effect. The ship aroused considerable interest inasmuch as it is one of the most complete miniature models ever built, and the Hodkinson staff was the recipient of many compliments on the artistic display.

Much satisfaction has been expressed at the Hodkinson offices over the splendid reception given to "Down to the Sea in Ships," and as a result of the convention, it is believed to be sold 100 per cent in the State of Oklahoma. Members of the convention committee unhesitatingly stated that it was the greatest entertainment of its kind ever offered the exhibitors in that territory, and practically every exhibitor who was at the screening expressed a desire to book it at an early date.

The success of the showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships" before a gathering of Oklahoma State exhibitors and exchange managers was the result of the enthusiasm shown by L. C. DeWalt, branch manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the Oklahoma territory. It was due to his untiring efforts it is said that this private showing achieved the success that it did.

Russell's New Picture

William Russell is hard at work on a new picture temporarily called "Alias, the Night Wind." Joseph Franz, directing Bill's last Fox picture, "Good-by, Girls," showed him in a comedy-melodramatic role, whereas in his new picture, according to reports, he is depicted in an entirely different character portrayal, full of the action characteristic of a Russell production. Maud Wayne is his leading lady.

Shipman Film Goes Big

According to Ernest Shipman, the first thirty days "The Man From Glengarry," the Ralph Connor story which he is presenting through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, surpassed the net returns to the producer of any other Canadian picture showing in Canada during their entire run up to date.

Mr. Shipman also states that this proves the box office value of "The Man From Glengarry." Inasmuch as this production has had the audience test throughout the Dominion, and as this test has been one of great success, there is no question in the minds of the producers as to the ultimate drawing and money making power of this production in the United States.

"The Man From Glengarry," which is the first of the Shipman products to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been made upon the exact locale called for by the original story by Ralph Connor.

The film was adapted by Faith Green from the novel by Ralph Connor and directed by Henry McRae with an all star cast. It will be released March 25 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

New Company Plans Alaskan Picture

Leaving Seattle March 7 on the steamship Northwestern, nineteen members of the Alaska Moving Picture Corporation, consisting of actors, actresses, author, director and production manager, sailed for Anchorage, Alaska, where they will make the company's first Alaskan picture. The enterprise is unique in that this is the first moving picture company to film a drama within the Arctic Circle, it is stated. The working title of the picture is "The Great White Silence." It is estimated that it will require ten reels to complete the picture. Lewis H. Moomaw wrote the script and will act as director.

Three members of the company have been in Anchorage for more than a month, where they have supervised the completion of studios. The filming of "The Great White Silence" will be the first camera work of the kind ever done around Mount McKinley. Government permission has been obtained to blast Child's Glacier for one of the thrilling scenes.

The leading roles will be taken by Eva Gordon, Alexis Luce, Albert Van Antwerp, William Dills, Gladys Johnston and Howard Webster.

Actual shooting of the picture will probably occupy about four months. It will be cut and titled at the Metro studios. Distribution will be through the independent market.

Grauman Devises Unique Prologue

Vitagraph's special production, "The Ninety and Nine," is proving to be one of the best pictures for exploitation and special advertising stunts in many months. Not only has the Forestry Commission in several States tied up with the Vitagraph picture as a splendid demonstration of the havoc wrought by forest fires and the menace of carelessness, but several exhibitors have constructed big locomotives on automobile trucks for street ballyhoos.

During the recent engagement of the picture at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre in Los Angeles a huge locomotive was built on the stage. With its mechanical effects, said to be the best ever constructed by the theatre's staff of mechanics, and its accompanying prologue, the picture had one of the best settings ever given in the theatre.

An exact, or as near exact as possible, duplicate of a giant locomotive was constructed and the background showed an immense timber set through which the locomotive sped. From the speeding of the giant drive wheels to the smoke issuing from the stack and sparks of fire in the forest, the illusion was perfect; by the aid of treadmill and splendid lighting effects—it gave the appearance that the locomotive was traveling at terrific speed through the burning timberland.

The flying sparks of the burning timber were produced by the aid of stereopticons and red flares. The result was a spellbinder and an additional effect was obtained by raising the picture screen at the moment when the hero was driving the locomotive through the forest fire and showing the built locomotive in action.

In addition to the locomotive stunt, Mr. Grauman showed a separate prologue. This was called "Twenty Minutes at a Railroad Station," and was presented just before the picture. The scene was supposed to represent the railroad station in the town of Marlow, the town in the picture, and the different characters that really appear on the film were seen on the station platform. The action of the prologue was made up of stunts by the station agent, the old maid and the gang generally found about a country station. A "hick" quartette was a feature.

The time taken up by the prologue, "Twenty Minutes at a Railroad Station," was twenty minutes and the time consumed in putting over the big punch of the locomotive in the burning forest was four and a half minutes, but ample to make the illusion perfect and put over the thrill.

Mrs. Arthur Friend Finds a Movie Star

Behind the formal announcement of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation that Miss Mimi Palmeri will have the leading role in that company's production of "The Ragged Edge" lies a new Cinderella romance of the motion picture world. It is a story of the sudden opening of the door of opportunity for a talented girl who four months ago knew motion pictures only as a patron of theatres. Now she is playing opposite Alfred Lunt in one of the biggest of the twelve feature productions which Distinctive Pictures will make this year.

Miss Palmeri was born in New York City, the daughter of an Italian father and a French mother. Her ambition was to be a concert pianist, and to this end she was sent to the Damrosch Musical Institute for two and a half years. Then came the necessity of earning her own living, and Miss Palmeri became a fashion model. This was two summers ago. In this work she struggled along, as do thousands of other New York girls, with no special recognition of her beauty other than the small weekly salary. She could only dream of fame.

Last fall, Mrs. Arthur S. Friend, wife of the president of Distinctive Pictures Corporaiton, saw Miss Palmeri's photograph in one of the style publications. She was struck at all interested in entering motion immediately by the unusual expression and bearing of the girl, and wrote to her, saying that if she was pictures she might take the letter to Mr. Friend.

This Miss Palmeri did. Mr. Friend was highly pleased by the girl who had been sent in by his wife and had tests made of her. In the language of the industry the tests were knockouts. From every point of view Miss Palmeri was photographically perfect.

Just about the time the tests were made, Distinctive Pictures Corporation purchased the photoplay rights to "The Ragged Edge" by Harold MacGrath, which deals with the romance of an unsophisticated beauty of the South Seas who runs away from cruel surroundings and finds happiness after many unusual adventures.

The photoplay is now nearing completion and it is said to reveal that the beauty of this new star of the screen is fully matched by her ability as an actress. Harmon Weight is directing "The Ragged Edge" and declares that the few weeks in which Miss Palmeri has been before the camera have brought out the most extraordinary histrionic ability.

In Paramount Film

Gus Weinberg, for twenty-five years a star in musical comedy and stage productions, has the important role of Andres Garavel in Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

Lichtman Products Go Big in Indiana

The Indianapolis branch of the Al Lichtman Corporation reports that Indiana exhibitors are giving the Lichtman product an enthusiastic reception. The following houses in that state have signed up one hundred per cent for the first eight Preferred Pictures: Arc Theatre, Danville; the Classic, Elmwood; the Artcraft, Franklin; the Hippodrome, Fort Wayne; the Sanders, Indianapolis; the Arc, Lafayette; the Elk, New Albany; the Storm, Oakland City, and the Victory, Union City.

The Apollo a large theatre recently opened in the business section of Indianapolis, has just completed a run of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," which played to excellent business. "Rich Men's Wives" has recently finished a successful engagement on the circuit of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, controlling Orpheum, Fort Wayne; the Liberty, Terre Haute; the Victory, Evansville; the Murrette, Richmond; the Strand, Kokomo, and the Capitol, Clinton. The results in every case were so satisfactory that Consolidated has signed up for similar runs in the same houses for the second Lichtman release "Shadows."

L. O. Edson, manager of the Classic Theatre, Elmwood, Indiana, recommends "The Hero" as without doubt one of the best pictures he ever ran, adding that it was praised by every one who patronized his house during its engagement there.

Goldwyn Activities at Culver City Studio

Myrtle Stedman and Maude George, both well known screen players of high standing in their profession, have been added to the cast of "Six Days," the Elinor Glyn picture which Charles J. Brabin will direct for Goldwyn. Corinne Griffith and Claude King head the cast. Ouida Bergere has completed the continuity of "Six Days" and left for New York enroute to Europe and Director Brabin is about ready to begin "shooting" the scenes.

Lambert Hillyer, who is directing the new screen version of Rex Reach's novel, "The Spoilers," for Jesse D. Hampton, to be released by Goldwyn, is expected to return with his company the last of the week from Balboa Beach, where they have been filming exteriors and water scenes.

Erich von Stroheim has taken the cast which is to appear in "Greed," his picturization of Frank Norris' "McTeague," to San Francisco and has begun the filming of that picture.

King Vidor will soon reach the final photographic stages of making "Three Wise Fools."

Victor Seastrom and Hugo Ballin are reading stories and announcement may soon be expected as to the identity of the first picture Mr. Seastrom will make for Goldwyn.

"Alice Adams" Film Given High Praise

Associated Exhibitors' Encore Picture, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," which is scheduled for release April 8, has won enthusiastic praise from every person who has had a pre-view of it, it is reported. Readers of Booth Tarkington's great prize-winning novel have, it is said, been struck by the fidelity with which it has been transferred to the screen.

Florence Vidor is said to be Alice Adams to the very life, giving a remarkably sympathetic portrayal of the small-town girl who lost step with the social leaders when her family fell behind financially, and who entered upon a pitifully appealing life of pretense—finding her real self later, however.

Rowland V. Lee directed the production, and, from all accounts, did an admirable bit of work. The picture is in seven parts.

Griffith Finishing Picture at Miami

The recent arrival of D. W. Griffith at Miami, Fla., where he is finishing scenes for his new photoplay feature for United Artists Corporation, "The White Rose," has resulted in a motion picture boom in that city. Everybody is talking pictures and picture-making and figuring on Miami replacing Hollywood as the cinema capital.

Out in Hialeah, the new suburb, and where is located the large and newly equipped studio Mr. Griffith has leased for a time, real estate interests are looking forward to the eventual formation of a motion picture colony. The residents of the entire city of Miami have left nothing undone to make the stay of Mr. Griffith a pleasing one.

Kathleen Key Signed for Goldwyn Stock

Kathleen Key, lineal descendant of the Key who wrote "The Star Spangled Banner," has signed a long term contract to act in Goldywn pictures.

Three years ago Miss Key played "atmosphere" for Thomas H. Ince. She soon graduated to small parts. Snowy Baker, sportmans and film producer, saw her work and engaged her as leading woman for a series of pictures produced in Australia.

On her return to California Kathleen Key played in Rex Ingram's "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Then she was selected by another artist-director, Ferdinand Earle, to play the Persian heroine of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.

Since then she played the city siren of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?' and became leading woman for Tom Mix.

Miss Key is now a member of the Goldwyn stock company, which in the noted names it embraces is the first rival of the famous Biograph stock company.

Invite Staff to Showing

One of the most famous country editors in America, William Allan White, of the Gazette, Emporia, Kans., has been invited to a special showing of "A Front Page Story," Jess Robbins' comedy drama in which Edward Horton is featured. The Vitagraph branch office at Kansas City will have as its guest for the showing, the entire staff of the Gazette. The showing will be in Emporia.

Completing Special

William Duncan and Edith Johnson are finishing their coming special at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood. It will be one of the most thrilling of all the Duncan pictures and will show him in the character in which he is best admired by fans, a hard riding cowboy.

The story is a vigorous, lively drama in which the hero straightens out the political troubles of a typical western town.

Big Bookings on "Hero"

Al Lichtman exchanges report many first runs arranged for Gilbert Emery's play, "The Hero." Ascher Brothers have booked the feature for their circuit of Chicago houses. Miller's Los Angeles put over a big engagement last week, during which Gaston Glass, Barbara La Marr and John Sainpolis made a series of personal appearances.

The picture is soon to play at the Blue Mouse, Portland, Ore.; the Blue Mouse, Seattle, Wash.; the Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio; the Columbia, Dayton, Ohio, and the Regent, Philadelphia. In New York it has played the Moss, Keith and Proctor circuits and has been booked for ten Loew theatres.

"Robin Hood" Makes Big Hit in France

"Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" began its first engagement in Continental Europe at the Salle Mariaux, Paris, on February 16, and has made a bigger hit in the French capital than any American or European motion picture production that heretofore has been presented there, United Artists says.

Receipts for the first and second weeks of the run were not only larger than any other motion picture house had ever received in Paris, it is stated, but greater also than any two weeks' receipts in any of the dramatic theatres, United Artists reports.

It is stated that out of four productions that previously had set new records in receipts in France, three were photoplays of stars comprising United Artists. These three were Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro," Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid" and D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East."

"Mighty Lak' a Rose" Appeals to New York

"Mighty Lak' a Rose," the First National picture showing at the Strand Theatre this week, received the emphatic indorsement of the critics of the New York newspapers, because of its strong human appeal, the superior quality of the production made under the direction of Edwin Carewe, and the exceptionally fine acting. A great personal triumph was scored by Dorothy Mackaill in the sympathetic character of Rose. Excerpts from some of the reviews follow:

Beauvais Fox in the Tribune: "The picture gets you, and most of all the girl gets you. The girl is played by Dorothy Mackaill. She has that mysterious and indefinable appeal that is summed up as screen personality. She is of the Blanche Sweet and Lillian Gish type, and is a real find for the screen."

Evening Telegram: "'Mighty Lak' a Rose,' Edwin Carewe's latest photoplay, is just about as pretty a love story as has been unreeled on Broadway in a long time. It has a touch of human interest seldom seen on the screen and at times a lump comes up in your throat, only to be swallowed when something humorous is shown. Miss Mackaill is a splendid screen actress, and throughout the picture she plays the difficult role in finished fashion."

Evening Mail: "Edwin Carewe, the director, it seems, believed that the song which enjoyed a long term of popularity, if made the title of a picture, would bring many into the theatre. No doubt it will and a goodly number of those who see it will weep at the trials and tribulations that were set forth."

The Sun: "The picture does work up interest and is very, very well acted. Its effect (referring to the big scene) is very probably due to the fragile beauty and excellent acting of Dorothy Mackaill as the blind girl. Here is a really beautiful performance. The ending of the picture is effective."

Evening World: "Edwin Carewe chose well when he used 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' as his theme, and has turned out a picture that is not only well directed, well photographed and well acted, but decidedly pleasing in every way. 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' as shown, is just as pleasing a film as it was a song. It will repay you for a trip to the Strand, no matter how far away you live."

Preparing for Big First National Film

Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of the new Frank Borzage productions, has started razing three sets at the United Studios to make room for a huge new set for "Sands of Time," his initial all-star offering of the new series.

A tract of three acres was needed as a building site for the scenes. The new buildings are to represent those surrounding Gramercy Park, in the heart of Manhattan, as well as the park itself and the streets facing it. This is one of the biggest motion picture building contracts ever negotiated in Los Angeles, it is stated.

Pauline Garon, of "Adam's Rib" fame, has been signed by Jacobs and is now en route to the Coast to play the leading feminine role in this picture, which is to be released through Associated First National Pictures.

Signs Lloyd Hughes

Arthur H. Jacobs, who is making the Frank Borzage productions, has just signed Lloyd Hughes to play one of the star parts in his initial picture, which Mr. Gorzage is starting to direct at the United Studios, to be released through Associated First National, as the first of a series of Borzage films.

"Souls for Sale" Press Book Ready

The exhibitors' press and service book which Goldwyn has just published for its big new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls For Sale," is a thing of beauty and serviceability.

The cover drawing in red and black is from the pen of Ted Ireland and is a most striking conception—one that exhibitors will want to mount in their lobbies and use in windows right along with the window card which is reproduced on the back page.

The inside front cover contains pictures of the various posters, in red and black. Four pages are devoted to newspaper advertisements.

The page devoted to exploitation is unusually rich in suggestions that will prove of great value to exhibitors.

The four pages of newspaper copy contain material for every possible phase of newspaper publicity, printed on one side of the paper only, so that the stories can be cut out, pasted and the name of the theatre and play date written in. The book was prepared under the direction of Howard Dietz, by Silas F. Seadler.

Prominent Players in Vitagraph Special

Victor Schertzinger, who is directing "The Man Next Door," Vitagraph's special, is on location with his company at Victorville, Cal. This story by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon,' is laid on a grain ranch, Palo Verdi, in the West and Director Schertzinger has taken over 3,800 acres upon which are grazing 5,000 head of cattle.

The cast in "The Man Next Door" will have among its feature players Alice Calhoun, James Morrison, Frank Sheridan, David Torrence, John Steppling, Adele Farrington, Mary Culver, Bruce Boteler and Harry Todd.

Miss Calhoun, who is an expert horsewoman, is now learning to use a lasso. "Bonnie Bell," the character Miss Calhoun plays, is a splendid young girl reared on her father's ranch and she knows how to use a rope as well as Will Rogers. Miss Calhoun is rapidly acquiring the same facility.

Church Shows Pictures

The city of Topeka, Kan., is what is known as a blue-law town, and motion picture houses are not permitted to do any business on Sunday. So the Rev. John Wells Rahill, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, has been using United Artists' releases with his church services, and thereby increasing the attendance to such an extent that he is turning away a large number of people, who cannot get into his small auditorium.

"The pictures you are sending me for Sundays are great," said the Rev. Mr. Rahill in a letter to United Artists' Kansas City exchange, "and I think that picture, 'The Man Who Played God,' is the best I ever saw."

Associated First National Announces List of Pictures for Spring Release

"Girl of the Golden West" and "Within the Law" Included in Schedule

Associated First National announces an extraordinarily strong group of features for spring release. Every picture on the list will stand close analysis as a box office asset, estimating the tested value of the stars and the drawing power of the world-famous dramas and novels, such as "The Girl of the Golden West," "Within the Law" and "Trilby."

Drama and comedy, romance and adventure, are well varied in productions that promise much to exhibitors for the months of April, May and June. Contrary to the usual policy of distributing companies, First National appears to have reserved a number of its greatest pictures for the end of the season.

The list of pictures scheduled for the coming three months is as follows: Richard Barthelmess in "The Bright Shawl," Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law," Douglas MacLean in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Man of Action"; Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West," Katherine MacDonald in "The Lonely Road," Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby," James Young's production of "Wandering Daughters," Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy," Jackie Coogan in "Toby Tyler," Frank Borzage's production, "Sands of Time," and Dorothy Phillips in the Allen Holubar production, "Slander the Woman." It is probable that several more pictures will be added to this list.

Inspiration Pictures, Inc., is responsible for the production of Joseph Hergesheimer's popular novel, "The Bright Shawl," with Richard Barthelmess as the star and Dorothy Gish in his support. This is the latest novel from the pen of the author of "Tol'able David" and was adapted for the screen by Edmund Goulding, who also adapted the earlier Barthelmess picture, conceded to be one of the finest photoplays ever made. "The Bright Shawl" is romantic, dramatic and colorful in the extreme, with many of the scenes laid in a picturesque part of Cuba. John S. Robertson, who has a long list of outstanding successes to his credit, directed the production.

In "A Man of Action" Thomas H. Ince has supplied an adroit comedy from the pen of Bradley King and starring Douglas MacLean. The plot takes the characters over a wide variety of territory, ranging all the way from New York to San Francisco and including the western plains. Supporting MacLean is an exceptionally fine cast, with Marguerite de la Motte in the leading female role and Raymond Hatton and Arthur Hull contributing telling performances.

It is difficult to conceive of a stronger box office appeal than that found in the combination of Norma Talmadge and "Within the Law," which Joseph M. Schenck is offering through First National. One of the greatest of all modern dramas is coming to the screen, with America's favorite star in the character made famous by Jane Cowl. Frank Lloyd has excelled himself in the direction of a picture that seems certain to take a place among the classics of the screen. The cast numbers a long list of favorites, including Lew Cody, Jack Mulhall, Eileen Percy, Joseph Kilgour, Arthur S. Hull and Helen Ferguson.

Even more than "Within the Law," "The Girl of the Golden West" has become a classic of the American theatre. Written and produced on the stage by David Belasco in 1905, the play won undying fame as an epic of the romantic West. Some years later it was turned into an opera by Puccini, and now it is the subject of a thrilling motion picture, directed by Edwin Carewe, with J. Warren Kerrigan as Ramierez, Sylvia Breamer as the Girl and Russell Simpson as the Sheriff.

The third Richard Walton Tully production, starring Guy Bates Post, is "Trilby," originally a novel by Gerald du Maurier, which was dramatized and played all over the world. As a revival in New York a few seasons ago it proved to be tremendously popular with the present generation of theatregoers. For the title role Mr. Tully secured a beautiful young French actress, Andree Lafayette, who was brought to America especially for this production.

In "The Lonely Road" Katherine MacDonald has an original story by Charles A. Logue introducing the age-old question of family finances and the rights of a wife in sharing her husband's earnings. It is a powerful story that marks the high spot in the career of the beautiful star. Victor Schertzinger directed.

James Young selected "Wandering Daughters," by Dana Burnett, for his initial First National production. As the title suggests, the story concerns the restless girls of the present day who become dissatisfied with their environment and seek new paths in their quest of excitement. It is an intensely interesting theme, skillfully handled by director, author and a distinguished cast, in which Marguerite de la Motte is prominently featured as the typical flapper.

"Toby Tyler," the Jackie Coogan picture to follow "Daddy," was adapted from a popular story which deals with the adventures of a boy who runs away with a traveling circus and finally becomes the world's greatest horseback rider. It is ideal material for the young star. Director Eddie Cline secured a traveling circus to contribute a realistic atmosphere to the picture, which abounds in both heart interest and humor.

"Sands of Time," the first of Frank Borzage's productions for First National, is an adaptation of the famous story, "Terwilliger," which was run serially in newspapers all over the United States after it had appeared in a magazine. This production was made on an elaborate scale by the director of "Humoresque," "The Good Provider" and a number of other popular pictures.

Constance Talmadge will be seen in "Dulcy," a sparkling comedy that in its original stage form scored one of the biggest successes that Broadway has known in years. It affords an ideal character for Miss Talmadge, and has been given a thoroughly sympathetic production by Joseph M. Schenck, who secured Anita Loos and John Emerson to write the continuity and Sidney Franklin to direct. In "Dulcy" Miss Talmadge has a sure-fire attraction to follow her triumph in "East Is West."

"Slander the Woman" is an adaptation of one of Jeffry Deprend's thrilling adventure stories published under the title of "The White Frontier." The action is intensely dramatic, with most of the scenes laid in the wilds of Canada, where a young woman, played with emotional fervor by Dorothy Phillips, seeks seclusion after she has been grossly slandered and made the victim of another's wrong doing. An unusual plot has been developed to its fullest possibilities in this picture.

Clifton Picture to Play Three More Weeks at Cameo

Owing to the success of Elmer Clifton's spectacle, "Down to the Sea in Ships," released by Hodkinson, at the Cameo Theatre, New York, announcement is made that this production will be held over for three more weeks. This will make the appearance of the romance of whaling days at the Cameo an eight-week engagement.

Following upon the heels of the New York success comes word from the Hodkinson branches relative to other important bookings from leading theatres. According to the report, Tom Moore has booked "Down to the Sea in Ships" for a run at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., beginning April 1. Pershing Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., will also show this production on April 1, while the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, will show "Down to the Sea in Ships" on April 7.

The picture opened at the Grand Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, on March 18, where it has been meeting with the same success that it has met in other localities.

The business done by the Cameo Theatre for the first four weeks of the run averaged better than $9,200 a week.

The surprising success which the production has been meeting with in New York and the big theatres throughout the United States that are signing up with this feature for an indefinite run is considered by the Hodkinson officials as presaging one of the biggest box office attractions for the season.

Rawlinson Supported by Big Cast

"Fools and Riches," Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle, has been put into production at Universal City under the direction of Herbert Blache. The popular screen hero of "The Scarlet Car" and "The Prisoner" is supported by a cast which includes some of the best known players in the motion picture profession.

Chief among the supporting players is Tully Marshall, veteran stage and screen actor, whose character parts have the outstanding feature of many of the screen's biggest plays. The feminine leads in the picture are taken by Katherine Perry and Doris Pawn.

Nickolai De Ruiz, the "ugliest villain" of Universal City, and chosen for the role of "The Torturer" in Victor Hugo's classic, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now being filmed as a Universal super-Jewel production, starring Lon Chaney, appears as a "heavy" in "Fools and Riches." Other well known characters in the cast are John Cosser, Roy Laidlaw and Arthur Stuart Hull.

At the Strand

Thomas H. Ince's production, "Bellboy 13," starring Douglas MacLean, will be shown at the Strand Theatre the week beginning March 25. This is an uproarious comedy in which the popular star has one of the most congenial roles of his career.

In the cast supproting Mr. MacLean are Margaret Loomis, John Steppling, Jean Walsh and Eugene Burr.

Universal Plans to Show Five Strong Features During April

Universal announces the release of five five-reel features during the month of April. These releases will be in addition to the April Jewel release, which is scheduled as "The Abysmal Brute," a stirring film drama of the prize ring, adapted from Jack London's famous novel. "The Abysmal Brute" is a Hobart Henley production and has Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," as star, supported by Mabel Julienne Scott and a strong cast.

Universal's five-reel feature releases are photo-dramas of the highest class, Universal officials assert, and mark a distinct development in the progress of such box-office attractions. The April releases were made with such stars as Hoot Gibson, Gladys Walton, Herbert Rawlinson, Alice Lake, Ethel Grey Terry, Kathryn Williams, Roy Stewart and Niles Welsh.

They were directed by a corps of directors who have gained great reputation as box-office builders, it is stated. Among them are Herbert Blache, Jack Conway, King Baggot and Edward Sedgwick. The pictures were adapted from high-grade stories from the pens of popular authors or playwrights. Two of the five are all-star cast pictures.

The first April release will be a Herbert Rawlinson picture, directed by Herbert Blache. It is an action-drama adapted from a magazine story by Evelyn Campbell. Alice Lake is Rawlinson's chief support. Edna Murphy plays a prominent supporting role. The story was adapted for the screen by Albert Kenyon.

"Nobody's Bride" will be released April 2. Prints have been in the various Universal exchanges for several weeks.

"Trimmed in Scarlet" will be Universal's second April release. It is a screen version of William Hurlbut's popular play, in which Maxine Elliott starred so successfully several seasons ago. Jack Conway directed it. E. T. Lowe, Jr., adapted the play for the screen.

The principal role is taken by Kathlyn Williams, who has been featured in many productions. Lucille Ricksen plays the leading romantic role. Opposite her is Robert Agnew, a popular juvenile, and Roy Stewart, a star in his own right in many Universal serials and specials. David Torrance also takes an important role.

"Trimmed in Scarlet" received far more than ordinary attention during its production, it is stated. It will be released April 9.

The mid-April release will be a new Gladys Walton picture, "The Town Scandal," adapted from Frederick Arnold Kummer's widely read Cosmopolitan story, "The Chicken That Came Home to Roost." It is a chorus girl story and puts Miss Walton back into pink tights. It will be remembered that she first rode to stardom on the excellence of her work in "Pink Tights," her first Universal feature.

"The Town Scandal" is the story of a chorus girl who goes back to her home town and settles down, and the many and varied complications which arise. Opposite Miss Walton is Edward Hearne, the popular leading man of "The Flirt." King Baggot directed "The Town Scandal." It will be released April 16.

The fourth April release scheduled by Universal will be on April 23 and will be "Dead Game," a new Hoot Gibson comedy drama. "Dead Game" is from an original story written especially for Gibson by Edward Sedgwick, who also directed it.

Laura LaPlante, who has won a large following as the heroine of many Universal westerns and serials, has her first leading woman role in five-reel features in this picture.

The final April release by Universal will be "What Wives Want," from a story by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and Perry N. Vekroff. It is being made as an all-star attraction, with such popular players in the cast as Ethel Grey Terry, Vernon Steele, Ramsey Wallace, Niles Welsh, Margaret Landis, Lila Leslie and Harry A. Barrows.

The picture is said to be an interesting and highly entertaining portrayal of a woman's way in matters of the heart. It has climaxes of unusual strength, and clever situations excellently handled, those who have seen it in production assert. A finished print of this feature is expected in New York during the coming week, and prints will be rushed to Universal exchanges well in advance of its release April 30.

Paramount Pictures Has Special Showing

Members of the Committee on Public Relations affiliated with the Hays organization and their friends to the number of about three hundred attended a special showing of James Cruz's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," at the Criterion Theatre Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

Preceding the presentation of the picture Lee F. Hanmer, of the Russell Sage Foundation and chairman of the executive committee of the larger body, spoke briefly, offering the congratulations of the committee to Paramount and Director Cruze.

"'The Covered Wagon'," he said, "represents what we have been hoping for and looking for ever since we became actively interested in our present work."

Mr. Hanmer then introduced John C. Flinn, of the Paramount organization, who sketched briefly the formulation of the early plans for the picture.

The feature was presented with full orchestral accompaniment, the orchestra being under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld. Throughout the performance the audience frequently broke in with prolonged and enthusiastic applause.

Degan Joins Cast

Arthur Degan, who plays Nellie's father in the George M. Cohan musical comedy, "Little Nellie Kelly," will be seen as Thomas Meighan's father in "The Ne'er-Do-Well," a Paramount picture, which Alfred E. Green is making from Rex Beach's novel. Degan was added to the "Ne'er-Do-Well" cast this week.

Scene from Truart's production, "Broadway Gold," featuring Elaine Hammerstein, Elliot Dexter and Kathlyn Williams

New Juvenile Actor

A new juvenile actor, handsome enough to contest the laurels of the long established favorites, will be introduced by the Goldwyn Company in "Three Wise Fools."

William Haines, selected one year ago by Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre from thousands of applicants in New York, and who has since been playing small parts and receiving training in cinema technique, has his first big chance as Gordon, the nephew in the King Vidor screen production of Austin Strong's popular play.

Paramount Company Goes to Florida

Wesley Ruggles and a company of Paramount players, headed by Agnes Ayres as star, have gone to Florida to film the exterior scenes for "The Heart Raider," a love comedy-drama adapted by Jack Cunningham from Harry Durant's story, "Arms and the Girl." In the supporting cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Charles Ruggles, Marie Burke, Charles Riegal, William Nally, Marie Olivet, Frances Greenleaf and Pauline LeGros. The technical staff for the picture will consist of Charles Schoenbaum, first camera; J. Swayne, second camera, and W. J. Scully, assistant to Director Ruggles. Scenes will be taken in the vicinity of Palm Beach and Miami, Fla., and Savannah, Ga.

"Down to the Sea" Exploitation

W. W. Hodkinson, releasing the Elmer Clifton production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," has provided a fine press book and other exploitation aids that will enable any wide-awake exhibitor to put the picture over to good advantage.

The cuts, lobby cards, paper and other adjuncts to theatre publicity have the spirit of the sea in them and should attract attention. The ballyhoo suggestions offer possibilities for large or small expenditures but have behind them a sound showmanship that should cause them to pull even if they are made to cost little.

The press book itself is a work of art and gives a clear insight into the fine possibilities of this story of the men whose lives are spent in the wide spaces of the blue water.

Lasky Transfers Julian Johnson

One of the last decisions made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, before his departure for California transferred the principal activities of Julian Johnson, manager of the editorial department of the company, to Long Island City.

"While the Pot Boils" Is New Bruce Scenic

Robert C. Bruce, creator of Wilderness Tales, the beautiful scenic dramas which have aroused so much comment on both sides of the Atlantic, has sprung his surprise on the industry.

A year ago when Bruce left on his annual trip to the wilderness, he hinted that he would have a surprise for his friends and the trade on his return east. Mr. Bruce revealed the secret last week when invitations were issued to the trade papers and friends to witness a private showing of a five-reel feature, "While the Pot Boils," produced by Mr. Bruce during his last sojourn in the wildernesses of Oregon, Washington and northern California.

"While the Pot Boils" is said to be a unique feature. Bruce has made a world-wide reputation in his "Wilderness Tales," by combining simple stories of heart interest with beautiful and impressive scenic backgrounds. The announcement of his feature was received with wide interest, for Bruce has been the pioneer in a new field of production and his previous pictures, "Wilderness Tales," which are being distributed by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are regarded as a distinct asset to the screen.

"More drama has been used in 'While the Pot Boils' than in any of my previous pictures," said Mr. Bruce in a recent interview. "I have chosen a theme never before put into pictures and the results have far exceeded my expectations. The story was admirably suited for outdoor production. In making this picture I found it necessary to travel the wilderness of three states and travel several thousands of miles with the entire company to get some of the backgrounds. There is a sea sequence, a mountain and a desert sequence through which the story progresses. I believe that the picture will prove a sensation when shown on the screen."

Distribution plans on "While the Pot Boils" will be announced soon.

English Must Meet American Standards

The oft repeated plaint in England that British producers meet with nothing but difficulty when visiting the United States will not be corroborated by Charles Wilcox, managing director of Graham Wilcox Productions, Ltd., when he arrives in London. Mr. Wilcox has sailed after a month's stay in New York during which he disposed of the two Mae March English-made pictures, "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" and "A Woman's Secret," to the Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation and "While London Sleeps," a night-life story of the English metropolis, to Public Opinion Pictures, Inc.

In addition Mr. Wilcox also sold to the Fox Film Company the film rights to Galsworthy's "Loyalties," which is running as a play in both New York and London.

"From what I have seen of the United States I know there is no ban on British production," said Mr. Wilcox. "The proposition is merely for English producers to make pictures good enough to interest the American public.

"It seems to us that the international market is one that has been too long neglected by the British producer. From now on we shall make no picture which does not carry what we believe to be an American appeal.

"In spite of post-war difficulties, high taxes and a million and a half unemployed the film industry in England is flourishing. Actually the British are accustomed to paying more to see pictures per capita than you do in America.

"I was delighted with my first visit to America and with the type of men I met in the business of motion picture distribution. I feel I can return to England and do my share to promote harmony between the producers and distributors of our two great countries."

"Chu Chin Chow," the next Graham Wilcox subject, will soon be in the course of production in London and Algiers. It is said that a well known American star is to be signed to play the wife of "Chu Chin Chow."

First National Buys "Black Oxen" Rights

First National has purchased the motion picture rights to Gertrude Atherton's novel, "Black Oxen," the sensational popular and literary success of the year.

As a picture, Mrs. Atherton's story will be unique in its appeal, First National says. It will present a middle-aged woman, who looks, acts and feels like a woman of twenty-five. Moreover it will show how, through a seeming miracle of science, this defeat of age may become possible for all humanity. The picture will contain a personal message for every man, and more especially, for every woman, in an audience, it is stated.

The idea of warding off the years that "like black oxen tread the world," was utilized by the novelist in an engrossing and penetrating study of character and social conditions.

"The Ragged Edge" Is Nearly Finished

Shooting of the final scenes of "The Ragged Edge," second of Distinctive's big features for 1923, will be finished at Miami, Florida, before April 1. The cutting and titling will then be started immediately.

Alfred Lunt, who made his screen debut in "Backbone," the first Distinctive production this year, has the leading male role. Opposite him is starred Miss Mimi Palmeri, a young actress new to the screen.

Others in the cast as announced by Distinctive are: Charles Fang, Wallace Erskine, George MacQuarrie, Charles Slatterly, Christian Frank, Grace Griswold, Alice May, Charles Kent, Percy Carr, Sydney Dean, Hattie Delaro, Marie L. Day.

"The Ragged Edge" has been adapted to the screen by Forrest Halsey from Harold MacGrath's novel of the same name. It is being directed by Harmon Weight. Harry Fischbeck is the cameraman.

Goldwyn Film Given Premiere at Capitol

"Lost and Found," Goldwyn's picturization of the story by Carey Wilson which was made on the Island of Tahiti by Director Walsh, received its New York premiere at the Capitol Theatre this week. Judging from the reviews by the critics of New York newspapers, says Goldwyn, the picture has lived up to all the claims made for it by its producers.

Rose Pelswick, in the New York American, wrote: "A photoplay of action that abounds with exquisite scenes of out-door life."

Beauvais Fox, in the New York Tribune: "Has the rare merit of being unhackneyed. A South Sea idyll."

Robert E. Sherwood, in the New York Herald: "'Lost and Found' is authentically beautiful."

Flynn Soon to Start on Goldwyn Picture

Goldwyn has selected as the first vehicle on which Emmett J. Flynn will exercise his directorial talents, on behalf of that production corporation, Marion Crawford's novel, "In the Palace of the King," the picture rights to which it recently acquired.

It was upon this novel that the play of the same title, in which Viola Allen won one of her greatest stage triumphs, was based. Its action takes place in Italy, all in the space of a single night.

Mr. Flynn directed "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and his most recent big production was a screen version of Dumas' "Count of Monte Cristo."

Big Publicity for Fairbanks Picture

While extensive exploitation and heavy publicity campaigns for "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," the United Artists release, are not unusual, perhaps the most intensive advance campaign for this feature, says United Artists, was put over recently by J. W. Sayre, advertising manager for the Greater Theatres Company.

The campaign was begun two months before the engagement at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle. In that time Mr. Sayre succeeded in getting thirty solid columns of publicity matter into the Seattle newspapers. This matter consisted of stories long and short—mostly short—and pictures—109 different items in all. Not a bit of this matter was paid advertising.

In addition to the newspaper campaign the Greater Theatres Company also put out 100 twenty-four sheets, covering not only Seattle but towns within a radius of fifteen to twenty miles.

"The Crash" Is Now Being Edited

Jess Robbins' new picture, "The Crash," which he is now editing for Vitagraph release, will show Edward Horton in one of the loveable farce characters with which he became identified since his first picture, "Too Much Business." Robbins' "A Front Page Story" has received remarkable newspaper publicity wherever shown, as it is one of the most realistic screen stories of newspaper life that has ever been offered.

The cast supporting Horton in "The Crash" includes Barbara Bedford, Zazu Pitts, Tom Ricketts, Carl Stockdale, Tom Murray, James Kelley and Stanley Taylor.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Pathe's April 1 Program Has Pollard, Maloney and Parrott

Pathe's April 1 program, headed by Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last," lists a total of ten subjects, including two two-reelers—Snub Pollard in "Where Am I" and "The Extra Seven," with Leo Maloney.

The Snub Pollard comedy presents a young husband pretending "total loss of memory" as a means of side-stepping his wife's mother during her visit. He has tragic-comic adventures until he is rescued by his bride from the clutches of a terrible man-catching lady.

Leo Maloney, as the bashful suitor of the pretty daughter of the ranch where he "punches" cattle, is accused by her of encouraging her brother's vice of gambling. The hero, however, is really engaged in securing evidence that the boy is in the hands of a card shark and desperado. The hero is accused, but manages to clear himself with both the law and the girl.

The moral of the Aesop's Film Fable, in this list, "Farmer Al Falfa's Bride," does not enlighten him until the lady's final yielding brings it home to him that: "When maidens say no, they often mean yes."

The tenth episode of "Plunder" shows the heroine and her lover beset by mysterious and dreadful devices of three strange enemies from a tropical country.

Pathe Review presents an absorbing novelty called "From Nothing To"—in which distinct forms are evolved out of writhing chaotic masses. The American Indian Series shows how the Alaskan and other Northern Indians fought the sea devils.

Universal Reports Gro wing Popularity of 2-Reel Dramas

A strong tendency on the part of exhibitors to increase the use of short film dramas, such as two-reel westerns, detective stories and short reel dramatic series pictures, is reported by the Universal sales department, which makes a specialty of short subjects product.

This tendency is particularly noticeable in the case of houses using a double-feature program. It is explained that under present day production methods, many features run more than five reels in length and that oft-times a double feature bill is entirely too long.

The remedy which many exhibitors have begun to adopt, is to use the extra-length feature and supplement it with a two-reel drama, instead of with a five-reel feature. Properly selected, these two-reelers are packed with punch and action and nicely balance the program.

As an instance of this growing popularity of short reel subjects, Universal has given out data concerning the bookings of short reel dramas by theatre owners in the metropolitan district. At the present time, Universal is releasing four series of two-reel dramas. One is a series adapted from Jack London's "Fish Patrol" stories, and which is called "Tales of the Fish Patrol." Jack Mulhall is starred, supported by Louise Lorraine.

Another is "The Further Exploits of Yorke Norroy," a series adapted from original stories by George Bronson's Howard, creator of the original "Yorke Norroy" diplomatic detective stories which gained great popularity when published in magazine form and then as Universal two-reelers several years ago. Roy Stewart is the star of the present series.

Universal also is releasing a series of two-reel Harry Carey western dramas of great popularity, and a two-reel series called "Tales of the Old West," also starring Roy Stewart.

Strand of Madison Arranges Unique Tie-up on Coue Film

An unusually forceful tie-up was arranged between the Wisconsin State Journal of Madison and the Strand Theatre of that city on the Educational Special, "The Message of Emile Coue." In accordance with the plan, free showings were given at the Strand on Monday and Tuesday mornings for the benefit of the poor and afflicted and a great amount of space given to the picture in the State Journal, including a three-column layout in the center of the first page immediately under the big cross page news head in the Sunday paper with a story outlining the details.

That this tie-up proved successful is shown by telegram from the Strand manager, A. P. Desermeaux, to President E. W. Hammons of Educational, reading in part as follows: Just closed a successful three days' engagement of Emile Coue. Business on Monday and Tuesday increased from 50 to 75 per cent. over our average. It may interest you to know that this picture drew hundreds of people into the theatre who had not attended a show in years—and any number of people who had never seen a movie.

Experiments by university men were conducted in an endeavor to ascertain the psychological effect of the picture on the normal and on the afflicted mind, and the results of these investigations, printed in the State Journal, led to several interesting news stories. Arrangements were made for ambulances to call for the more seriously afflicted and for special morning showings to be held for the benefit of those who were unable to attend a crowded theatre. Arrangements were also made with the local traction company, and street car tickets were provided those who were unable to make the trip comfortably otherwise.

Special performances for the sick are being given in other parts of the country, as for instance in Baltimore by the Century.

Special Laboratory

In reply to the many queries as to how the unusual and artistic effects shown in Pathe Reviews are secured, Pathe reports that they have been brought about through the establishment of an experimental laboratory. One feature of this work has been the exploration of the close-up field in presenting clear detail of fine art and scientific subjects. This has been done with apparatus familiar to scientists but little known in the commercial studios. Scientific institutions such as the Metropolitan Museum and Museum of Natural History have helped materially in this work.

Century to Remake "Grandma's Girl"

"Grandma's Girl," the Baby Peggy Century Comedy which was left unfinished by the departure of her former director, Goulding, and which afterward was destroyed almost entirely by fire, will be remade entirely. The entire story has been re-written by Sig Neufeld, under the direction of Julius Stern, who was especially pleased with Baby Peggy's part in it.

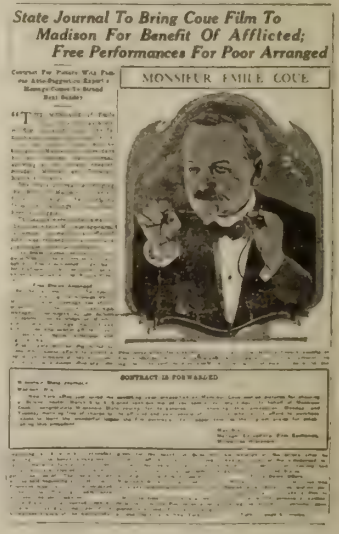
Baby Peggy will probably continue to be directed by Harry Edwards. His excellent work in her present production (tentative title, "The Orphan"), seems in the opinion of the Stern brothers to warrant it.

Lillian Worth will play an important part in Baby Peggy's current production "The Orphan."

Einstein Film Gets Heavy Bookings

As evidence of the interest being manifested in the popular film version of the Einstein Theory of Relativity, Premier Productions, handling this picture, report that it has been booked by Harold Franklin, acting for Famous Players, over the entire Southern Enterprise circuit and for the McVickers Theatre in Chicago. This picture has also been booked for over 100 days for the Loew circuit in New York.

President Fadman of Premier reports the sale of territory for New England to the Franklin Film Co. of Boston. This film is offered in four reels for colleges and schools and two reels for theatres.



State Journal To Bring Coue Film To Madison For Benefit Of Afflicted; Free Performances For Poor Arranged

MONSIEUR EMILE COUE

CONTRACT IS FORWARDED

A. P. Desermeaux, manager of Strand in Milwaukee, arranged tie-up with Wisconsin State Journal on Educational's "Message of Emile Coue," resulting in above story in Sunday edition on front page in centre.

City who have been projecting pictures ten to twelve years. They knew very little when they started, but did have some energy. They know VERY little more now (strange, but true), and have lost almost all of their energy. I would not recommend them for a nickelodion, if its boss was an enemy of mine. Certainly in the projection room of a high class theatre they would be like clumsy bulls in a room full of china.

Dufficult to Solve

I know nothing more difficult of solution that the question you have propounded. So many equations enter. For one thing, if you try to force an exhibitor to take a man he does not want, merely because he is the oldest man in point of service in that field, the probability is that there will be trouble, and very little satisfaction for any one concerned.

I have always held that the exhibitor should and must have the privilege of employing whom he will, provided he be a loyal member of the union. The only time the union has the legitimate right to interfere in this is when there is evidence or suspicion of collusion as between the exhibitor and projectionist in the matter of wages or working condtions.

Now maybe I'm wrong in all this. Is so, I would like to have some of you set me right. Any union able to help 282 in this matter certainly should do so. I will welcome letters from those who can offer any idea or ideas of value in the matter, be they projectionist or exhibitor. Local 282 will please understand that in what I have said I merely have tried to set some angles of the matter before her as I see them. I am her friend, and if there is any way in which such a list can be put into force, with justice to all concerned, none will welcome that bit of information more than myself.

Oil Well Gaskets

Harry L. Denton, projectionist, Regent Theatre, Saginaw, Michigan, writes concerning a matter pertaining to motor generator fluctuating power consumption, and then says:

Have noted several comments in our department concerning gaskets for Powers projector oil well covers.

I have for several years been using a gasket made from heavy tinfoil, or sheet lead. Such gaskets I find to hold the oil perfectly also if handled intelligently they may be used over and over again. The metal I use is about 1-64th of an inch thick.

Where Can We Get Them?

Man dear, I could bite you! All very nice, but where can we get such metal? Is it the sort that forms the lining of tea caddies? That is the only kind I can think of which seems to fit your description.

Frankly, with all due respect to the Powers Company, I do not and never did think so much of that shellac joint stunt. Also (whisper) I have a sneaking idea that the company is coming to that way of thinking itself, and that it will be a thing of the past some of these days before very long.

The paper gaskets described in this department some while ago were submitted to the Powers Company for test. Have just received their report. Here it is:

We have experimented with the paper gaskets you forwarded to us a while back. Found the screws holding cover to casing not heavy enough to compress the gaskets sufficiently to prevent the oil leaking out.

And that is that!

Sheet Metal Better

Anyhow the sheet metal stunt sounds better, I think, provided metal of right thickness is available.

One should be able to seat such a gasket by tightening up a bit on the screws, tapping lightly all around the edge of the cover, using the end of the handle of a light hammer, and then tightening the screws again. This process should, I think, be repeated three or four times when installing a new gasket. The same process could be used, I think, with a paper gasket such as was described.

It is a job calling for the exercise of good judgment and common sense. If rightly done I have no doubt whatever but that either the metal or paper gasket can be made to work perfectly.

If I were doing it I would shellac the gasket to the cover, and cover its other side with a thin coating of paraffine. This would insure the gasket adhering to the cover when same is removed, and "letting go" of the casing without tearing.

Projector manufacturers are of necessity very careful about approving stunts of this sort, or innovations of any kind, unless it be something just about absolutely fool proof. This is because not every one of the profession is as capable as YOU, kind reader.

It might surprise you to know that there are some very square squareheads in the profession, who cannot be depended upon to handle or use anything more complicated than a lead pencil as it should be handled, and some of them sharpen a lead pencil so that it looks like a cross eyed grasshopper on a windy day, if you know what I mean.

Some Squawk

Such men, instead of gently setting up the screws and tapping the cover down to a seat when installing a new gasket, would grab a ten or twelve inch screwdriver and try to make those little screws yank the cover down to an oil tight joint. If by any chance they got away with it, well and good. But if a screw broke or, worse yet, stripped the threads in the casing, ye gods and small sized fishes, WHAT a squawk Mr. S.O.L.I.D. Ivorytop puts up, blaming the projector for what is HIS OWN FAULT.

Well, anyhow, YOU, kindly reader, are of course not in that class. YOU work intelligently, so go ahead and install your gasket. If it don't work there is always the shellac to fall back on.

It has just occurred to me that when installing a gasket you must never allow it to extend beyond inner edge of cover edge. Trim carefully to fit. Paper or metal extending into the oil well might disintegrate, and the particles cause serious injury to the delicately fitted parts.

In matters of this sort the hit-or-miss, "Aw-that's-good-enough" policy WON'T do. You are dealing with parts fitted as closely as one ten thousandth (1/10,000) of an inch, therefore unless you wish to take a chance of making much more trouble than you cure you had better be reasonably careful.

Anyhow, if you do get into trouble DON'T blame the projector—blame YOURSELF. The projector is all right, or was until you got hold of it. Remember that!

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Ave. New York City, or 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Something Loose

W. A. Jardine, Port Orchard, Washington, says:

Am running a small picture show in this town. Have three Powers 6-A projectors. Most of the time I do the projecting myself.

Have the Richardson handbook (Blue Book of Projection), which I prize very highly.

Have a problem which I have been unable to figure out. The rotating shutter of one projector has secured my goat and tied it to a tree. I set it and for about a half reel everything is perfectly lovely, then streaks begin to show and keep getting worse until I set it again.

Shutter blade does not slip in collar, nor does collar slip on shaft. Have tried two or three different shutters, with same result. The mechanism apparently is in good condition and runs smooth. Any suggestions will be appreciated.

Trouble Not in Shutter

If two or three different shutters show the same fault, then it is evident the trouble is not in the shutter itself. Something is loose and slips.

Turn to page 636 of the Bluebook. In figure 237 you will note shaft 681, which carries gear 680. This gear is pinned on the shaft. Possibly the pin has come out, or has in some way been sheared off.

The latter is not at all likely, though all things in mechanics are possible. This would allow the gear to rotate on its shaft and thus throw the shutter out of time with the intermittent. Also examine the gear on opposite end of same shaft and on the shutter shaft itself.

You may discover the seat of slippage by holding the flywheel stationary and rotating the shutter a bit, using force if necessary, first having made a scratch mark on end of each shaft and gear hub.

Under the conditions, however, I have a grave suspicion that gear 680, figure 237 of Bluebook, is the party to be placed in jail. I shall send your letter to the Nicholas Power Company, with request that they make any further suggestion which may seem necessary.

Measuring Film

A projectionist in Pennsylvania, who for some mysterious reason requests that his name and location be kept a dar-r-r-rk secret, asks:

Can you tell me what the diameter of a roll of film is which contains 600 feet? I am asking to settle a dispute.

My dear sir, how in heck do you imagine I can answer such a question at all unless I know the diameter of the central hole if any. Assuming that the film be wound on a reel with a 1¾ inch diameter hub, a roll 7⅞ inches in dismater would contain 600 feet.

Figures Not Exact

You must understand, however, that such figures are NOT exact, but approximate only. This is because of the slight possible variation in film thickness and variation in tightness of winding. The latter may affect results very much. The following figures are approximately correct. Diameter 3⅝, length 100 feet; diameter 3 13-16, length 200 feet. 5¾, 6 9-16, 7¼, 7⅞, 8½, 9 1-16 and 10 inches represent respectively 300, 400, 500, 600, 700, 800, 900 and 1,000 feet of film.

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Why a Uniform Doubles an Usher's Usefulness

"HOW did you come to put on all the dog, Bill?" asked the regular patron as he passed out after the show.

"Which?" countered the exhibitor.

"I mean what induced you to put all the ushers in uniform?" explained the R. P.

"Oh, that," and Bill gave a reminiscent smile that somehow seemed to have a twinge of sadness around its corners.

"I had a jolt handed out to me a short time ago that set me to thinking and, what's more, stirred me up to a little action."

"It must have been some jolt all right to start you thinking," said the regular patron, "but, gee wiz, how much T. N. T. did they shoot off to you to make you move?"

It Was No Joke

"It's all right for you to stand there grinning over my past tribulations," said the exhibitor, "but I wish you had been in my shoes when they caught up with me."

"Sounds interesting," said the regular patron—"here's a smoke; let's go into the office where you can unwind your three-reeler."

The exhibitor examined the brand on the proffered weed, found it satisfactory, and the pair adjourned to the business office of the theatre.

"It was this way," explained the exhibitor as he started a forced draught from the donated smoke and leaned back comfortably. "A while ago, I got stuck over night in Metropolisville and made up my mind that I might as well take in a show or two and see how houses, similar in size to mine, were panning out.

Trying to Pick an Usher

"So I went into the Bull's Eye. I had never been there before and, as vacant seats did not seem to be very plentiful, I thought I would tackle an usher. But the deuce of the thing was to pick out the ushers from the audience. I noticed one young woman, minus a hat, who did not seem to be particularly interested in what was happening on the screen and who was standing in the rear aisle, so I braced her for guidance.

"Jerusalem, but I got it hot right off the bat. How the mischief was I to know that she paid for her ticket the same as I and had parked her hat on one seat, her coat on another and was waiting for a late arriving girl friend to appear on the scene?

"By the time I got through apologizing, I felt so blamed conspicuous that I mentally entered the price of my ticket in red ink and made my way to an opposition house across the street."

"Did things go better there?" asked the regular patron.

"Not so that you would notice it," said the exhibitor with a sigh. "The only difference was that, having decided to lay off on trying to pick an usher from the fair sex, I devoted my attention to the men.

Three Futile Attempts

"My first three attempts to pick ushers from among those in the back of the house whose domes were uncovered resulted in the following miscellaneous haul:

"One man who was getting a drink for his wife from an automatic cup vender, one hurried individual who had just recalled a busted engagement and wanted to use the house telephone to square it, a film salesman who had left his outer raiment in the box office and was on his way to reclaim it, and last, but not least, the long sought usher who had been standing right next to me all the while, but was so deeply interested in a lady friend, seated nearby, that he never knew I was on earth until I braced him."

"You sure made some record," laughed the regular patron.

"That's what I figured out," said the exhibitor, "and it suddenly dawned on me that if I—who make my living by running a picture house—could not spot non-uniformed ushers in another man's theatre, there was no reason on earth to suppose that casual patrons would have any better luck in mine."

"Well, there is something to that," admitted the regular patron.

More to It Than That

"There is a lot more than that to it," said the exhibitor. "It was not only the casual patrons of my own house who were perpetually milling around and losing a lot of the evening because they were not personally acquainted with my staff, but the chances were that, being inconscpicuous, the ushers themselves were probably taking advantage of the fact to spend more of their time on sociability with their acquaintances than steering the ticket buyers to a place where they could see the picture and not be under each other's feet.

"That's why the staff is now uniformed. And ever since those uniforms have been worn, I have noticed considerably less confusion in the back aisles, also that the ushers stand out so from the audience that they have lost about ninety-nine per cent of the feeling of security when they start to loaf on the job."

LADIES' REST ROOM, FOX THEATRE, AURORA, ILL.
Wicker furniture, stencilled walls and a coved ceiling combine to make this a charming portion of the house

Three Pleasing Examples of Picture Theatre Rest Rooms

THE accompanying illustrations show widely different methods of treatment of picture theatre rest rooms, but each is artistic and harmonious.

The ladies' rest room of the Twin Capitol Theatre, of Union Hill, N. J., shows silken draped walls and ceiling, and a central crystal chandelier, giving an intimate boudoir effect. The floor covering is of velvet carpet. The arm, side chairs and settee are gilt trimmed and upholstered in figured velour. The chaise longue, covered in figured silk, differs sufficiently from the rest of the suite to furnish a pleasing contrast.

The men's smoking room of the same house is floored with dark tiling and the walls are wainscoted and leather covered, the latter forming an artistic background to the etchings with which the room is hung. A massive brick fireplace, whose mantel almost reaches the beamed ceiling, gives a general air of coziness. The semi-circular arm-chairs are massive in design and luxuriously upholstered in tufted leather.

Club-like Atmosphere

Hand-wrought metal candelabra electroliers, suspended from the ceiling, and the floor reading lamps with metal standards,

LADIES' REST ROOM AND MEN'S SMOKING ROOM, TWIN CAPITOL THEATRE, UNION HILL, N. J.
In the former, the boudoir effect has been successfully achieved. In the latter, the masculine, club-like atmosphere prevails.

Totally different and yet with an individual charm of its own, is the ladies' rest room of the Fox Theatre, of Aurora, Illinois.

Its floor is covered with a velvet carpet, harmonizing with the stenciled walls. The indirect lighting fixtures of ornamental alabaster are hung from the center of the coved ceiling, from which the light is reflected downward.

The furnishing is of wicker, with broad arms and upholstered in figured creton with tufted backs.

The table, floor lamp and side chairs harmonize with the wicker furnishings and the room presents the appearance and produces the impression of a well furnished porch of a handsome country home.

Paramount Condensers Merit Win Recognition

The Paramount Lens Corporation, manufacturers of Paramount guaranteed condensers, claims that the use of its products will reduce condenser breakage, transfer to the screen more light from the arc, give better definition and eliminate spherical and chromatic aberration.

The factories in which the Paramount condensers are produced are among the largest in France and the services of the best French opticians are at the disposal of the manufacturers.

Only selected flint glass is used and the condensers are specially annealed to insure toughness and minimize cracking and they are ground by experts to further insure toughness and, to withstand great surface heat, they are pitch polished.

The Paramount condensers are carried in stock in all usual sizes from one and one-half to fourteen inches diameter and three to forty inches focus. They are made to fit the usual mounts on all projectors and can be installed by any projectionist easily and quickly.

The officers of the Paramount Lens Corporation are Harry Payton, president; Marius H. Tromba, secretary and treasurer. The new and enlarged offices are at 41 Union Squire, New York City. This change of address was due to the tremendous increase of business, and to the quick recognition by users of the value of the Paramount condensers.

SIMPLEX REASONING

there is a good reason why the Simplex in the face of the keenest competition quickly moved ahead to a position of acknowledged leadership in the industry.

there is a reason too, why countless Simplex users repeatedly assure us that they would not part with their Simplex for any consideration.

there is a reason why we have not yet heard of a completely worn-out Simplex.

and the reason for all of this can be expressed in a single word

"Q-U-A-L-I-T-Y"

without Simplex quality it would not be the Simplex, for we believe with the man who says that—

Vol. 61, No. 6 APRIL 7, 1923 PRICE 25 CENTS

"The greatest audience picture we ever saw!"

New York's foremost screen critic—

Don Allen

in the New York Evening World

Goldwyn's production of Rupert Hughes's own screen adaptation of his novel "Souls for Sale," as shown for the first time semi-publicly at the Capitol Theatre this morning, is, in our estimation, the greatest audience picture we ever saw. And by that we mean that, from our point of view, "Souls for Sale" has every element in it that will attract and hold an audience.

At the present time we know of no film subject that could be one-eighth as interesting as films themselves. Every one, or practically every one, talks of Hollywood at least once every day, and in "Souls for Sale" Hollywood is made to stick out its tongue, open wide its maw and say "Ah," while the audience feels the Hollywood pulse and takes its temperature.

Evidently Rupert Hughes, an impetuous sort of chap, grew rather weary of hearing his cherished locality referred to as though it was prancing about on cloven hoofs and chewing Roman candles and set himself out to set Hollywood right in the eyes of the doubting ones. And whether Hollywood life and happenings as depicted in "Souls for Sale" are the life and happenings of the real Hollywood is a secondary consideration, for Major Hughes has given the screen a masterpiece and is unfolding a story as gripping and as real, as logical and as thrilling, as any film we have seen.

.. .. "Souls for Sale" probably shows more real stars than any other film on record save the news reel showing the annual meeting of the Screen Actors' Guild at a barbecue.

The cast? See "Who's Who in Hollywood;" and even then you'll miss a few who appear.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN ROBIN HOOD.—Borrow all the money you can get hold of, then book this film. It's the sensation of the season. Gets the crowds. Brings them back the second time. Makes them talk. Gets you new faces you never knew were in town. Don't be afraid of this picture. I think it's the greatest of its kind on the market today. Paid the most money I ever paid for a picture. Advertised it the biggest and, Boys, I got a nice bank account left after the showing.

Don't pass up this bet for any amount of rental asked. "Robin Hood" is good for any theatre for at least a week's run at advanced prices. Never had so many compliments on a production. Had patrons and a lot of them from surrounding towns. Some came as far as thirty-five miles and they went away feeling they had seen a rare treat.—H. E. SWAN, Empress theatre, Kearney, Neb.

Five Reels of Roars!

From The Exhibitor Playing To Capacity

"'The Shriek of Araby' is a picture which urges an exhibitor to express his genuine appreciation," said H. B. Breckwedel, of the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, in the fourth week of the run of this Sennett comedy.

"And this expression is not influenced simply by the box-office success of 'The Shriek.' That is, of course very gratifying, but it also is very gratifying to sit in my office and listen to shrieking audiences acclaiming their approval of a picture as they are doing in the case of 'The Shriek of Araby.' It would be superfluous to wish 'The Shriek' the same success throughout the country. That is already assured."

Los Angeles Critics Praise "The Shriek"

"Ben Turpin has never done anything funnier,"—Express. "It is a whole crowd of shrieks. If you want to laugh and forget your troubles, see this 'Shriek.'"—Times. "It is a shriek of mirth."—Examiner. "Ben Turpin's picture is all the title implies. It is a shriek."—Herald.

The Editor's Views

The Chinese Wall City—Grand Old Vitagraph—A Few Small Town Thoughts

"GO West," three different picture men told us during the week just past. "Look over Los Angeles. It is Los Angeles that makes or breaks the picture business—and a lot of people can't figure out this year whether it is going to be 'make' or 'break.' "

Various reasons are put forth for the suggested trip to Los Angeles.

Said one: "It's all right to bewail the fact that production costs are rising—possibly without justification and probably beyond reason.

"But if you remained in Los Angeles long enough to be caught with the fever you'd be just as emphatic as anyone there in your belief that mounting costs are inevitable. 'There's no other way to make the big pictures the market demands,' is the attitude. Mayhap, fresh from New York, you would get a different perspective."

Martin Quigley has likened Los Angeles to a colony surrounded by a Great Chinese Wall—and from within that impregnable wall comes forth the entertainment of the American masses.

Others apply to a different phase of the situation a comparison that pictures Los Angeles a seething volcano—with the lid in place but no weights atop the lid.

It's all very interesting. And very serious. And vital.

Welcome home—J. Stuart Blackton. Glad to see you; hope you'll stick around a while!

"ALBERT E. SMITH and J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company," sounds very much like the old days and very promising to one who remembers such showmanship as brought forth "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the psychological moment.

After five years of independent producing in the East, in California, and two years in England, J. Stuart Blackton has returned to his former post of Vice-President of the Vitagraph Company.

It is a business event of importance, but of even greater appeal from the sentimental side.

In announcing his return, Mr. Blackton aptly and very delightfully terms Vitagraph "the training school, the Alma Mater of hundreds of famous people in all walks of motion picture life."

He adds:

"Vitagraph has a great and an honorable past. I believe it has a still greater and more successful future in store for it, and I am happy and proud to be 'back home' again."

We're glad to have you, Commodore.

Now is the season for the interviews: "We are not holding our specials back till next year." But watch the announcements.

AS soon as the Easter mark has been turned we approach the threshold of the season when magnets urge the exhibitors to be sure to keep their theatres open during the Summer, and urge each other to release their best pictures and hold nothing back for Fall.

But most of the talk is intended for "the other fellow."

However—this much has happened in the year that has passed. While smaller exhibitors are not willing to admit that they are entertaining Old Man Prosperity, there at least is no feeling akin to the dull, dread, apathy with which we approached last Summer.

And the smaller exhibitor, who is just catching up with the wealth of corking attractions released in the past six months, has every reason in the world for making definite plans to "fight it through" this Summer.

A year ago product was woefully weak, and the combination with natural conditions not of the best, produced an outlook far from cheerful.

This year the smaller house, the only one that seriously considers a Summer shutdown, can look forward to being in line for some of the best pictures that the screen has ever offered.

And, Summer or Winter, good year or dull year, the quality of the product to be offered the public is the deciding factor in any film discussion.

What a wonderful quality battle next September will bring. Los Angeles is making the bullets, and, boy, there'll be some shooting!

THEY gave a dinner the other night at the Ritz-Carlton to Benny Schulberg.

Film dinners are commonly events without reason and apparently just continuing to exist because "it's the usual thing."

But if dinners mean anything as tributes we are glad to have been able to join our own humble presence in a tribute to Benny Schulberg. He deserves it for what he has attained and he deserves it more for the regular fellowship and good friends he has been able to retain while also attaining.

That's a test that few men can survive, and particularly fewer film men.

The Benny Schulberg who has in one year achieved the miracle of a definite, secure and high position in the production world is the Benny Schulberg, as a man, who ten years ago held forth at the Famous Players studio in West Twenty-sixth Street and managed to square his shoulders to hold all the following titles and a few more:

"Scenario Editor, Advertising Manager, Publicity Manager, Casting Director, Personal Representative of Adolph Zukor, etc., etc."

Just as a matter of record: The odds are still very strong that New York will have censorship for another year.

THERE are other things an exchange manager can do besides sell film. And those things, if accomplished in the proper way, eventually mean the selling of more film and at better prices.

This thought comes to mind as we look over a form letter being sent out by C. M. Hill, Famous Players-Lasky manager for Portland, Oregon. The letter, we are told, has already brought tangible results. Here it is:

THINK

Dear Sir:—

The other day I stood across the street from a certain theatre. Here is what I saw.

A dirty dilapidated house badly in need of paint. Dirty posters that had been used several times. Next to the theatre was a big sign with the word "THINK," and I thought—the picture shown by that house must be like the posters—old worn out prints in bad condition. If the outside of the house is dirty, the inside must be dirty. There is no desire on my part to spend my money to find out if this is true, when a gallon of white paint would have made a neat, attractive and inviting front. Nice clean posters would have created a desire on my part to see the show. I lost an evening's entertainment. The exhibitor lost the price of admission. How many other admissions are lost by this neglect?

THINK

ARTHUR HANCOCK, of the Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana, writes us:

"Why don't you feel out the sentiment on the war tax elimination on twenty-five cent admissions? Something will have to be done soon or there will be no small town theatres to run the producer's film when it gets old.

"Frankly, if what the boys tell me is right (both salesmen and showmen), there is no money being made in the rural towns, that is, money that justifies a man's efforts.

"It is more serious than either the press or the exchange men realize and the elimination of the admission tax, if it could be accomplished, would help a lot."

We tried to sound out the sentiment some few months ago, Brother Hancock.

And apparently there is plenty of sentiment but blamed little desire for action.

Congressman MacGregor, of New York, introduced a bill to do away with the admission tax. There was probably little hope for the bill anyway, for the Republican leaders had decided to sidetrack all revenue discussion until next year. But, at any rate, the cause was not helped by the fact that only two exhibitors in the entire country cared sufficiently to write letters to Washington concerning the bill.

New Advertising and Publicity Policy of First National Is Put Into Effect

STARTING with the issue of April 7, First National will inaugurate a campaign in the Saturday Evening Post that is unique in motion picture advertising, and marks an important step in a new advertising, publicity and exploitation policy that has been adopted by the executive committee of this company.

The outstanding features of the new policy are, the curtailment of the force of traveling exploitation men, and the material increase of service to exhibitors through national advertising and publicity of the type represented in the Post campaign. To this end the advertising and publicity staffs at the home office have been augmented.

Field exploitation has not been abandoned by First National. It will be continued wherever justified by results, but a close study of conditions over a period of months led to the conviction that much of the money expended on exploitation could be spent in other ways to better advantage. It has been found that most of the large First National theatres are little benefited by exploitation men, and that a more satisfactory service can be furnished small exhibitors through other channels.

Serve All Exhibitors All the Time

An exploitation man can be in only one place at a time. First National plans to serve all its exhibitors all the time. The Saturday Evening Post advertisements to appear every other week and to be directly tied up with local theatres will play a big part in the improved service. First National will have what is virtually an illustrated news page in the greatest advertising medium in the country with readers estimated at ten million weekly.

In formulating the Post campaign one dominating necessity was given first consideration. The advertisements must sell First National pictures to the public in a way that will bring direct returns to the exhibitor's box office. All previous national advertising campaigns were thoroughly analyzed with a view to revealing their good points and their weaknesses. It appeared that the prevailing shortcoming had been a failure to tie up the pictures advertised with local showings. This defect had to be overcome.

That the remedy could not be found in single pages of display advertising became evident because of definite limitations imposed by layouts of this character. In dealing with but one picture the greatest benefit from the advertisement could be reaped only by exhibitors who happened to be playing that particular production near the date of the advertisement's appearance.

Weakness of Display Advertising

If, for example, Richard Barthelmess in "The Bright Shawl" happened to be the subject chosen for national advertising on April 7 and an exhibitor had booked the picture for the middle of May, the value of the Post page would have decreased in proportion to the time elapsed. Thus it was figured that unless a series of displays were run on each production the advertising to the exhibitor playing a month or more behind national release date must be seriously minimized.

Then there was another point to be considered in opposition to the page displays. At best they could be expected to do little more than plant the names of a star and a picture in the minds of readers. To this degree they were valuable, but First National aimed to go further in creating personal interest in its product such as is obtainable only through a more intimate style of approach.

Opposed to the drawbacks of one big smash on a single picture there appeared the advantages of a cumulative campaign, which week by week would bring the reader close to the First National stars and productions, not permitting any picture to be forgotten until the local exhibitor had played it. All the current product must be advertised to the public all the time in order to give the exhibitor 100 per cent. value.

Something Different Needed

Obviously, this end could not be attained through conventional methods. But what was the alternative? In answer to this question First National asked another. What would any company estimate as the worth of a solid page of publicity in the Post? The answer is that there is no more valuable publicity medium anywhere.

Following this conclusion it was decided to publish a fortnightly illustrated news page, brightly written in fan style, so that it would be read because of its news and human interest, as are the pages of the fan magazines.

Consider the cumulative effect. A picture is heralded in advance, kept before the public as production progresses, emphasized on national release date and carried on for as many weeks after as conditions warrant.

Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby," James Young's first independent production, "Wandering Daughters"; Frank Borzage's "Sands of Time," Gertrude Atherton's "Black Oxen" and Booth Tarkington's "The Adventures of Penrod," are a few of the subjects included in text and illustration on the initial page. By the time these pictures are released, the curiosity of millions will have been aroused, their interest attracted and a large patronage assured.

Post Page in One-Sheets

The work does not end with the Post, however. Each page will be reproduced as a one-sheet for display in the theatre lobby, so that patrons will definitely associate the house with the Post advertising. These one-sheets will be supplied free to exhibitors.

This unique campaign will be augmented from time to time by display advertisements on individual pictures. But the news advertising will be continuous—a feature of the Saturday Evening Post, a bulletin in the theatre lobby, a consistent business builder for every house that runs First National pictures.

Loew Goes to Europe

Trip Made in Interest of Distribution for Metro Pictures

Arthur Loew, foreign manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, sailed Tuesday on the Aquitania for an eight weeks' tour of the principal European countries, in the interests of the foreign distribution of Metro pictures. Accompanied by Mrs. Loew, he will visit England, France, Italy, Spain, Sweden and as many other countries as his time will allow.

The purpose which occasioned Mr. Loew's departure is the making of arrangements to release Metro photoplays in the principal continental countries. He will endeavor to conclude pending negotiations for the presentation of the company's releases, by arranging for their distribution through the leading European mediums.

Exports Increasing Fast

Shipments of Raw Stock, Negative and Positive Film Run High

Exports of moving picture films are increasing steadily, according to figures which have just been compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. During the month of January these figures show, our exports included, 4,092,590 linear feet of raw stock, valued at $101,832; 462,673 feet of negative film, valued at $48,398, and 11,271,151 feet of positive film, with a value of $460,809.

More than a third of the raw stock exported was shipped to England, imports of that country totaling 1,543,723 feet, valued at $37,194; the next best market being Japan, with imports of 810,170 feet, valued at $25,119. England was also the largest purchaser of negative film, taking 315,412 feet, valued at $29,642; Italy being second with 15,223 feet, valued at $7,740.

For the first time exports of positive film to any one country exceeded the 2,000,000-foot mark, Canada's imports during January totaling 2,125,892 feet, with a value of $97,094. Australia was a close second with 1,803,085 feet, valued at $72,895, and England was the third largest market with 1,040,183 feet, with a value of $44,608.

Sails for Australia

Morgan Will Make Survey of First National Exchanges

William J. Morgan, of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., leaves New York Saturday for Vancouver, B. C., from where he will sail for Australia on Friday, March 30, on the Niagara.

It is expected that Mr. Morgan will be gone between three and four months making a survey of the First National exchanges in the Antipodes, located in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane, Australia, and Auckland, New Zealand.

It is reported that business is booming in Australia, placing the First National sales in that country second only to England, with Scandinavia third.

Signs with Cosmopolitan

Bert Lytell has signed a one-year contract to appear in Cosmopolitan Productions. Lytell will make four pictures during the coming year under the Cosmopolitan banner. The first has not yet been decided upon. Goldwyn now is distributing all Cosmopolitan pictures and plans a strong campaign on them.

Fox Announces Plans for the Building of $2,000,000 Studio

A MAMMOTH new studio which will surpass in size, modernity and utility any motion picture producing plant now in existence will be erected by Fox Film Corporation in Los Angeles in the near future. This statement, made this week by the Fox company, confirms the news of the project which was published exclusively by Moving Picture World last week.

This studio will be the home of all William Fox production activities on the West Coast. W. R. Sheehan, vice-president, stated that $2,000,000 had been set aside as a building fund by the corporation and that construction will be started this summer. Several sites, each consisting of upwards of 200 acres, are under consideration.

Spanish architecture will prevail in the new building. Construction engineers and architects are now drawing up plans for the new plant, which will have the benefit of all present improvements in studio construction and will embody as well many features not existing in any studios now built, it is stated. Prominent among these will be a system by which fire hazard will be reduced to a minimum.

The establishment will include a complete laboratory, equipped with all up-to-date machinery for the development and handling of negative and for the production of positive prints in great quantity. It will include an experimental department in which research work will be conducted for the improvement of photography, printing, toning and perfection of machines used in the various processes.

Under the care of dress and style experts, there will be an elaborate costume department. A millinery department is one of the novelties planned. A complete suite of baths, dressing rooms, ladies' hair dressing parlors and an emergency hospital are included.

There will be a research department, embracing a large reference library. A spacious restaurant will be served by a sanitary kitchen. Every provision will be made which will look to the players' comfort. Dressing rooms for the important actresses will be built en suite, with spacious sitting rooms and separate rooms for maids.

The building which will house the headquarters of the actors, as well as the scenario staff, will present many innovations. Here, too, will be spacious dressing rooms furnished for every comfort. Each room will have a private bath and in addition there will be a large plunge with heated water and hot and cold shower baths. A fully equipped gymnasium, tennis court and hand ball court will be conveniently situated nearby.

Regarding the disposition of the present William Fox studios of fourteen acres on Western avenue and Sunset boulevard, it was announced that owing to the increase in the value of this property this tract of land would be turned to other purposes or sold.

Head Camera Department

Curtis and Glennon Named to Succeed Alvin Wyckoff

Edward S. Curtis and Bert Glennon have been named by Cecil B. De Mille, Paramount producer and director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to head his camera department, succeeding Alvin Wyckoff, recently resigned. This announcement by Mr. De Mille marks the close of competition for one of the most coveted jobs in motion picture photography, in which many of the leading cameramen of America and Europe had enlisted. The combined artistic qualities of Curtis and Glennon are expected to make the photography of Mr. De Mille's forthcoming production of "The Ten Commandments" an outstanding feature.

New Lichtman Exchange

Al Lichtman has opened a new exchange in Albany, N. Y., at 676 Broadway. This office will handle all of the Preferred Pictures released by the Al Lichtman Corporation, beginning with "Poor Men's Wives." The first four releases, "Rich Men's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero," will remain in the hands of the Bond Photoplay Corporation.

Takes Larger Offices

J. S. Grauman has announced the removal on April 1 of the Milwaukee exchange of the Al Lichtman Corporation and Celebrated Players from their present quarters at 406 Toy Building to 713 Wells street. Their new offices will be entirely modern and will comprise thirty-five hundred square feet of space. Celebrated is taking a ten-year lease on the premises, which have been built especially for them, so confident are they, says Mr. Grauman, in the Lichtman product.

Feminine Patronage Makes or Mars Success of Any Picture

THE hand that rocks the cradle tilts the box office, according to Thomas Saxe, of Milwaukee, secretary-treasurer of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises and First National franchise holder for Wisconsin. The Milwaukee theatre owner, who is spending two weeks in New York as a member of First National's Rotating Committee, is emphatic in his statement that as far as the week in and week out attendance is concerned, feminine patronage either makes or breaks a motion picture house today and that the really successful picture owner is going to book his attractions from the point of view of the women among his fans.

Mere man never before received such a resounding slap as he does from Mr. Saxe, who says: "It is the women and young girls who are supporting the theatres today. Get them in and your success is assured. The men follow as a matter of course. Consequently, the thing for the vigilant theatre-owner to do, as we are finding it in our experience, is to look at the booking of pictures from a woman's point of view.

"We have been noting quite a few points of interest in our theatres this last year. Business is considerably better than a year ago. So are the pictures. Patrons are commencing to weary of the costume pictures that had a vogue for a while. They want love stories, with heart interest. Above everything else they want a strong society drama with formal clothes and elaborate functions.

"The big productions are the ones that are getting the business. By that I do not necessarily mean the long ones. Six reels is long enough for any picture. Drawn beyond that length it is too long for the fans to follow and it doesn't give the small town theatre the chance for a proper turnover.

"An attractive prologue and ingenious presentation may help; but there has been a tendency to exaggerate their value. After all, it is the feature that counts."

Mr. Saxe, who is rounding out his eighteenth year in the business, is optimistic over future conditions. To demonstrate this belief he mentioned casually that despite the fact that there are five first-run houses in Milwaukee now, the Saxe Amusement Enterprises would open the finest and largest one of all on January 1. This will be the Wisconsin, a 3,300-seat house in a six-story building, at the corner of Grand and Sixth streets, Milwaukee. Among other features it will house, on the top floor, what Mr. Saxe declares is going to be the largest dance hall in the Northwest.

At the same time the Saxe Amusement Enterprises are demonstrating their confidence in future business by building a new 2,000-seat neighborhood house on the site of the present Modjeska. The company operates ten houses in Milwaukee, as well as houses in Green Bay, Oshkosh, Kenosha, Marinette, Waukesha and Janesille.

Thinks Original Screen Stories to Be Best Box Office Bets

THE announcement that the Palmer Photoplay Corporation promised to bring about a sweeping and beneficial change in the character of screen stories by its entry into film production has brought upon that organization blame as well as praise. According to Roy L. Manker, president of the Palmer institution, adverse criticism of his company's policy arises in part from lack of understanding of a step intended to benefit, and in no way to harm, the entire industry.

"We are making an experiment in which we feel that we deserve the support and encouragement of the entire motion picture industry, producers and exhibitors alike," declares Mr. Manker. "We have received whole-hearted expressions of encouragement and interest from many important sources in both branches in recognition of this fact. Not many producing organizations have the opportunity, the desire, the leisure and the capital, combined, to engage in experiments which may bring the experimenter out on the right side of the ledger, or which, on the other hand, may result in failure and severe financial loss. No one is to be blamed for wishing to avoid such a risk.

"There is nothing new or hazardous in filming stories written expressly for the screen. But producers who have filmed 'originals' in the past have pinned their advertising upon a star, a famous director, or some other name of undoubted box-office value. Our experiment is a test of the value of published works for screen use. Producers, exhibitors and public are paying untold thousands of dollars each year for that little item, and we wish to determine if this money is well spent. To make such a test conclusive we are filming a series of productions in which we pin all our advertising and publicity upon the unrecognized author and the unpublished story.

"The success or failure of our venture will speak for itself; there can be no false exploitation or concealment. As for our motives, I shall be quite frank. We want to bring the 'original story' to its own. We are confident that we are right in sponsoring it after four years of careful study devoted to this single aspect of film-making, and we think that we shall make money, instead of losing it, upon the venture.

"If we are wrong we alone will lose, and either way that our experiment turns out the industry will be the gainer by a bit of positive, constructive information concerning the value of stories written directly for the screen against that of published works. Meanwhile it is necessary to call the attention of the industry and the public to our move and its significance. In doing so, opinions we express may differ from those of others; but we feel that the individual or organization that resents the expression of constructive ideas is narrow, censorious and un-American.

"We emphatically do not condemn all published works as impossible screen material, nor do we question the sincerity of the many producers who are earnestly trying to make better and better pictures. We do question the general policy now in vogue, which too often ignores intrinsic merit in story conception and which pins its faith on the advertising value of published works, accepting the opinion of a magazine editor who is choosing his material, not for its screen value, but for its literary quality—widely differing standards.

"Is it not possible that too many producers are influenced by literary charm, which cannot be translated into the pictorial action of the screen? Do they not often overestimate the advertising value of a published story, and underestimate the bad, general effect on the 'movie habit' of the public, of a reaction caused by the failure of such a picture, or by the distortion necessary to adapt some literary works to the screen? We fully recognize the value of filming really adaptable published works, but we hold that the number available is too small to supply even one-tenth of the demand.

"In centuries of association those allied arts —stage drama and literature—touched each other only occasionally. Stage drama has taken less than five per cent of its material from published literature. Screen drama, by its nature, is even less suited to draw material from literature. We believe that until the screen has a literature of its own, with stories written by trained men and women who have kept in mind the peculiar motion picture "angle" from the inception of the idea to the completion of the play, there will never be a steady, dependable, consistent output of good photoplays.

"Producers are making, and will continue to make, screen masterpieces of an appeal far above that to be attained by any particular policy or method of producing, but unless the general standard is raised and made more uniform we believe that public interest in motion pictures will wane."

Ince Makes Special Print of "Civilization" for U. S. Archives

THOMAS H. INCE, whose special productions are released through First National, has sent a telegram to Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, praising his efforts to preserve motion pictures of great historical value and offering a special print of "Civilization" for the Government archives. Mr. Ince, in his telegram, says:

"Have just learned of your interest in Governmental preservation of screen productions that will visualize for posterity the life of the present era. I think this is one of the most commendable historical activities of years, as future generations will have the benefit of the most forceful medium of expression yet known. This will provide the one record that will portray truthfully the future life of a people in a generation gone. I am having a special print of my production, "Civilization," made for you for presentation to the Government agency that is to have formal charge of this historical picture archive. Also please be assured that this suggested movement has my fullest support."

Senator Walsh is quoted as having said in Washington that the Government is criminally neglecting its duty to future generations by making no effort to preserve motion pictures of great historical value. Several patriotic societies have started a movement to have motion picture preservation archives installed by the Government in Washington, and Senator Walsh is backing this plan.

Bills Affecting Industry Defeated

The national office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have been advised by First Vice-President Joseph Mogler of St. Louis, who is also president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri, that the Missouri legislature adjourned on Monday, March 26, and that all bills directed against the motion picture industry were defeated.

This work was done under the special direction of Mr. Mogler, assisted by prominent officials of the Western Missouri Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the active co-operation of all the theatre owners in the state.

In view of the many attacks being made on the motion picture industry in legislative bodies, this clean slate achievement of the Missouri Theatre Owners is one of which they should be justly proud.

Paden Convicted

Projectionists' President Found Guilty of Council Bluffs' Odor Bomb Episode

As Moving Picture World is going to press the news is received that Mayo W. Paden has been found guilty at a jury trial of a charge of conspiracy growing out of the throwing of foul-smelling chemicals on August 29, 1922, in the Liberty Theatre, Council Bluffs, Iowa. Paden is president of the Omaha union of projectionists. A. R. Krake and John F. Smith, of Omaha, also were indicted and will stand trial soon. Paden's counsel says he will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The throwing of the odor bombs followed the failure, on August 13, of exhibitors and projectionists to agree on a new wage contract for the ensuing year. The projectionists picketed the theatres until stopped by a court injunction about a month later. On August 29, Paden, Krake and Smith were arrested near the Liberty Theatre by a policeman who testified he took a full jar of a chemical mixture from them. An empty jar was found near the theatre.

Allen Advises Brevity

Says Industry Would Thrive Better on More Direct Publicity

Don Allen, motion picture editor of the Evening World, New York, spoke before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the weekly luncheon on Thursday.

Mr. Allen gave his idea that a good many of the boys write too much in order to please their bosses, knowing well that much of their output will never get into print. Mr. Allen said that the newspapers and the motion picture industry will get along a great deal better when the publicity men write honest-to-goodness stories and quit trying to catch the eye of their bosses.

Martin G. Quigley, editor of the Exhibitors Herald, was among the guests at the luncheon and spoke briefly of some of the things he had observed out in California.

J. L. Loughborough was the "barker" of the day.

Schulberg Offers $10,000 a Word for Picture Titles

SHORTLY after his arrival in New York last week, B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, after a conference with J. G. Bachmann, treasurer, announced that he was in the market for titles. The details of his statement should prove of interest not only to the general public but the trade as well.

He has set a price of $10,000 a word for appropriate titles, an offer which is believed to be the highest ever made for any known imaginative effort. If a two-word title is purchased, $20,000 will be paid. For a three-word title the rate per word will be given a cut to bring the total to $25,000. Schulberg explains that he is seeking alluring titles which when set forth in electric lights will create a desire for further information. He adds that this is not in any sense a contest but a bona fide market he is creating for the specific commodity.

The nation-wide search for titles grew out of a quest for word groupings that might prove as magnetic as "Rich Men's Wives," a title that has been declared to have a "one hundred per cent box office pulling power." Schulberg believes that the person who devised that title created a $25,000 piece of property. Attached to any picture it would add not less than that sum to its drawing power.

Preferred Pictures now owns the rights to a dozen or more plays, books and stories which in many cases require a change to better picture titles. It is for these stories that Schulberg hopes to find appropriate screen names as a result of this offer. As many as ten or twelve titles—possibly more—may be purchased. No fear is expressed that too many good titles will be submitted. The number of good picture titles not already used for books, plays or songs is pathetically few, Schulberg says, and whereas it seems easy to concoct a few words that will attract attention and arouse interest in the object they describe, writers seem to find it the most difficult of their literary tasks.

The title having become one of the greatest factors in the success of a picture, Schulberg believes its value cannot be overestimated.

Fox to Open Houses in 4 Big Cities; 5 Foreign Offices Added

WORD has just been received from Mr. Winfield R. Sheehan, who now is in Los Angeles, California, that the first William Fox Theatre in California will be opened about May 1. The new theatre is located in Oakland, and from all reports is one of the finest motion picture palaces on the Pacific Coast. The structure will have a seating capacity of approximately 3,000 persons, according to the announcement.

Plans are being made for special ceremonies in conjunction with the opening of the theatre, and it is announced a notable audience of prominent motion picture artists is expected for the premier performance in the new theatre.

The opening of the new Oakland Theatre follows close on the heels of the announcement that the William Fox Philadelphia Theatre will be opened to the public next Fall. The Philadelphia structure is now under construction and will have a seating capacity of approximately 3,700. This picture palace will be housed in an eighteen-story office building.

Plans are also under way for the construction of William Fox theatres in Chicago and Boston, sites for which already have been selected. The completion of these new theatres will bring the total of the Fox circuit of houses up to fifty theatres, it is announced.

Coincident with the announcement of the construction of the new theatres Mr. Sheehan also announces that William Fox is opening distribution offices this month in Cuba, Mexico, Holland, Czecho-Slovakia and Japan. With the opening of these branches, Fox films will be distributed directly to distributors in every country throughout the civilized world.

The construction of the new offices brings a total of Fox distributing branches to 117.

F. P.-L. Assigns Exploiteers

Paramount's Exploitation Staff Now Numbers 34 Men

Paramount exploiteers have been assigned to all of the five Southern exchanges of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, including the Southern Enterprises office at Oklahoma City.

Harry C. Swift, one of the veterans of Claud Saunders' staff, has been transferred from Cincinnati to New Orleans; Alex W. Hicks has been sent to Charlotte; Jack Hays, for two years manager of one of the "Lightnin'" companies, to Dallas, and George W. Gambrill to Oklahoma City. Oscar A. Kantner has been conducting the exploitation activities of the Atlanta office for several months.

The vacancy in Cincinnati caused by the transfer of Swift to New Orleans has been filled by Ralph (Buster) Thayer, formerly manager of the Century Theatre, Baltimore, and the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls.

The Paramount exploitation staff now numbers 34 men, the largest since its establishment nearly four years ago.

Magnates Coming East

Schenck, Gore and Lesser to Visit New York

Joseph M. Schenck, Sol Lesser and Michael Gore, three of the five officials of West Coast Theatres, Inc., will shortly depart from Los Angeles for New York City.

The trio are planning a month's stay in New York in the interests of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. It is their desire to make a careful survey of the theatrical and picture interests they control in the East.

Establish Firmer Relationship

It is the purpose of Messrs. Schenck, Lesser and Gore to improve these interests and establish a firmer relationship between the eastern and western centers of their film and theatre holdings.

When the West Coast organization purchased the Turner & Dahnken string of theatres in California they also came into full possession of the Associated First National franchise and the Educational Pictures Corporation franchise for the entire state of New York. A complete survey of these two important properties will be one of the missions of the journey.

Managers Hold Meeting

Goldwyn District Heads Attend Sales Conference in New York

The district managers of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation were called into New York last week for a sales conference with James R. Grainger and other company officials.

Those in attendance included: George Hickey, Chicago; William Truog, Kansas City; J. A. Koerpel, Cleveland; Arthur Lucas, Boston; J. A. Chantler, Toronto; Sam Eckman, Jr., New York, and Felix Mendelssohn, Philadelphia.

While the district managers were here the first print of Rupert Hughes' new picture, made from his novel of life in the Hollywood motion picture colony, "Souls for Sale," was received at headquarters, and the film was run off for their benefit.

'One of the biggest productions we have seen; has magnificent possibilities. It more than lives up to studio promises," was their verdict on it.

Our Films Liked Abroad

Wild West Pictures Very Popular in Asia Minor

Reports received at the Department of Commerce from various parts of the world indicate that American moving pictures are making a very favorable reputation. Advices received from the American consul at Constantinople state that all through Turkey, the Greek Islands, Palestine and Syria the American pictures are certain of an appreciative audience, and in these localities the superiority of the American film is accepted without question. Pictures of the Wild West type are extremely popular in Asia Minor.

Eighty Per Cent American Films

Although British and French interests control practically all the motion picture trade in Peking and Tientsin, 80 per cent of the films shown in those two cities are American, according to reports to the department. Patrons of the moving picture theatres in those two cities are made up of the better class of Chinese, as well as the foreign population.

The American consul at Karachi, India, has reported that a contract has been concluded between Madans, Ltd., motion picture distributors in India, and a well-known American motion picture corporation for the exhibition of American moving pictures in Karachi.

Showmen Apply for Charter

As Bronx Unit of Greater N. Y. Division of M. P. T. O. A.

At a well attended meeting of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association held at the Star Theatre in the Bronx on Thursday evening, March 22, a motion was made and unanimously adopted that the Association apply for a charter to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as the Bronx unit of the Greater New York Division of the national organization.

The application for a charter has been filed with the office of President Sydney S. Cohen, and every theatre owner present signed an individual application for membership in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The meeting was of a most interesting character and a large number of matters affecting the general welfare of the theatre owners in that section of Greater New York were discussed. Among the subjects brought before the meeting were those concerning the new contract for the delivery of film by local carriers with the purpose in view of securing adequate protection for the members, which matter was referred to the film delivery committee and the counsel of the association, Charles B. McLoughlin.

A report of the committee who attended the censorship hearing at Albany as well as other legislation affecting theatre owners was made.

National President Sydney S. Cohen, who is an honorary member of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, attended the meeting and gave a very interesting talk on various matters of interest to the members.

Close Deal With Tourneur

Director to Make 4 or 6 Pictures for First National

It is announced that First National has exercised its option on future Maurice Tourneur productions, thereby assuring four or six pictures from this director next season. Negotiations were concluded a few days ago with M. C. Levee, who controls the Tourneur product made at the United studios in Los Angeles.

This news closely follows the completion of "The Isle of Lost Ships," secured by First National through a deal with Mr. Levee, which included an option on subsequent Tourneur pictures. It is probable that the director's great success with "The Isle of Lost Ships," which First National officials regard as a strong box office feature, as well as an artistic triumph, hastened the closing of the contract for more pictures.

As stated last week, First National is assured of at least sixty productions next season, including these made by its own individual units and the pictures supplied by affiliated organizations. The new contract with Thomas H. Ince was signed recently and more big producers are discussing distribution arrangements with First National.

Exhibitors Won't Lose

National President Sydney S. Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America recently attended a meeting of the creditors of the L. J. Selznick Enterprises and the Select Pictures Corporation in the interest of theatre owners who have money by way of deposits, advance payments and notes with these companies, and received a promise from Chairman Doolittle, of the reorganization committee, that the deposit money and advance payments belonging to theatre owners will be safeguarded and that they will suffer no financial loss through the present difficulties of the Selznick company.

Kansas Exhibitors to Hold Convention April 16 and 17

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas will be held Monday and Tuesday, April 16 and 17, at the Broadview Hotel in Wichita, Kans. The meeting is of interest to every exhibitor in the state and the officials of the organization are looking for a large attendance.

From every indication it will be the biggest and most successful convention that the organization has ever held during the five years of its history. Plans have not been fully developed nor the program arranged, but there are many things to be acted upon.

So far the program calls for the annual election of officers, an adoption of a constitution, a revision of the by-laws, the election of delegates to the national convention, the music tax situation and film rentals. If possible, Sydney S. Cohen will attend the meeting.

The social program calls for a big movie ball, to be open to everyone in Wichita, and a banquet for the exhibitors and their friends. As last time, this banquet will be free. Speakers have not yet been decided upon, but it is known that these speakers will be peppy and familiar with the problems of the small-town exhibitor.

United Artist Official Reports Business Brisk in Australasia

THAT conditions in the exhibitor end of the motion picture industry in Australasia today are very similar to those existing in the United States in that the big feature photoplay largely has taken the place of the ordinary "program" picture, is the report brought to New York by Maurice Silverstone, special representative in Australasia for United Artists.

Mr. Silverstone is in New York for a series of business conferences with Hiram Abrams, president, and other executives of United Artists' home office. In addition to the above statement, Mr. Silverstone says there has been a very splendid improvement in the picture industry in general and as regards United Artists releases in particular.

Australasian territory can no longer be used as a dumping ground, says Mr. Silverstone, for any old kind of a picture that doesn't take well with the public in the United States. United Artists features, he declares, have been wonderfully successful. This demand for genuine feature productions by no means comes from the occasional city or town, but is general on the part of the public everywhere.

"Naturally this public demand has been felt by and had its effect on the exhibitors everywhere in Australasia," says Mr. Silverstone, "and the net result is that new theatres have been built, other theatres remodeled and the extensive preparations were made to meet the wishes of the public in the matter of bigger and better pictures.

"As an illustration of the wonderful growth of the industry and the appreciation of and demand for better features nothing could be more forceful than the fact that Mary Pickford's old 'Tess of the Storm Country' opened eight years ago at the Crystal Palace, Sydney, Australia, at an admission price of sixpence (twelve cents). Miss Pickford's personal and brand new production of 'Tess of the Storm Country,' recently released, opened not long ago at the same theatre—which has been remodeled into the most up-to-date house—at four shillings ($1.00), and is certain to run there for a minimum season of two months.

"In Australia and New Zealand exhibitors have been quick to realize the absolute necessity of presenting big pictures in a really big way, and of giving such productions their first showings in the so-called legitimate theatres. The fame of 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' has spread throughout both these countries.

"The New Zealanders are so determined to prove to the world that they know how adequately to exhibit such a production as this that the first run exhibitor in Wellington, New Zealand, has taken over the Grand Opera House in that city and will present 'Robin Hood' there with a magnificent prologue and an orchestra of twenty pieces, which will be rehearsed so that the musical accompaniment will be absolutely perfect."

Pete Smith Opens Offices

To Handle Publicity and Exploitation for Producers and Stars

Pete Smith, who returned to Los Angeles recently has opened offices to handle publicity and exploitation for independent producers and stars.

Arrangements have been closed with M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, whereby Mr. Smith will make his offices at this studio and handle the publicity of United, Maurice Tourneur Productions and other independent producers.

Mr. Smith, who for the past three years has directed the publicity of Marshall Neilan Productions, continues with Mr. Neilan in handling that producer's publicity and will also look to the publicity of Miss Blanche Sweet.

Assisting Mr. Smith in his new enterprise will be C. S. Dunning, who has had wide publicity experience throughout the country, as well as other writers.

Hodkinson Gives Party

A theatre party was recently given to its employes by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at the performance of "Liza," a musical comedy, at the Bayes Theatre. The entire organization, numbering some seventy-five department heads and employes, participated in the affair, which was one of the frequent "get-together" functions of the Hodkinson organization. It is reported to have been a huge success, and a good time was had by all.

J. Stuart Blackton Returns to Vitagraph as Vice-President

AN important announcement by Vitagraph is that J. Stuart Blackton, who recently returned from London, has been re-elected to his old office of vice-president of the company. Albert E. Smith, president, made the announcement just before he left for the Hollywood studios recently.

Mr. Smith will organize two new and important producing units on his visit to Hollywood, and it is likely that Commodore Blackton will head one of these units, making his famous Blackton Productions for Vitagraph exclusively.

Commodore Blackton resumes his chair as vice-president after an absence of two years. The meeting at which he was re-elected served to bring the three names that have been associated with Vitagraph for more than a quarter of a century together again, Albert E. Smith, J. Stuart Blackton and John B. Rock.

After the election of Commodore Blackton to his old office Mr. Smith and Mr. Rock both expressed themselves as delighted with the return of their old partner to activity in Vitagraph interests and predicted that it would mean a quickening of the organization's work from the production to the distribution field.

The Commodore went to England two years ago to produce there. He made the first all-color special ever exhibited, under the name of "The Glorious Adventure," in which Lady Diana Manners appeared as the star. More recently came "The Gypsy Cavalier."

He made a close study of the foreign market, a market with a wider and richer field than has been generally credited since the war. His associations in England will mean an alliance for Vitagraph of international scope and world-wide distribution.

Mr. Smith's announcement stated that Commodore Blackton would follow him to the Coast within the next two or three weeks, when final arrangements for the production of Blackton productions under the Vitagraph banner would be completed.

Flaherty Honored

Robert J. Flaherty, F.R.G.S., producer of Pathe's "Nanook of the North," who leaves April 12 for the Samoan Islands to film for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation a South Sea picture similar in treatment to his Eskimo production, will be the guest of honor at a testimonial dinner to be given at the Waldorf April 10 by the publishers and editors of Asia Magazine.

Parker on Vacation

Max Parker, for the past seven years art director for the Paramount West Coast studios, sailed last Saturday for Honolulu, this being his first vacation in that period.

Arthur Kooken, five years with the same organization, will take charge of the department during his absence.

Mr. Parker is accompanied by Mrs. Parker and expects to return the last of April. A portion of his time will be spent in research work in Hawaii.

Lust Adopts Son

Sidney B. Lust, head of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., of Washington, D. C., has selected his successor in the person of Bernard Lust, an attractive youngster, now nearly two years of age. Mr. Lust is very fond of youngsters, and, having none of his own, recently decided to try and give a good home to one not so fortunate. He has accordingly adopted this little fellow, and "Pop and the Kid" are getting along fine. The boy has already made friends with many of the exchange managers and with the exhibitors, possibly in anticipation of some day "getting into the game" and selling film.

Issues Warning on "The Fool"

"The Fool," Channing Pollock's successful stage play which William Fox is to produce in screen form, has inspired so many imitations of its theme, according to the author and the producers of the original play, that they have issued a warning against any attempt to infringe upon their legal rights in the matter. The play is having a large sale in printed form.

Swamp Censor Board

Practically every film which the Washington, D. C., exchanges expect to place through Virginia in the near future was shipped to Richmond in an effort to secure review before the increased rate went into effect on March 26. On that date the rate was increased from $1 to $2 per thousand feet. Reports from Richmond to Washington stated that the Virginia Board of Motion Picture Censorship was fairly flooded with films to be censored before the increased fee became effective. All films received before the new rate went into effect were reviewed at the old rate, although the great volume of pictures shipped to Richmond made it impossible for the board to review them all before the law became effective.

Attendance Falls

Theatrical attendance throughout the country fell off materially during February, according to reports received by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the tax collections from admissions for that month being approximately $900,000 below those of the month of January.

Collections during the month of February totaled $5,877,392, according to the bureau's figures, an increase of $10,135 over the corresponding month of 1922, but $888,816 less than was collected during the month of January, 1923.

In addition to the tax on admissions there was collected from the special tax on theatres, museums, circuses, etc., $19,835, as compared with $37,035 for the month of January. Total collections from all sources during the month were $106,873,307.

Closes Foreign Deal

Announcement is made by First National that contracts have been closed with the H. A. P. Film Company, Hoefgade 9, The Hague, Holland, for the distribution of "The Eternal Flame," starring Norma Talmadge, and "East Is West," starring Constance Talmadge. In foreign countries, as in America, these two pictures are proving to be among the most popular productions in which the Talmadges have appeared.

Buys "Flaming Youth"

"Flaming Youth," by Warner Fabian, one of the most discussed novels of the day, has been purchased by First National and in all probability will be filmed in time for release early next season. The story was published in book form by Boni & Liveright and is running serially in the Metropolitan Magazine.

Deserves Sole Credit

Because of the many highly complimentary comments being made on the photography of the very unusual prehistoric forest scenes in Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount picture, "Adam's Rib," the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation desires to correct an error in photographic credit which has arisen through inadvertence. In certain quarters Alvin Wyckoff and Guy Wilky were given joint credit for the photography, whereas the credit belonged to Alvin Wyckoff alone.

Distinctive Picture Output to Be Released by Goldwyn

FOLLOWING the distributing arrangement made between Cosmopolitan Productions and Goldwyn Pictures comes the announcement that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will also handle the entire future motion picture output of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. An agreement to that effect was reached yesterday between Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures, and F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn.

The acquisition of the product of Distinctive Pictures by the Goldwyn Distributing Company is regarded by those in the motion picture industry as one of the most important deals of the year. The producing program of Distinctive is far-reaching and the story and picture properties which they now own represent some of the most important material on the market.

Twelve big special features are scheduled by Distinctive for 1923. The company now has one picture ready for release, "Backbone," a romantic story with a Northern Maine and a French setting, written by Clarence Budington Kelland. It was directed by Edward Sloman.

Three other pictures are now nearing completion. The first is "The Ragged Edge," directed by Harmon Weight. Another Clarence Budington Kelland picture, "Steadfast Heart," is in preparation at the Distinctive Studios in New York. Sheridan Hall is directing. The third story now in the preparatory stages is called "Two Can Play," by Gerald Mygatt, which Harmon Weight will direct.

Distinctive Pictures owns the picture rights to some very important stories and plays which will have strong exhibitor and fan appeal, it is said. One of these is "Salome of the Tenements," by Anzia Yezierska, author of "Hungry Hearts," which Goldwyn produced.

"The Green Goddess," a melodrama by William Archer, which ran for a year on Broadway and has been on tour for two seasons, is on Distinctive's program. Sir Gilbert Parker's Egyptian novel, "The Weavers," is another important story which Distinctive will produce. Another Distinctive feature will be "The Adopted Father," by Edgar Franklin.

This producing organization also controls the picture rights to I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Inheritors," and to Clarence Budington Kelland's "Hearts and Fists."

First National District Heads Discuss Next Season's Plans

DISTRICT managers of First National held a five-day convention at the Hotel Astor, starting Monday, March 26, and concluding Friday. The primary purpose of the meeting was to lay the ground work of plans for next season, to consider the fall product and to discuss ways and means of improving First National's service to exhibitors in all its details. A new advertising and publicity policy about to be adopted was explained.

At the close of the meetings the district managers were all set for the biggest year First National has ever known.

Floyd M. Brockell, distribution manager, who presided at the meeting, gave a detailed analysis of First National's sales policy and spoke of the conclusions reached as a result of the three months' tour of the country from which he recently returned. Mr. Brokell was most enthusiastic about the prospects for the new season in almost every section of the country.

In an address delivered on Wednesday, H. O. Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer, spoke of the great pictures promised for the coming season. He considered the production plans of the company as formulated and stressed the need for real service to exhibitors.

Hawley Turner, representing the Saturday Evening Post, explained the exact purpose of First National's full-page advertising that starts in the Post April 7 and continues every other week thereafter. He showed how it is the most effective tie-up ever gained through national advertising, affording direct benefit to the exhibitor by actually selling to the public the picture he is playing.

Among others who addressed the meeting were S. O. Spring, of First National's legal department; D. Farralla, of the financial department; Sol Shernow, of the print department, and Stanley Hatch and Jay Gove, of the distribution department.

The district managers who attended were H. A. Bandy, Central District, Cleveland, O.; Roy C. Seery, Mid-Western District, Chicago, Ill.; W. E. Callaway, Southern District, New Orleans, La.; Louis Bache, Canadian District, Toronto; Joseph Skirboll, Western District, Los Angeles. Mr. Skirboll has been managing the Pittsburgh exchange, but will go direct from the convention to Los Angeles.

Charles Jones Not to Leave Fox

From the headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation at New York comes the statement that there is no foundation to the rumor that Charles Jones, their Western star, is to sever connections with that company.

Jones, it is stated, is doing bigger and better work under the Fox banner now than ever before. He has just completed playing the leading role in a coming Fox special—"The Eleventh Hour," another Lincoln J. Carter stage thriller made into a photoplay. He is at present putting the finishing licks to an Alaskan story, "Snowdrift," from the novel of James B. Hendryx.

Goes to Cuba

Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager of United Artists Corporation, has left on a swing around the circle which will include many of the United Artists exchanges. Mr. Hodkinson's first stop on this tour of general inspection will take him to Cuba. From there he goes to Mexico City, and then returns to the United States. Among home country exchanges he will visit are those at Atlanta, Washington, Dallas, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Minneapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. He will be absent for several weeks.

Leaves for the Coast

Ernest Van Pelt, who has been associated with Larry Weingarten in the production and distribution of Sacred Films, left this week for the studio offices in Los Angeles. The untimely death of Dr. Harwood Huntington, president of Sacred Films, Inc., has necessitated a change in operating plans and a new president will be elected upon Van Pelt's arrival on the Coast.

Sunday Movies Favored

The question of Sunday motion picture shows was threshed out in some of the city and village elections held last week in New York State, the ordinance favorable to Sunday shows winning out. At Beacon, with the entire Democratic ticket elected, a proposal for Sunday shows was carried by a large majority. At Ballston Spa, where Sunday movies was the real issue, nearly 2,000 votes were cast in the re-election of the present officials who passed the Sunday movie ordinance. At Sidney, on the other hand, exhibitors lost by 661 to 235.

Release Specials Only

Fox Corporation Announces Plan to Eliminate "Program" Pictures

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces that no program releases are scheduled for the coming season. Plans are being scheduled for the producing of nothing but special photoplays of high merit, suitable for exhibition in the highest class theatres. According to word received from Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the corporation who is now in Los Angeles, the Fox company is just beginning a period of great activity, the production of many of the biggest Broadway hits having already been started.

For these productions a number of important directors and players are being added to the staff working in the Fox Studios in New York and Los Angeles. Among the latest favorites to be added to the list of new leading women at the Fox Los Angeles studios are Jean Arthur, Ruth Dwyer and Peggy Shaw. Miss Shaw, who formerly was a Ziegfeld Follies' beauty, has been seen in leading roles in a number of Fox productions produced in the East, including "Who Are My Parents?" "The Custard Cup," "My Friend the Devil" and other productions of the past season.

Arrangements have just been completed, according to word from the Fox offices, with three of New York's widely-known play producers whereby all picture rights to their Broadway successes become the property of the Fox organization.

Production work already has been started in the New York studios on "The Warrens of Virginia," the David Belasco success, which is being made under the direction of Harry Millarde, who staged "Over the Hill" and "If Winter Comes." Another Belasco play, "The Governor's Lady," will go into production in the near future. "Hoodman Blind," from the pens of Wilson Barrett and Henry Arthur Jones, is another stage triumph which will furnish material for a forthcoming Fox screen production.

Included in the Fox announcement is the fact that J. Gordon Edwards, who staged "Queen of Sheba" and other notable Fox successes, is now in Panama working on a big dramatic melodrama of American naval and official life which, also, will be released during the coming season.

Tom Mix, the popular star of Fox productions, will start work in the near future on two special productions adapted from Zane Grey's novel.

Brandt Finds Exhibitors to Blame for Present Rentals

Mr. Robert E. Welsh, Editor,
Moving Picture World,
New York:

YOUR editorial in the March 31st issue of Moving Picture World interested me enormously. It crystallized so perfectly the expression of a phase of the film industry that presents a very definite problem at the present time. Production costs are mounting, generally. The question is now for us all to sit down and decide to do something about it—and to find out what that thing to do is.

I have long had in mind an opinion that would, it has seemed to me, relieve the situation enormously. The general bulk of exhibitors have been, as you say, paying heavily—are the ones who really bear the brunt of this mounting production cost. This remedy that I propose would come back to the exhibitors—would need their heartiest and determined co-operation to put over. It is to show their willingness to play in their theatres pictures which have not big stars—for it is the salaries of the stars that form the greatest production cost and so tend to boost the film rental costs.

The fault of present prices is largely with the exhibitor himself—he insists on the star picture—the production with a big "name" or several "big names" which he can feature in his lights and billing. This fault is not entirely his, for, like an endless chain, he has been made to think by the public that he can't get an audience in his house if he doesn't feature some star—and the public is only swallowing the results of the propaganda the producers themselves have spread in their publicity campaigns.

The remedy does, however, lie with the exhibitor. He is the one who can help to develop new stars by showing his willingness to play pictures in which no well known stars appear, and help to bring about an adjustment in salary by showing that the big "names" can be replaced easily.

Everybody has been saying for generations, "The play's the thing"—and then we go out and subordinate it to the players in it. My own company is no different than the rest—we too have followed the path of least resistance, and since exhibitors and the public demand "names," we have given them in our productions not one star each, but three or four. In our "Only a Shopgirl" we number Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, James Morrison. In "Temptation"—Bryant Washburn, Eva Novak, Vernon Steele, June Elvidge. In "Her Accidental Husband"—Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchell Lewis.

But I maintain nevertheless that the play IS the thing—and that if the exhibitor would show more willingness to play the pictures without "names," and make it up in showmanship, in a finely balanced program, in exploitation, he could prove that it is. And he could prove, too, that there are just as good stars in the film sea as there are in electric lights.

Many of the season's successes have proved this. Take "Down to the Sea in Ships." There are no stars in that—and yet it is packing them in at every performance. "Mighty Lak a Rose" is another example—this and the work of Dorothy Mackaill in it were among the surprises of the season. Who ever heard of any of the players in "The Birth of a Nation" when Griffith made it? Yet it made screen history. Was Lon Chaney a "star" before the public appraised him such? Yet he is now and always was one of the finest actors the screen ever had—and he is justly starred today.

If a picture is a good picture, the public will want to see it. If an actor or actress does good work, the public will acclaim it. It is up to the exhibitor to make the most of that; to relieve this "star" congestion by giving the embryonic stars—and there are many of them who haven't yet been recognized, but who would be if they got the chance—an opportunity to come to the front. Only in that way will we get a proper sense of values and put things on a sensible basis again.

JOE BRANDT,
President, C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

Cunningham is the new branch sales manager at Salt Lake City, succeeding the late Lawrence J. Baratte.

Missouri Convention to Be Held April 4

THE semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri will be held at the Baltimore Hotel in Kansas City, Wednesday, April 4. The business session will be called to order at 10 o'clock and the convention will end the same evening with a banquet at the hotel.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will be in Kansas City that afternoon and night, en route to Omaha from Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Cohen will be accompanied by M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service department of the national organization; William A. True, president of the Connecticut exhibitors, and W. D. Burford, of the Illinois exhibitors. Mr. True and Mr. Burford are members of the board of directors of the national organization.

The executive committee of the Missouri organization will present plans relative to the employment of a permanent business manager to look after the affairs of the association. Delegates to the national convention will be elected. Other business will be routine.

Burston Killed in Accident; W. E. Lusk Dies; Both Popular

THE motion picture industry in general was shocked this week with telegraphic reports bringing news of the death of two well-known film men, Louis Burston, producer, and Walter E. Lusk, manager of the First National exchange in Washington.

Louis Burston, one of the most popular and best known independent producers in the country, was instantly killed in a collision near Hollywood, Cal., on Sunday evening, March 25, when an automobile in which he was a passenger was shattered to pieces by a fast express. Mr. Burston, together with a number of friends, had spent the day in a nearby town looking over some property. Early in the evening the party started back to the film colony to attend a party given in honor of the producer.

Reports received from the Coast from press, friends and relatives, however, differ. Some have it that Mr. Burston died instantly, while others report his death from injuries shortly after the occurrence of the collision. All agreed, however, in that the machine was just about to cross the railway tracks when an unexpected express swirled from a turn nearby and before the driver had an opportunity to act, according to reports, the engine had plowed through the car. Several persons in the car were seriously injured, but in so far as could be ascertained Mr. Burston was the only one who was killed.

Mr. Burston was to have left Los Angeles on Tuesday of this week with a print of his latest picture, "Desire," which he was to show early next week to Marcus Loew and other officers of Metro, through whose exchanges Burston released his pictures. Mr. Burston late last summer signed a contract with Metro whereby that firm was to have distribution rights to four pictures he was to make this year. The first release was "Forget Me Not," which ran at the Criterion Theatre in New York for quite some time. "Desire" is to be the second release. There are two other pictures to be made and plans for which Mr. Burston had intended discussing with Metro officials next week.

Walter E. Lusk died at his home in Washington, D. C., on Tuesday afternoon, March 27, following an illness of several weeks. Mr. Lusk in the time he had been in Washington won many friends and was generally characterized as one of the most popular exchange managers in the country. He took over the managerial reins of the Washington exchange several months ago, succeeding Louis Bache. He was 35 years old and before going to Washington was in charge of the First National exchange in Cleveland.

Both Messrs. Burston and Lusk had been actively connected with the picture business for years in various capacities. While Mr. Lusk's efforts had been devoted to distribution, Mr. Burston produced.

The Rialto, Washington, D. C., Signs for Goldwyn First Runs

By TOM MOORE

President Moore's Theatres Corporation, Washington, D. C.

DURING the last year, and especially the last six months, the exhibitors of this colony have read with interest the many valuable editorials in Moving Picture World forecasting the coming of better general conditions appertaining to the motion picture industry, most important being the rapid strides made by producers in their efforts to give the market greater quality in motion picture productions. We have made note of each and every company which was making unusual strides in the above direction. Our company believes your estimate of conditions to be conservative, and especially do we feel happy for the opportunity of exhibitors to obtain high class product on a profitable basis for all concerned.

It so happens that during the past three months I have made many trips to New York and had many conferences, which resulted in my signing for product that I think will mark the dawn of a new era in the prosperity for both our Rialto Theatre and the concerns with whom we are to deal. Agreements have already been concluded with three concerns. The seal of the Goldwyn company has been placed on contracts covering a long term, which gives to our Rialto first, exclusive presentation of that company's product, which includes everything except "Ben Hur."

The Goldwyn company, with its spirit to reach out in the market for leadership, is the first I have found to sign a contract that guarantees equity for producer, exhibitor and distributor, and by the terms of such contract puts the product up to the public. Our terms of dividing the profits lets the public be the judge as to how long a picture shall run before being taken off, for the receipts for the first three days if they reach a given figure automatically continues the picture for another week, otherwise the picture is taken off after one week's run.

I want to pay high tribute and respect to the Goldwyn concern for introducing this new plan in the industry, and especially Messrs. Godsol, Grainger, Flynn, Hess, Shauer and other executives.

Sales Bonuses

Probably the largest cash bonus offer ever made to the men of a national distributing organization is that of American Releasing Corporation to its managers, salesmen and bookers for a twelve weeks' period that started Monday, March 19. The bonuses are payable based both on sales and collections in the twelve-week period and aggregate $34,000, payable in gold coin.

Laments Condition of Film

Projectionist Gives His Viewpoint on Poor Prints

44 South Main Street,
Nazareth, Pa., March 6, 1923.

Mr. Robert E. Welsh,
Moving Picture World,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

In the March 10 issue of Moving Picture World you printed a letter from Mr. A. L. Middleton, De Queen, Arkansas, an exhibitor. His lament was Poor Prints. I am going to give you the viewpoint of a projectionist on Poor Prints.

I have run my share of poor prints in my time. Every time I have had an incipient film fire at the aperture plate it was due to a poor print with POOR PATCHES. There is a fire and panic risk in every poor print received from an exchange. The fire and panic risk with poor prints is my chief objection as a projectionist to poor prints.

The manner in which exchanges send out film which is their property is a fright. The film is wound on battered, broken and twisted reels in any old way. As high as a foot to two feet of film has been cracked at the sprocket holes from poor rewinding at the exchanges. It has been rewound in such a manner that one turn of the film extends out from the other turns on the reel and the heavy weight of the reels on top break the sprocket holes during shipping.

Another angle on poor prints. I have spoken to several agents from some of the largest producers in this country about poor prints. They asked me why I did not inspect the film before I project it through our machines. Why should I? When our manager rents a film he expects a good print in perfect condition to project on the screen. The renting of film is the same proposition as the man who rents a motor truck to move with. He doesn't expect a truck to come with three wheels and hitting on three cylinders out of four. He expects that it can do the job, but that does not seem to be the exchanges' viewpoint that the film will do what is expected of it. Why, I have run features in such poor condition that we should have paid our audience to look at it, instead of expecting them to pay to see it. These were no $7.50 features, but $15 to $20 features a night.

Every time I have done some slight damage to film while projecting it was due to poor inspecting of splices in the exchange, in nine out of ten times. When I receive a good print I try to do everything in my power to send it back in as good condition as I received it from the exchange. But when I receive an old, decrepit piece of junk to show our audience—well, you know what happens to that show. Then Mr. Agent from So and So Company comes around and you tell him such and such a show did not go across in your house, he wants to know the reason why. You know and so do I.

Here is the last shot. Our town has a population of forty-five hundred. Nine miles away is the city of Easton, Pa., with a population of thirty-five thousand. A good many people from our town go over to Easton to see pictures. When the same show comes to Nazareth six or eight months afterward some of these people come and see this show again. After the show I am told that parts were cut out and accusing eyes are cast upon me, as if I was the one that did the trick. I know what the trouble is; I have received another mutilated print. They may call the small town exhibitor the BACKBONE of the industry, but it seems to me he is getting it in the NECK.

Yours truly,
CARLISLE A. ANGLEMIRE,
Projectionist "Y" Theatre.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Philadelphia Exhibitors and Exchangemen Try Arbitration

The most comprehensive plan ever evolved here for the development of mutuality between exhibitors and exchange houses, and incidentally a campaign in which the public is interested, is being developed by the Arbitration Board of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade, which is functioning with such fairness that out of thirty-seven disputes between exhibitors and exchangemen, an amicable settlement without resort to litigation was reached. In only one instance did an exhibitor fail to accept the board's ruling, and the other exhibitors put their hands in their pockets and paid the fine which had been imposed upon this one concern.

Of the cases passed on by the Arbitration Board it so happens that they divide equally between those in which judgment was against the exhibitor and those in which a verdict was reached against the exchange house. While prosecuting its function of arbitration the board has decided on a further step of helpfulness both to the industry at large and to itself by an educational campaign to be conducted by personal and direct-by-mail appeal, the purpose of which is to avoid the occurrence of just such cases as it has been called on to arbitrate. Helpful suggestions will be given with specificness and particularity to the sales representatives of the exchanges and to the exhibitors advising them on the proper kind of contract to make, the avoidance on the one hand of over-sales in number, or overcharge in prices of films and on the other hand in over-commitments and finally of advice based on experience of the particular line of film best suited to a given neighborhood and a specified time.

The Arbitration Board is made up of Chairman Oscar Neufeld of the DeLuxe Company, who is also president of the Film Board of Trade; George P. Aarons, secretary and counsel of the M. P. T. O. of A., working in co-operation with two committees, one for the exhibitors, made up of Lew Pizor of the Colonial Theatre, Phoenixville, Charles M. Rappaport of the Ideal Theatre, Philadelphia, Harry Stephenson of Fay's Theatre, West Philadelphia; George Kline, Kline Poster Company and Columbus Stanpfer of the Frankford Theatre, and for the exchange men John Thornton of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation; Charles S. Goodman of the Electric Theatre Supply Company; John B. Bethell of the Vitagraph Company; Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Company and Robert Lynch of Metro.

While the battle of the ballots over the Derrick anti-daylight law is in progress at the State Capitol at Harrisburg, with the issue undetermined and both sides claiming victory, the picture industry of Philadelphia both individually and collectively, and both in Philadelphia and in Harrisburg, vigorously is prosecuting its campaign of education and of enlightenment on the hypothesis that just to the extent that the public is informed on every phase of the question, will it react against tinkering wtih the time-piece.

The Stanley Company of America, the dominant figure among the exhibitors, unofficially but frankly admits its opposition to the daylight saving schedule but claims that it is not conducting any propaganda on the subject. However, the M. P. T. O. A. openly opposes interference with regulation time and is directing a campaign at the State Capitol. During the week speakers appeared at many of the show places in the Quaker City and the capitol, and unquestionably they held close attention of their audience as they advanced reasons why no artificial time standard should be adopted. At the conclusion of the addresses, slides announced that the box office would be the deposit place of the ballots of the audience whereon they might register their attitude on the proposition.

Disinterested opinion inclines to the view that the Decker bill prohibiting adoption of daylight saving schedule will pass the Legislature but with "cities of the first class," Philadelphia being the only one, exempted from its provision.

A Get-together

Full development of co-operation and determination to advance the industry to the high place its importance warrants, is evidenced by the decision reached during the week by the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade to hold in May, and at the most prominent hotel in Philadelphia and for the first time in local annals, a joint reception and ball of both the exhibitors and the exchange houses. Hitherto there has been fellowship in each organization and each held its own social functions. This year history will be made by the combination.

W. C. HUNT

President of Hunt's Theatres, Inc., Philadelphia, on the Boardwalk at Wildwood, N. J., with the Lee children of film fame.

Chief of interest among exhibitors during the week was the triple attraction of the Stanley Theatre. Supplementing the main production of Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" was a Spring fashion show with living models presented by the Gimbel department store and a unique film production produced at Betzwood, showing how the bridge across the Delaware from Philadelphia to Camden, now in course of erection, will look when completed in 1926.

In conjunction with National Vaudeville Association Week, to be observed during Easter Week, the management of Sabelosky & McGuirk, the Stanley Company of America, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, M. W. Taylor, George W. Metzel and Harry Stephenson of Fay's Theatre will give special performances for the benefit fund of the N. V. A.

Jules Mastbaum of the Stanley Company of America, who has been visiting California studios, is expected back in this city on Saturday afternoon of this week. His office was in receipt during the week of a photograph of Mr. and Mrs. Mastbaum, Walter Hiers and other film stars preparing a new feature.

The Irving Theatre at Carbondale, Pa., has opened as an additional link in the chain of the Comerford Amusement Circuit, with main offices in Scranton and of which N. E. Comerford is head. L. A. Farrell will be in charge of this latest addition to the Carbondale string of three, which the Comerford interests maintain in conjunction with the sixty theatres scattered throughout Eastern Pennsylvania.

Lansdale, Pa., has added a new movie house, the latest adjunct being the Lansdale Theatre, an attractive building with an interior of an artistic color scheme of French gray and old rose and with every modern device. It has a capacity of 750 and is owned by a partnership of which Borroughs Boorse is one of the members. He will manage the house. The opening feature was "Grandma's Boy."

Jacob Gilman, well known as an amusement director at Souderton, Pa., where he is owner of the Broad Theatre, has acquired the Jenkin Theatre of that town which was owned by the Jenkin Brothers. It will be remodeled.

Quick action probably prevented a serious fire when a film burst into flames in the Regis Theatre, 1526 Cumberland street. The fire was confined to the exhibition booth after the matinee performance and was quickly extinguished when the operator threw the blazing film from the projection booth and emptied an extinguisher on it.

Jake Smith, of Smith's Theatre, Barnesboro, Pa., and Sam Sprance, of the Russell Theatre in the same town, were visitors among Pittsburgh's film exchanges recently.

Jere Spandau, well-known manager of the Family Theatre at Braddock, is back again on the job after a severe attack of the grip.

Sincere sympathy is extended to T. J. Vincent, of the Dreamland Theatre, McDonald, Pa., in the loss of his father, whose death occurred recently from pneumonia, while the former was ill with the influenza.

Expect Many Exhibitors at Illinois State Convention

The state convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners will be held April 18 and 19 at the Hotel Sherman. The committee, composed of Ludwig Siegel, John Silha and A. Dernbach, is working hard to put over one of the best meetings ever held by the association. New officers will be elected and delegates chosen for the national convention. A dinner will be tendered the delegates by the Chicago Film Board of Trade and other entertainment is being arranged for the visitors.

Among the important matters to be brought up at the meeting will be the music tax, wage scales, censorship matters, and the uniform contract and issues affecting the national organization. Preparations are being made to take care of a large crowd and the boys here will be disappointed if the out of town managers do not come on by the hundreds.

C. W. and G. L. Rapp, architects here, have completed the plans for the new $2,000,000 theatre to be erected at Sixth and Grand streets in Milwaukee by the Wisconsin Company of which John I. Beggs is president.

A loan of $525,000 has been placed on the Planters Hotel and theatre building at 9 to 19 North Clark street, that will house the Adelphi Theatre to be operated under the management of Al Woods next season.

L. J. Stogsdill, Harry C. Kunkleman and L. P. and R. D. Stogsdill have formed the Cosmopolitan Film Corporation, with a capital of $10,000 and headquarters at Springfield.

The Vista Theatre at Cottage Grove and Forty-seventh street will be taken over by the Ascher chain of theatres and will be operated under the personal management of Max Ascher. Leo Bloom will have charge of the music and high class feature programs will be the policy of the house. This will make fifteen houses under the Ascher banner.

Union Park at Dubuque will have a new movie and vaudeville theatre from plans by J. F. Keitha.

A. J. Moeller of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has opened headquarters at the Sherman Hotel, from where he will direct the activities for the motion picture exposition to be held at the Coliseum from May 19 to May 26.

The friends of John Radford, manager of the Thayer Theatre, will be sorry to hear of the accidental death of his brother, who was killed while at work.

Manager Wallenstein of the new Tivoli Theatre at Michigan City is always on the lookout for novel ideas to boost business for his house, so when he played "The Flirt" he engaged four beauties from Chicago to help put over the picture. They did it with a bang that broke the house records.

John J. Jones, eldest son of Aaron J. Jones, booking executive of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, will be married this week to Miss Agatha Connett and the honeymoon will be spent along Broadway and Atlantic City. Johnny's friends in the trade wish him many happy years of wedded life.

One of the live houses on the South Side is the West Englewood Theatre, under the personal management of Harry Ascher, with Chris Fiel as assistant manager and Benny Cohn as presentation and vaudeville manager.

The Barbee Theatre this week is showing Charley Ray in his latest film, "The Girl I Loved," and doing a good business.

The Windsor Theatre on North Clark street has a Syncopation Week on that is packing the patrons in. Jack Nelson and his players are the leaders on the bill. A number of vaudeville acts were added for good measure.

Nora Bayes has been held over for the second week at the New McVickers Theatre and the feature this week is Theodore Roberts in "Grumpy," who is popular with the patrons of this house.

The Chicago Theatre is featuring Jackie Coogan this week in his new picture, "Daddy," and the S. R. O. sign is seen quite often.

The next big theatre for the Wilson avenue district is projected for the triangle plot of land at Montrose, Broadway and Sheridan Road, where two of the busiest streets in the city cross. August F. John, a large real estate operator from Milwaukee, is making his initial bow in Chicago realty circles and doing it in a big way, for he has taken over a ninety-nine year lease on the land which will equal almost $3,000,000 before it is finished. Plans call for either a twelve or sixteen-story combined hotel and theatre building with an investment of $1,500,000. Mr. John, by the way, is building, from plans by C. W. and George Rapp, a fine theatre in Milwaukee at the northeast corner of Grand avenue and Sixth street that will be one of the largest in the country.

According to the latest plans of James Plodna of the Harper Theatre and Leo Salkin of the Jackson Park Theatre, who have leased the Kenwood Theatre for five years from May 1, they are going to put in a ten-piece orchestra with organ and enlarge the movie program with more big features than ever before. Both of the boys are live wires and they will give the movie patrons in that territory some mighty good programs that will bring them back often. The house has been under Ascher management for some time past.

One of the big bills of the year was pulled off this week at the Riveria Theatre in the Wilson avenue district under the name of Syncopation Week. Capacity business was the rule.

The Capital Theatre at Pekin under the direction of Lee Eyrse has made a hit with Friday night amateur shows.

It is reported that a new Hoyburn Theatre will be built on the site of the present theatre at Evanston, Ill., the home of Northwestern University. McVickers Gaining Renown

The stage presentations at McVickers Theatre are causing much comment throughout the country. Sid Grauman of Los Angeles seems to be equally enthusiastic as Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld of New York. Being our newest cinema theatre, McVickers is the stopping off place for all the great theatre magnates who are passing through Chicago continually eastward and westward. And the renown of McVickers' stage presentations is well deserved.

One of the most beautiful stage events ever given in a cinema theatre was "A Nobleman's Garden" last month at McVickers. Last week "The Enchanted Web" ran it a close second. Aaron J. Jones, himself, sits in at the meeting of the production heads and passes his opinion. The stage settings and color effects are conceived by Charles A. Niggemeyer, the dance steps arranged by Boris Petroff, the music settings by H. Leopold Spitalny and then the stories and title of the presentations are given it by Ralph T. Kettering.

It is a marvelous thing to contemplate the huge mental and physical labor necessary to create, rehearse and build these immense stage presentations each and every week, but the Jones, Linick & Schaefer production department seems never to be fatigued. Harold B. Franklin, who directs the theatres owned by Paramount throughout the country, is especially enthusiastic and plans to duplicate many of the McVickers presentations in the theatres under his direction.

Additional Chicago

Elmer A. Johnson, H. E. Rehfield and George F. Hurley have formed the Victoria Amusement Company, with a capital of $10,000 and offices at 3147 North Sheffield avenue.

The Rialto Theatre is using a news reel and "Fun from the Press" to top off its vaudeville program instead of a feature movie, and the house is pulling good business right along with its combination policy.

The candidates still bother the movie managers to show their slides, so some of the boys want to taboo all political slides, as the showing causes more or less partisanship feeling.

J. E. Bennett and his wife, movie managers at Atlanta, Ill., were visitors along movie row last week.

The Grand Theatre at Blue Island was seriously damaged by fire last week when a bad blaze caused damage in excess of $100,000 and drove a mother and three children, who were living in the fire area, into the street. It is hoped that the house will be rebuilt as soon as possible.

Gus Trulich has taken over the management of the Orchard Theatre on West North avenue and is putting on some live programs.

Another large theatre is projected for the Clark street district, a ten-story office and theatre building combination to cost $2,000,000, it is said, and be located on a site near Clark and Madison. Lee Morrison is the moving spirit in the new project and the work is expected to begin soon.

The theatre interests are fighting hard to put over Sunday movies in Oak Park, the largest village in the country. The natives say they have 50,000 population but no Sunday movies, and they hope to change this at the April election. Some of the blue law folks who don't want Sunday shows in the village manage to run down to the city on Sunday and take in the sacred concerts at theatres, and of course they have to get their money's worth and stay for the movie show which always follows the sacred concert.

Julian C. Ryer, H. A. Fleckles and Lawrence B. Dowd have formed a company to do a theatrical business with a capital of $125,000 and offices at 410 South Michigan avenue.

Some of the neighborhood theatres used unique methods in putting over the showing of "The Third Alarm." Harry Miller of the Windsor Theatre used fire equipment and packed them in, while Al Lyons of the Peoples Theatre on the South Side tied up street car traffic for several minutes with his ballyhoo.

The managers of the movie theatres at Litchfield have a real fight on their hands to keep from closing on Sundays, as the ministers have presented a petition to the city council to close them up tight.

Word was received here a few days ago of the robbery of the Regent Theatre at Detroit and the thieves escaped with $5,000 of the Sunday receipts. This brings to light the theft of the safe from the Pantheon Theatre on Sheridan Road and to date no arrests have been made for this daring robbery.

Blair McElroy of Fitzpatrick and McElroy is on the West Coast for a short visit with his wife, who has been ill for two years.

Service Extraordinary

Service to the nth degree is the rule at the Crandall houses, Washington, D. C., where nothing is too much trouble if it pleases the patron. The type of service which it is the aim of the Crandall organization to give was exemplified recently at the Avenue Grand, where a popular serial film is being shown.

Manager Harry Lohmeyer was approached by a patron who asked if it was possible for him to see the episode of the serial which had been shown the preceding week. He explained that he was an ardent follower of the serial, but had been called out of the city the preceding week and had missed that episode, the twelfth, and was very anxious not to lose the continuity of the story.

Mr. Lohmeyer asked if he could not be at the theatre at a certain time the following Saturday, to which the patron agreed. When he reached the theatre, he was put into an automobile and the chauffeur was instructed to take him to the Apollo Theatre, where the episode was being shown, and as soon as he had viewed the film to bring him back to the Avenue Grand. Upon his return at the Avenue Grand he was taken into the theatre and was shown not only the thirteenth but the fourteenth, which was due to play that day.

While this treatment of the patron placed the theatre under a considerable expense and not a little difficulty, it is believed by officials of the Crandall organization that it will pay dividends, since they are soon to start the showing of another serial and every friend will help.

Stevens of the Universal reports that Warren Wendell, owner of the Gaiety Theatre at Middletown, is going to close his old house and will open a new theatre in the town that will be one of the niftiest movie houses of its size in the state.

Cecil Davidson is the leader of a nine-piece orchestra now playing at the West Englewood, and Charley House is the organist. Between them they put on some fine presentations.

Passengers on the long overland trips to California on the Olympian, the crack fast train of the Milwaukee Road, will soon have movies to while away their time. Universal provided equipment and films for a try-out recently that went over big with the passengers, and plans are in the making for a permanent movie program for the passengers on their far western journeys.

Benny Cohn, formerly assistant manager of the Roosevelt Theatre when it was under the Ascher management, is now booking vaudeville for the Ascher circuit and is using five acts each week for the West Englewood Theatre.

The Avenue Theatre at 3108 Indiana avenue is now under the management of W. Bedell, who has fixed up the house and made it thoroughly modern. He is showing up-to-the-minute programs with good music to help put them over. Bedell has a cosy neighborhood house that is a credit to his part of the city.

Washington, D. C.

With one exception, all members of the Board of Directors of the Crandall Theatre Company, Washington, D. C., have been re-elected, the only new member of the board being Frank L. Wagner, elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Barry Bulkley.

The directorate now consists of Harry M. Crandall, Captain C. C. Calhoun, A. E. Beitzel, Peter A. Drury, Joseph P. Morgan, William Henry White, Nelson B. Bell, Augustus Gumpert, Fritz D. Hoffmann, Howe Totten and Frank L. Wagner. All of the present officers of the company also were re-elected, Mr. Crandall remaining as president, while Captain C. C. Calhoun will serve as vice-president and A. E. Beitzel as secretary and treasurer.

Indiana

As a drawing card the picture theatre is still several laps ahead of the church, even on Sunday nights, according to figures compiled recently by the Boy Scouts at Linton, Ind. The figures were compiled after details of the Scouts had checked attendance at the movie theatres and the churches for several weeks.

The average number attending church services on Sunday nights was found by the Boy Scouts to be 882, while those at the picture theatres numbered 953. These churches claim a resident membership of about 2,000.

The Central Amusement Company, which operates the Lyric Theatre in Indianapolis, has leased for eighty-eight years the property which adjoins the Lyric on the south, and on the expiration of the present lease on the new property will add it to the Lyric. The newly acquired property has a twenty-foot frontage in Illinois street, between the Lyric and Crystal theatres. Charles M. Olson, president of the company, said the new property will be made into the main entrance to both the main floor and balcony of the Lyric and will increase the seating capacity. The changing of the entrance also will make it possible to handle audiences with more ease and will lessen the fire risk, Mr. Olsen said.

Fire, believed to have been started from an overheated furnace, damaged the interior of the Honeymoon Theatre, 1121 West Division street, South Bend, Sunday night, causing a loss of about $5,000. The theatre had just been closed for the night when the fire was discovered. Practically all of the picture equipment was destroyed.

The Columbia Theatre on Michigan avenue, Indiana Harbor, has been bought by Alex Manta, formerly cashier of the Princess Theatre at Whiting, and Michael Kozacik, formerly cashier of the United States National Bank at Indiana Harbor. Manta and Kozacik bought the theatre from George Wallcis for $15,000. The new owners plan to extensively remodel and redecorate it during the summer months.

The Michigan City Theatre Corporation, which built the new Tivoli Theatre in Michigan City, was made defendant in a suit for $5,000 damages, filed in the Circuit Court at Laporte Friday by William Edward Levey. Mr. Levey asserted that he was engaged as fiscal agent for the corporation and was to sell its common stock. He said he sold $50,000 worth of stock and alleges that officers of the corporation broke their contract with him.

Kuzon Buys Buffalo Theatre; Dinner to George E. Williams

The Linden Theatre, on Jefferson street, near High, has been sold to William Kuzon, a newcomer in the picture business. The Linden has been managed by George E. Williams, president of the Western New York unit of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc. Mr. Williams and the entire operating staff will remain at the Linden for the time being. The house was purchased from Nelson T. Barrett for $38,000. The sale includes the entire property. Last Friday evening Mr. Williams received a telegram at 8 o'clock asking him to appear at Jefferson Hall for an important meeting. He hurried over to the rendezvous and to his great surprise found that his business associates along Jefferson street, in the vicinity of the Linden, had arranged a good old-fashioned German banquet with all the trimmings. When George recovered consciousness he learned it was all in the form of a farewell session in his honor.

Despite weeks of appeal which may be summed up in "Put Sidney on the Map," Sidney, N. Y., voters last week decided overwhelmingly that the map is all right and gave the Sunday movie movement in the town its quietus by a vote of 661 to 235.

Helen Miller, screen star, of Hollywood, is named as co-respondent in the divorce action brought by Mrs. Edna K. Hall against her husband, Carroll N. Hall, of Jamestown, in special term of Supreme Court, Buffalo. "The gay lights of Lacrosta Court, in Hollywood, got him," says the wife. "She wants my money," says the husband. The hearing is expected to continue for several weeks. The husband incidentally names Dr. Horace Findlay, of China, in his counter-charges.

One of the finest and largest theatre organs in the Southern Tier has been installed in the Lyric Theatre, Endicott, and was heard for the first time Sunday.

Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette Square Theatre, has returned from a trip to New York City, where he signed up a number of big attractions for the spring and summer season at the big Buffalo house.

Fords draw the line nowhere down in Salamanca. One ran wild one evening last week and dashed right into the lobby of the Andrews Theatre. Probably thought Otto Schroeppel was running a garage instead of a theatre. Much damage was done by the Henry-built contraption.

Frank Aprile is planning to reopen the Rex Theatre, in Geneseo, N. Y., the middle of April, after completely reconstructing and redecorating the house. Al Becker has installed two Simplex projection machines and one spotlight.

Who Knows?

If someone knows a perfectly good recipe as to how picture theatre owners in Schenectady, N. Y., a manufacturing town in every sense of the word, can brace up the last of the week, it will be acceptable. Business starts off fine on Sunday and Monday, and then proceeds to dwindle. Everything under the sun has been tried, such as amateur nights on Wednesday or Thursday, contests, etc., but with little success.

There have been a couple more robberies in picture theatres in the Queen City of the Lakes. The Seneca, formerly the Red Jacket, had its strong box rifled, and the Elk, on Elk street, was entered, but only a small sum was obtained.

J. S. Bachman will open the Castile Theatre, in Olcott Beach, N. Y., April 1. On the same date the Arcadia Theatre, in Newfane, N. Y., will close. The closing is caused by the proximity of the town to Olcott Beach, a popular summer resort on Lake Ontario. Summer resort! Sounds good, doesn't it?

Harris Lumberg is doing so much business at the Lumberg Theatre, in Niagara Falls, N. Y., where he is showing Paramount pictures exclusively, that he has cornered enough money to install two new Simplex projection machines of the latest types. Al Becker, of Buffalo, got the order. Oh, yes, and six new music stands! Al has also installed two Sunlight arc lamps on the Simplex machines in the Shea Court Street Theatre, Buffalo. Looks like Mr. Becker is assured of at least one new Easter suit.

Harry E. Jenner has been appointed manager of the Fisher Theatre, in Seneca Falls, N. Y., which has been leased by Ross A. McVoy. Mr. Jenner was associated with Mr. McVoy in the erection of the Glen Theatre, in Watkins Glen, and later was engaged in the exchange end of the business in Buffalo. Mr. Jenner succeeds Clifford G Groat, resigned.

The first arrest in what the police declare is the beginning of a campaign to eliminate disturbances in the picture theatres in Johnson City, N. Y., was made last week, when a lad was arrested for creating a disturbance in the Endwell Theatre. Justice Whitman F. Ingerson said that the village ordinance under which the lad is held provides only a small fine, but that the state measure provides a severe sentence. Hereafter persons arrested on similar charges will be charged with violation of this state law, according to his honor.

James Cardina has started work on his new theatre in the Kensington section of Buffalo. Mr. Cardina also operates the Glen Theatre, in Williamsville, N. Y.

The first week at the Criterion under the Mark-Strand management was fairly successful. Ben Holmes, the manager, however, expects that after the Easter holidays are over business will pick up noticeably. The opening picture, "Knighthood," had been shown in several other theatres previous to the Criterion presentation. This kept many folks away during opening week.

Walter Dion was in charge of projection at the two shows given in the 106th and 174th armories by Thornton W. Burgess, author of the Bedtime Stories in the Buffalo Evening News and newspapers throughout the country. The shows were given under the auspices of the News. Mr. Dion had to erect booths in both armories and install standard projection machines on account of the extreme length of throw.

"Robin Hood" is coming to Buffalo at last. The Fairbanks production opens at Shea's Hippodrome Sunday, April 1, and Manager Vincent McFaul expects to have them sitting on the rafters, on the balcony rail on top the organ console, in the orchestra chairs and other available space.

Arthur Ashley, screen and stage star, who recently appeared at the Lafayette Square as a deputy sheriff awaited him in the wings to accompany him back to his private suite in the jail, is still "in." Arthur is of the opinion that jail life isn't bad at all. Some difficulty over alimony is causing his incarceration.

A. G. McCallum, for nine years manager of the old Golden Palace, in Buffalo, has been appointed manager of Fay's Theatre, in Rochester. He succeeds John J. O'Neill, who has been appointed house manager at the Eastman.

Rochester

Arch C. McCallum, who long has been treasurer and assistant manager of Fay's Theatre, has been appointed manager of the house, succeeding John J. O'Neill, who recently resigned to become house manager at the Eastman. Mr. McCallum began his theatrical career in 1901 as treasurer of the old Cook's Opera House, now the Family Theatre, of which W. B. McCallum, his brother, was the manager. After five years of service here, he took over the management of the old Bijou Dream, one of the first picture houses in Rochester. From this house he went to Buffalo as manager of the Golden Palace, which he managed for nine years. At the end of this period he returned to Rochester to accept the position of assistant manager of the Victoria Theatre, of which his brother-in-law, John J. Farren, was manager. In the meantime, W. B. McCallum had been called to the management of the theatres elsewhere.

When the old Shubert Theatre here, now Fay's, was made into a picture and vaudeville house and renamed the Avon, W. B. McCallum disposed of theatrical holdings he had in Providence and came here to manage the Avon. Arch rejoined his brother as treasurer and assistant manager, and has remained in this house in the double capacity ever since, following his transfer to the proprietorship of Mr. Fay and during the management of Fred M. Sarr and Mr. O'Neill.

Victor A. Warren, manager of the Strand Theatre in Messina, N. Y., is touring overseas and writes from Algeria that they are now showing Nazimova in "Camille" there. It's a hard life for some of these millionaire exhibitors.

The first public appearance of the new Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, composed of the present personnel of the Eastman Theatre orchestra and about twenty-five picked musicians, took place on Wednesday evening of this week in the Eastman Theatre. Arthur Alexander conducted. The affair was a huge success.

A. W. Root, former manager of the Palace Theatre in Olean, N. Y., has returned from Kalamazoo, Mich., and now is in Rochester seeking a connection in the theatre business.

Bobby Barrett, who has been night clerk at the Hotel Seneca, in which capacity he has helped many tired film men to their rooms at all hours following midnight, has decided to quit the hotel game and try a whirl at the theatre business. Bobby has been appointed assistant manager at Fay's Theatre.

Because of the proximity of the entrance to an escalator in the Gordon Theatre in Clinton avenue north, now closed, and the resultant short interval in which to adjust her vision to the darkened condition of the theatre, Jennie M. Wells of West Albany stumbled and fell in getting on the escalator on October 31, 1921, receiving injuries for which she seeks $25,000 damages, according to a complaint filed against the Regorson Corporation, owners of the theatre.

Schenectady's Car Service Costs Exhibitors Thousands

Street car service in Schenectady, N. Y., is costing the picture theatres thousands of dollars a year. The service is practically demoralized. Following the introduction of one-man cars in this city months ago, and a threatened strike among the employes of the company, which failed to materialize, at least openly, but which many believe has become a silent strike, the service has gradually become worse and worse. Every owner of a motion picture theatre in the city is complaining over a service which has caused a serious letting down of business.

Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the State, which was opened by the Mark Strand Company only a few weeks ago, and which represents an expenditure of over $500,000, declared a day or so ago that one person, in giving his reason for not attending more picture shows, declared that with the present street car service something more than an hour was consumed in getting home. The same story is heard at the Strand, the Crescent, the Barcli, the Albany and others.

There is a cat at the Strand in Schenectady, which pays absolutely no attention to the pictures as they are flashed upon the screen, but which takes vast enjoyment when the organ begins to play. Whether or not the cat imagines that it is the purring of some giant feline mate, is beyond Manager Shirley's conception. At any rate, it's good luck, to have a cat wander in and make his home in a picture theatre, and certainly luck has come to Mr. Shipley during the last six months. The cat is generally found squatting contentedly in the rear of the house.

The Strand, in Newburgh, owned and operated by W. W. Berinstein, of Albany, N. Y., opened a week ago with "Manslaughter." The house was only acquired a short time ago. It is being managed by Harry Berinstein, formerly of the Palace, in Troy.

The State in Schenectady featured the past week a picture produced by the General Electric Company and entitled "The Wizardry of Wireless." The picture was run in connection with the feature, "Racing Hearts." In a city where practically one-third of the population is employed in the General Electric Works, the picture drew heavily.

After decreasing admission prices some weeks ago, in an effort to stimulate business, the new State as well as the Barcli have just seen fit to increase prices. At the State, the matinees are now drawing 15, 20 and 30 cents, while night prices rule from 25 in the balcony to 35 in the orchestra and 50 cents in the loges. At the Barcli, a 22-cent admission price was found by J. J. Walker, owner of the house, to be too low for first-runs, and the price has now been raised to 25 cents, including the tax.

Chaplin in "The Pilgrim" has been selected by William Shirley of the Strand for Easter Sunday and the six days that follow.

W. W. Berinstein will start work on his new house in Little Falls on April 15. It will seat 1,400 and cost about $150,000.

The orchestra at the State in Schenectady, which is weekly featured with marked success, will give a most elaborate musical program on Easter Sunday. Pola Negri in "Bella Donna" will be used at the State for one-half of Easter week, with "The Christian" taking care of the other four days.

"The Hottentot," according to Paul Alberts, of the Albany in Schenectady, made more money for him than any picture shown during the winter. "Burning Sands" went across well last week and Mr. Alberts anticipates big business with "The Third Alarm" in a tieup with the Schenectady fire department.

There was a style show given at the State in Schenectady last week with one of the local department stores furnishing the models. Its was the first time anything like this has been attempted in Schenectady, and the house cashed in with little or no trouble and expense. Along with the show, "Dr. Jack," the Coue picture and a news reel were shown.

The State made a good move in Schenectady recently when it abandoned its outside box office. Proctor's, next door, is still maintaining its outside box office but has a more sheltered position. There is a fight on between the State and Proctor's for patronage, even though the latter combines vaudeville. As against "Racing Hearts" at the State last week, Proctor's gave Betty Compson in "The White Flower" and Lois Wilson in "Broad Daylight."

"The chain theatres are able to get their pictures," said J. J. Walker, owner and manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, N. Y., in discussing business conditions. "Schenectady is over-rated by film companies and they are charging too much for pictures that will draw well. I think, however, that I have found at least a temporary solution in booking 'Fighting Blood' and 'The Leather-pushers' and alternating them weekly."

Ben Stern, formerly treasurer of the Empire in Albany, has been named as house treasurer of the State in Schenectady, succeeding Herman Vineberg, who has been transferred to the Troy, in Troy, N. Y.

There has been some little picking up of business in Schenectady during the last two or three weeks. It is not what it should be, however. With the advent of summer, not much relief is looked for before Fall.

There will be a change of organists at the Barcli in Schenectady within the next two or three weeks.

Paul Alberts of the Albany in Schenectady did considerable in the way of exploitation work prior to a week's run of "The Face on the Bar Room Floor." Through the newspapers, Mr. Alberts succeeded in working up plenty of discussion as to whether or not the author of the poem favored Prohibition. Saturday's paper carried a twenty-inch story describing how the author came to write the poem.

Albany

Exhibitors in the Albany section of New York State are rejoicing. Lent is over and one of the most severe winters in years is a thing of the past. Bookings for May, June and July are heavy. There is every indication that the summer resorts in the Catskills and in Northern New York will be of the record-breaking sort. In smaller places, where the business has been off this Winter, because of impassable highways that kept farmers at home, business is already picking up in wonderful shape. Apparently, the blue days are things of the past.

Lew Fisher, who runs a number of houses along the eastern boundary line, is now dickering for a theatre at Fair Haven, Vt., owned by a Mr. Boland.

Jimmie Chest, of Canajoharie, is esconced in the theatre which he recently took over in Middleburg.

E. L. Griffine of Kinderhook was a visitor at the First National exchange during the past week. Armstrong & Miller, who run Gardner Hall in Troy, were also in town booking.

William Shirley of the Strand in Schenectady, who makes more trips to New York than any exhibitor in this part of the state, was again in the metropolis the past week.

The Woodlawn in Schenectady is closed for the time being.

The Majestic, to be known as the Astor, of Troy, will open on March 31. The new Rose will also open on the same date with "Orphans of the Storm."

WE'LL SAY THIS GIGANTIC LADY IS NO TRIFLE

She may be a Trifling Woman, but she is not a trifle. A look at the hand painted display, with a cutout, used at the Queen Theatre, Galveston, Texas, for the Metro production.

Passion Week Offerings in Boston Reached All Classes

The Passion Week offerings at the Boston theatres have been sufficiently varied to appeal to all classes. Besides those already enumerated, "Grumpy" and "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" have been shown at the State Theatre; Loew's Orpheum Theatre has shown Brandon Tynam in a picturing of "Success," the play in which he scored four years ago; at the Modern Theatre and the Beacon Theatre the programs comprised "While Paris Sleeps," "The ex-Kaiser in Exile" and Nazimova in a picturing of Oscar Wilde's "Salome," somewhat censored for Boston's particular public; "The Drug Traffic" and "Nobody's Money" have divided honors at the Scollay Square Olympia; "The Streets of New York" and "The Broadway Madonna" have scored well at the Washington Theatre; "The Passion Play" was at Tremont Temple; "Robin Hood" was the attraction at Gordon's Washington Street Olympia Theatre; "Brothers Under the Skin" and "Enter Madame" opened the week at the Lancaster Theatre, with "World's Applause" and "All the Brothers Were Valiant" as the closing features; "Fury" and "The Christian" were at the Codman Square Theatre; "The Little Church Around the Corner" and "The Footlight Ranger" were at the Bowdoin Square Theatre, while at the many other smaller houses throughout the greater Boston district, pleasing programs of pictures were presented.

"The Christian" has been showing to big crowds during the week at both the Fenway Theatre and at Gordon's Strand Theatre at Upham's Corner. And speaking of the Fenway Theatre, it is interesting to note that for weeks past it has been crowded to the doors at almost every performance. Located but about 100 yards from Marcus Loew's new State Theatre, it has been getting the overflow from that theatre, as well as its own constituency, and as a result both houses have been enjoying a rare era of prosperity.

The first Boston showing of "The Message of Emile Coue" has been dividing honors during the week with "Mighty Lak a Rose" at Gordon's Capitol Theatre. These two leaders, with Lige Conley in "Casey Jones, Jr." as the comedy feature, have proved a big magnet for the new playhouse in the Allston district of Boston.

A number of stars of the silver screen are expected as guests at the concert and movie ball which Local 186 of the Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators Union is planning to hold in the Springfield Auditorium on the evening of April 18. Novel lighting effects will be a feature of the affair and some startling innovations are being arranged.

The city of Medford, one of Boston's suburbs, is planning to defend the suit brought by the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation to retain its lease on the land in that city for some time past occupied by the corporation as a studio site. This was determined last week following a three-hours' conference attended by Mayor Coolidge, the members of the Water and Sewer Commission, Chairman Edward S. Randall of the Board of Assessors, City Solicitor Guy E. Healey and City Engineer Fred R. Charnock. The Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation claims that the lease for the site, which lies on Wright's Pond boarders, was made in 1917 by the then mayor and board of eldermen of the city for a period of twenty years. The lease provided, the corporation says, for an annual rental of $1,500, with the right to purchase at the end of five year intervals during the term of the lease.

Eugene Simpson, superintendent of janitors for the past fourteen years at Gordon's Olympia Theatre at Lynn, and well known as a breeder of canaries, dropped dead last Monday in the office of the manager of the theatre. He had complained of an attack of indigestion and had been sitting for about five minutes in the office of Manager Finn, when he collapsed. The medical examiner declared death due to heart failure. Simpson left a widow and a mother and two sisters living in Boston.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Evans, one of the well known professors at the Harvard Theological School, endorsed a good movie show as a method of finding amusement and relaxation, in an address in Grandin Hall, Franklin Square House, one evening last week.

A lighted cigarette stub, dropped into some rubbish beneath the stage, is believed to have been responsible for a fire in the Strand Theatre at Valley Falls, Cumberland, R. I., last week. The sprinkler system had begun to operate before the discovery of the fire was made and, when the firemen reached the scene, they extinguished the blaze with the aid of chemicals before much damage had been occasioned.

Boston is much interested to hear the first reports of the new public censorship plan at Springfield, which is expected soon at a meeting of the committee appointed by the Federated Women's Clubs. For several weeks the women have been visiting the theatres and noting the various changes of programs. Each woman has made an individual report on the films she has seen and these will be turned in to the general committee, of which Mrs. Guy M. Peterson is chairman. The committee of clubwomen will continue to attend shows until April 1, when the annual report on the experiment will be written for presentation on May 3 at the annual meeting of the Springfield Federation of Women's Clubs.

Beginning last Monday the Park Theatre, Boston, reverted to its former policy of continuous performances at popular prices. As the opening showing under the new management the Park has been offering "Down to the Sea in Ships," and this production, which packed them in last Fall at the Selwyn Theatre at high prices, has been doing a land-office business.

United States Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts believes that the truest history will be written in the future by the motion picture screen and he is aroused over the fact that no effort is being made by the government to preserve motion picture films of recent events in American history. At the earliest possible moment, the Senator says, he will sponsor legislation which will provide for the collection of historical motion pictures and their preservation in the government archives.

"It is almost unbelievable," said Senator Walsh, "that the preservation of such films as depict the Congressional declaration of war against Germany, the war addresses of President Wilson, the burial of the Unknown Soldier, the session of the armaments' conference, to mention only a few great events, should be left to haphazard storage of commercial companies."

D. A. Silvester, Jr., director of the orchestra in the Plaza Theatre, Worcester, is coming in for a lot of praise these days for his efforts and those of his able associates in providing excellent musical programs for patrons of the Plaza.

The Tuesday Afternoon Club of Brockton had charge of the Sunday night show, March 25, in the Strand Theatre. "The Kingdom Within" was the feature.

C. E. Robbins, manager of the Strand in Worcester, presented a revival week program during Holy Week. The pictures were as follows: Sunday, "Kismet"; Monday, "Manslaughter"; Tuesday, "When Knighthood Was in Flower"; Wednesday, "The Sheik"; Thursday, "The Prisoner of Zenda"; Friday, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"; Saturday, "Tess of the Storm Country."

One of the most talented little girls in Everett is Verna A. West, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. V. L. West. Little Miss West is to become a screen actress, although she is not quite 8 years old. She has gained much prominence as a dramatic reader and fancy dancer of exceptional talent. On March 25 she appeared in the Capitol Theatre, Boston, at the morning entertainment for children. She will go to New York next month, where she will make her debut in films.

Charles Weatherbee, who has lived for 73 years without seeing a motion picture, was introduced to the "coming" style of entertainment by Manager Hayden of the Rialto Theatre, Brockton, at a showing of "The Third Alarm" during the week of March 26. Mr. Weatherbee is a veteran fireman. A story concerning him brought a two-column display headline in a Brockton newspaper.

The Wright Associates, of Worcester, of which Former Mayor George M. Wright is president, will build a theatre in Main street. Title was taken March 20 to a large plot of property on which will be erected a theatre with a seating capacity of between 2,500 and 3,000.

Five professional models appeared in a fashion show as an added feature at the Capitol Theatre in Pittsfield on March 19, 20 and 21.

Under the auspices of a Catholic society of Pittsfield, a film, "The Blasphemer," was presented in the Capitol Theatre, Sunday, March 25. The picture was obtained from the Catholic Art Association of Boston.

Projectionists in Worcester again will join hands with the stage employes for the annual ball, April 6. Jack Hauser is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements. Invitations have been sent to Thomas Meighan, Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Dalton, Antonio Moreno and Agnes Ayres.

Several picture stars have been invited to the concert and ball in Springfield Auditorium on April 18 under the direction of the projectionist and stage employes' unions. John F. Catelee is general chairman of the arrangements committees. Others are: Entertainment, E. B. Webber; programs, J. Louis Lambert; treasurer, Frank E. Fennessy; reception, Frank Walsh and Evan Elia.

The Spa Theatre, Pittsfield, closed March 21. Poor business was given as the cause. The Spa was the only upstairs theatre in the city. It is said that it may be reopened soon under new management.

Connecticut Clergy Against Extending Hours of Theatres

Proposed legislation in Connecticut is discussed frankly in a bulletin compiled by the State Federation of Churches. Regarding Sunday legislation the federation has taken the following stand on theatres: "Disapproving any amendment of the present law extending the hours within which motion pictures may be shown commercially on Sunday."

Officials of a picture concern in Hartford, Conn., plan to erect a film theatre in Indian Orchard, a suburb of Springfield. According to present specifications the house will have a seating capacity of 1,000. An organ will be installed. Several sites for the building are being considered.

The House Judiciary Committee returned a favorable report on the bill which would exempt owners of picture theatres within the state from liability where children under 14 years of age are admitted under misrepresentation.

Marion runs across a "red hot politician" in Waterbury in the person of Peter W. Murphy, manager of Poli's Strand Theatre and an employe of Mr. Poli for fifteen years.

"We expect," says Marion, "to some day see banners flying, red torches burning, a big parade and everybody cheering for the new mayor, Pete, for that's his ambition.

Murphy is one of the leading workers in the Board of Charities, an Elk and a maker of lasting friendships.

For twenty-six years Harry E. Parsons has been connected with Poli, the New England theatre magnate. He has managed every Poli house in Waterbury, Conn., and now is general manager of them. Waterbury is his home town and "the greatest spot on earth." Harry well remembers when he used to play "Steiner's Imperial Moving Pictures" and when Ada Jones sang illustrated songs. He is a big Elk. This dope comes from our own H. S. Marion, who has been visiting Waterbury, and Marion adds: "Harry knows nearly all there is to know about the show business, and nobody ever goes wrong when they follow Harry's advice."

I. J. Hoffman is owner of the Capitol Theatre, Ansonia, Conn., and also practises law in New Haven. The building of the Capitol two years ago cost him about $200,000. It has a wonderful stage that could be used by the biggest road attractions. At present it gives high class vaudeville and the very best in pictures. Especially fine are the electrical effects and the orchestra and organ delight many music lovers.

"This house is hard to beat," Marion writes. "Morris F. Lane is manager and responsible for some of the best lobby displays I've ever seen. Mr. Hoffman also owns another Ansonia picture theatre, the Tremont, which is run by H. Cohen, who is Mr. Lane's assistant. Hoffman also owns the Princess in Hartford."

Henry Needles, manager of Hartford's Princess, has spent practically his entire life in the show business and, according to Marion, is one of the smartest in it. Give him a little lumber, a few pieces of cloth, some paint and a paint brush, says Marion, and "he can build the prettiest set any audience would want to see. Needles has been all over the country as theatre manager. He has just bought a $4,000 machine that, in the olden days, meant we forgot how many beers. The Princess seats 700 and plays to 5,000 daily. That's going some."

Portland Me. Theatre Is Involved in Equity Suit

Preliminary hearing of an equity suit brought by Paul C. Lunt and others against Elias M. Loew of Lynn, involving the lease of the Casco Theatre at Portland, Me., was begun before Justice Scott Wilson at Portland last week. Initial testimony covered an agreement entered into between Paul G. Lunt and Elias M. Loew on August 17, 1922, whereby the former leased the theatre to the latter for a period of three years, possession to be taken on November 20, 1922. Between August 17 and November 1 Lunt and Loew discussed the matter of the organization of the Casco Amusement Company by Loew, and the carrying on of the business under that corporation name. The lease was drawn from Lunt, et als., to the Casco Amusement Company, and signed by all parties on November 1. On November 20 the corporation took possession of the premises and is now in possession.

On February 17 last a notice was served on the Casco Amusement Company to vacate the premises on the 19th of March. Possession of the premises was taken on March 19, and a restraining order was issued, through the bill in equity, upon petition of the Casco Amusement Company, asking for a temporary injunction and the specific performance of the original agreement and the delivery of the lease to the corporation. Lunt claims that the theatre property has deteriorated materially since Loew assumed possession, and that proper care of the property is not taken. He also charges that Loew abrogated the original agreement on August 17, by substituting the corporation for himself in entering into the new agreement.

Tax Modified

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

Hartford, Conn., Mar. 28.

Decision to recommend the continuance of the state tax on tickets of admission, with some modifications, was reached late Tuesday by the Legislative Committee on Finance. Bills introduced by Minority Leader Fenton and Representative Schatz, of Hartford for repeal of the admission tax in its entirety will be unfavorably reported. Exemption from the tax of theatres and other places of amusement to which the tax is 10 cents or less, will be provided for in a state tax department bill, which will be favorably reported by the committee. Motion pictures in small towns of the state chiefly will benefit by this new bill.

Motion pictures singularly are exempt from any legislation during the present session of the Vermont Legislature.

Baltimore

One of the cleverest result-getting tie-ups recently arranged in Baltimore between a picture theatre and a manufacturing concern was done during the week of March 19 by Thomas D. Doriero, general manager of the combined Whitehurst Interests in Baltimore. Mr. Soriero arranged with the Hendler Creamery, manufacturers of ice cream in Baltimore, to have "Mad Love" sundaes served at each of their 1,800 dealers in Baltimore and vicinity when "Mad Love" was the attraction during that week at the Century Theatre. Then a story was written and published in the Century News and Program giving the facts and explaining that the sundaes would be made according to Pola Negri's own favorite recipe.

Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street, under the management of A. M. Seligman, is gradually changing its name to Nixon's Theatre by asking the co-operation of the newspapers. Each week the Victoria part of the name in the editorial layouts and ad copy is made a little smaller until it will finally be eliminated entirely.

C. Blinn, who has been in the theatre and picture business for twenty years, has been appointed manager of the Peabody Theatre, 11 East North avenue, succeeding R. Orrell. Mr. Blinn has just returned to Baltimore, his home town, from California.

Western Pennsylvania Votes Protest Against State Tax

At the regular monthly luncheon of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, held at the General Forbes Hotel, Pittsburgh, Friday, March 16, the members present voiced their protests against the bill presented in the State Legislature, which would tax theatre owners one per cent. on their gross receipts. President Jerome Casper urged the men present to write to their representatives in Legislature, protesting against the passage of the bill. President Casper said, in part:

"Men, I am pleading with you to get busy and either interview personally or write to your representatives to kill this bill. We are suffering enough hardships now, and the passage of this bill will be another thorn in our sides. I have spent several days in Harrisburg, and found that there are other bills pending that should concern each one of us. We can't sit back and 'let George do it.' Every last one of us has to work hard, and let our representatives know that we are very much against these handicaps they are foisting upon us."

Harry Hayward, convention manager, reported progress and that plans for the third annual convention of the organization to be held at the General Forbes Hotel on April 16, 17 and 18 were being formulated in a smooth manner. Announcement was made that the convention banquet will be held on the evening of April 17. Ticket prices as follows: Gentlemen, $5; ladies and children, $3.

The meeting was one of the shortest held in some time, adjourning at 2:10 p. m.

O. A. Mardoff, owner of the Strand Theatre, New Kensington, died in his home Saturday a week ago, a victim of pneumonia. He was ill but five days. Deceased was very popular in the local film section and his demise is regretted by a host of friends.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new Selzer Film Building at 1014-16 Forbes street, which upon completion will be the most modern film exchange building in the territory.

Michigan Censor Bill Dying; Theatre Robberies in Detroit

It is not likely that the Condon censorship bill will get very far at this session of the Michigan Legislature. At the recent hearing held at Lansing, before the committee on state affairs in the Senate, addresses against the bill were made by C. C. Pettijohn and Alfred J. Murphy, the latter legal advisor for the Michigan Exhibitors Association. There is little sentiment for the bill. It has not been reported out and in all likelihood will "die" in committee. The strong argument put up by Messrs. Pettijohn and Murphy was that exhibitors themselves are censoring film, so is the state association and that there is a state law penalizing those who show pictures that are not clean.

John H. Kunsky, of the Kunsky chain of theatres, is in Los Angeles and all the important points along the Pacific Coast. He writes the World correspondent that he is having a most enjoyable time and will be back some time in April.

Detroit has had a series of Sunday and early Monday morning robberies the past month. A few weeks ago the Colonial Theatre was robbed; the next Sunday it was the Virginia Park Theatre and on Sunday, March 18, the Regent was robbed of $4,229. Yeggmen entered the theatre by a skylight, bound and gagged the night watchman and blew the safe, making their escape. As a result, quite a number of the smaller theatres have taken out burglary insurance and extra efforts are being made to watch the box-office and the receipts.

Paul Schlossman, of the Regent Theatre, Muskegon, contemplates installing a musical tab show when the picture season ends June 1.

J. W. Goodspeed, of the Isis and Idle Hour Theatres, Grand Rapids, is back from a trip to Texas and the South.

The New Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, will open about the middle of August with a straight picture policy along the lines of the other big first-run houses throughout the country. The theatre seats about 1,800. W. A. Wurzburg, general manager, will shortly announce the house manager, who will do all of the booking.

The Orpheum Theatre, Grand Rapids, which was almost completely destroyed by fire on December 30, reopened March 24 with its former policy of musical comedy attractions and feature pictures.

Harold Frank, manager of the Majestic-Colonial Amusement Company, operating theatres in Jackson and Hillsdale, announces the appointment of Mrs. Larry Hayes as manager of the Dawn Theatre, Hillsdale. This house was formerly managed by Larry Hayes, who died recently as a result of burns suffered in a hotel fire.

W. S. Butterfield, proprietor of the Butterfield circuit of theatres in Michigan, was married on March 15 in Chicago to Miss Irene Dudley, whose home is in Terre Haute, Ind., and who formerly played in stock at several of the Butterfield theatres.

The Capitol Theatre, Jackson, celebrated its first anniversary the week of March 18. W. S. McLaren, general manager and owner, says the first year was a most successful one and he is planning on elaborate presentations for the second year. Mr. McLaren is president of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association.

Phil Braubin, who operates the Pasadena Theatre, Detroit, has acquired the Merrick, giving him two houses.

Sam Nathanson, formerly connected with several Detroit theatres, has reopened the Favorite Theatre on Gratiot avenue and will show pictures.

St. Louis

Harry Greenman, manager of the William Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, celebrated his twenty-fifth birthday on March 13. Born in the Volena district, Russia, on March 13, 1898, Greenman came to America with his parents in 1908 and was educated in the public schools of Buffalo, N. Y. In 1918 he became manager of the Victoria Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., after having held miscellaneous theatre jobs in Buffalo. The same year he managed the Pershing Theatre in St. Louis and later took charge of a Fox theatre in Denver, Colo. He returned to St. Louis in 1921 and took over the management of the Liberty. He has many friends in this city.

John W. Radford, of the Opera House, Thayer, Ill., recently lost his brother, who was electrocuted accidentally while at work.

The Grand Theatre, Alton, Ill., is again under the management of John Janakopolos, who built the house. Prior to March 10 the house was conducted by Jim Reilly, who also owns the Princess Theatre.

Jim Drake, who contemplates opening the Temple Theatre in Alton, Ill., as a picture house, has been blocked by the city officials who contend the house does not comply with all the city ordinances. Drake plans to make changes that will obliterate the objections.

Cleveland

Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., have tendered the use of the State Theatre on Sunday mornings to the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and services are being held there every Sunday morning.

Cleveland neighborhood theatres are adding to their programs more and more as the season goes on. Last fall they introduced amateur nights for children and professional tryout nights for adults. This resulted in giving them at least three good nights a week, including Sunday.

Now they are putting on vaudeville a couple of nights a week, and several houses are working the "country store" idea. This is the first time in years the country store plan has been introduced.

It is not a common thing for fifteen or twenty neighborhood theatres to have amateur nights on a single night. And the public certainly enjoys them, just as much as the amateurs who are always looking for a chance to "shine" before the public.

Findlay, Ohio, Fight Bitter; Richards Defies Authorities

A special from Findlay, Ohio, which city occupies a prominent position in the Sunday movie fight zone, indicates that all theatre managers have reaffirmed their decision to at once open their theatres on the Sabbath, despite the fact that they are under indictment in the Common Pleas Court for alleged violation of the law in having operated on Sundays. Programs for the Sunday offerings have been announced.

This marks the first attempt at Sunday operation of the movie houses since January, when the various managers were taken into the Mayor's Court by the Civic Welfare League and bound over to the grand jury, with the indictments resulting. Arraignments under these indictments have not taken place, although they were returned February 28.

A disposition has been evidenced to await the action of the Ohio Supreme Court, which will decide April 6 whether or not to review the ruling of the Common Pleas Court and Third District Appellate Courts in holding Sunday showings to be illegal.

The movie houses in Findlay have been closed on Sunday's since January under order of Mayor Rodabaugh, who issued a decree to this effect after he had bound the managers over to the grand jury. Rodabaugh, however, has recently made it known that he would in the future require all signers of affidavits against the movie managers to also sign warrants for the arrest of all others alleged to be violating the Sunday closing laws, regardless of the line of business in which they may be engaged.

Despite the determination of all managers to operate Sunday, only Walter K. Richards opened his two houses. He was immediately arrested, jailed and released on bond late Sunday night. He issued orders from the cell that both his theatres should positively be kept open. The projectionists were also arrested when the houses reopened and were replaced by other operators. In all, six projectionists were arrested, but the houses operated until the regular Sunday night closing time.

Mayor Rodabaugh showed a clear case of cold feet by failing to arrest other Sunday violators, as he had promised to do.

M. F. Tobias, former manager of the Cincinnati branch of the American Releasing Company, was recently arrested in Cleveland, Ohio, on a charge of embezzlement. The arrest of Tobias followed a search conducted by Chief Emmet Kirgan, of the Cincinnati detective force, together with operatives of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, after an official of the American Releasing Company swore to the warrant charging the ex-manager with embezzling funds in excess of $1,500, the results of padding his expense account and making false entries. Tobias has been returned to Cincinnati for trial.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," which had a week's run at the Grand Opera House between dates of regular run road shows, did a phenomenal business. The Cincinnati screening marked the initial showing of the film in Ohio, and Manager Unger, of the Grand, reports that the takings greatly exceeded his highest estimate. Unger arranged with the principals of the various high schools whereby students were enabled to see the film at special rates, certain sections of the theatre being set aside for the students. This is considered a decided compliment, since the schools have heretofore not been inclined to hook up with pictures of any kind shown in the local houses.

The Liberty Theatre Company, at Newport, Ky., just across the river from Cincinnati, has been granted a building permit for the erection of a new picture theatre at Pike street and Madison avenue. The estimated cost of the new house is placed at $150,000, with an additional $100,000 for the interior furnishings.

Managers McMahon and Jackson, of the Lyric Theatre, have announced a new schedule of prices for their house. Hereafter the admission will be 30 cents top, with a 20-cent price for the balcony. The booking of big pictures will continue as heretofore, and the policy of the house will be otherwise unchanged. The Lyric recently resumed pictures after the Dunbar Opera Company moved out following an unsuccessful season of musical comedy repertoire.

"Robin Hood," which was originally booked for a week's showing, held over from week to week at the Strand Theatre, the total run covering four weeks. Manager Libson claims that this breaks the record for continuous showing in a house the size of the Strand. The picture showed to capacity houses during the entire engagement. Manager Libson tied up with the Times-Star, a leading daily, whereby bona-fide pupils of the public, private and parochial schools were admitted for 25 cents, as against the regular admission price of 60 cents, the only requirement being that the pupil obtain a special form of order from the Times-Star and present it at the Strand box office. The time of admittance at this special price was limited to 6 p. m. during the third week of the run, whereas during the final week the special rate tickets were good at any time. The Times-Star gave the plan unlimited space in their daily editions.

Arthur L. Riesenberger, manager of Coney Island, a summer amusement resort located twenty miles down the Ohio River, has resigned the management after sixteen years' consecutive service. There is a rumor that Riesenberger may break into the picture game.

Manager Schwalm played the Peerless Hawaiians in addition to his regular picture program at the Rialto, Hamilton, Ohio, recently. The dusky natives from the Pacific proved an excellent drawing card. During the same period Directing Manager Meyer, of the Palace, featured "Coletta" in person, who interpreted some of the dances of the current Mae Murray picture, "Broadway Rose."

The Rev. Richard R. Fillbrandt, of the Washington Avenue Evangelical Church, took for the text of one of his recent Sunday sermons the attitude and relation of the church toward the movies and other forms of amusements. According to his theory many good people have been kept out of the church and unnatural laws have been enacted because of the church's antagonistic attitude toward amusements in general.

Canadian Theatres Playing More English-Made Pictures

More English-made productions are being introduced in Canada following the success of British pictures which were offered early in 1923. During the week of March 19, big crowds attended the Allen Theatre, Toronto, to see "Squibs Wins the Calcutta Sweep" and the feature was given an extended run of another week.

During the week of March 26, Manager Miller of Pantages Theatre, the largest playhouse in Canada, offered the Toronto public "A Sister to Assist 'Er," an English feature which, it was announced, was being released simultaneously in England and in Canada.

With these two pictures as current attractions, two of the six large downtown theatres of Toronto were presenting English features during the week of March 26. This was the first time on record that two English pictures were enjoying first run engagements together in Toronto.

Arrangements have been made for the rebuilding of the Majestic Theatre of Stratford, Ontario, during the early spring. The present structure is to be incorporated in the new theatre which will seat 1,350. The house will have a frontage of 70 feet while new ground at the rear will be utilized, giving the theatre an added depth of 90 feet. A 32-foot stage will be one of the new features but the house will be used primarily for pictures.

A brand new picture theatre seating 800 people and costing $60,000 has been opened at Brampton, Ontario. The Brampton Theatre, which was constructed by T. H. Moorehead, is a community enterprise and was formally opened by Mayor H. W. Dawson. B. Kingstone Hall of Toronto was largely responsible for the establishment of the new theatre, it is understood.

M. H. MacDonald, former manager of the Bijou Theatre, Nanaimo, B. C., has secured a lease on the Nanaimo Opera House and has reopened it as a picture theatre.

The Russell Theatre, the one legitimate theatre of Ottawa, the Canadian capital, will have a "season" of special picture attractions starting after Easter. A series of both American and English productions have been booked for presentation at the Russell Theatre under the direction of John T. Moxley, lessee, who was formerly manager of Allen's Regent Theatre, Ottawa. These include "The Game of Life," "A Royal Divorce," "A Little Child Shall Lead Them" and "The Christian."

Capt. F. W. Goodale, manager of Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, was the chief speaker at the dinner of the Lions Club of Ottawa which was held in the Chateau Laurier, Tuesday evening, March 20, the subject of his address being "Aeronautics."

Eddie Charlton, formerly with the Princess Theatre, Montreal, and a veteran Canadian theatre manager, has resigned as manager of the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, after having charge of that theatre for five months or more.

Jack Kennedy, manager of Allen's Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, arranged special service for patrons and others during the recent world's series professional hockey matches between Ottawa and Vancouver, B. C., teams when he had a direct wire bulletin service to the Regent on the scores. Not only were these flashed on the screen at intervals or otherwise announced, but the results were given over the telephone to all who called up the theatre. Many took advantage of the telephone service while the theatre itself was crowed on match nights to see the show and get the returns.

Carolina Exhibitors Await Next Move of Music Trust

"We have filed our answers and are awaiting the next move by the music trust," declared Henry B. Varner, Lexington, N. C., when questioned as to the present status of the fifty-odd suits against North Carolina exhibitors for infringing the music copyright laws.

Mr. Varner declares that the best legal talent in the state is handling the defense for the Carolina theatre owners and they are confident of ultimate victory. Six attorneys, among the strongest in North Carolina, prepared the answers in each of the individual complaints and all is in readiness for trial of the matters. However, it is declared by Mr. Varner that it may be several months until the suits are reached by the federal courts of Greensboro and Raleigh, in which districts all of the suits are docketed.

The young son of Ralph H. DeBruler, manager of Craver's Broadway, Charlotte, will have active charge of Craver's new Broadway, just opened in Columbia, S. C. Young DeBruler, it is declared, is just like his father—a keen showman, although tender in years, and is expected to develop into another phenom in the show world.

The many home town friends in Wilmington, N. C., of Marx S. Nathan, for several years identified with the various distributing agencies sponsored by Fred B. Warren, and for some time New York exchange manager for Associated Producers, were very much interested in recent newspaper accounts of his rich oil strike in Arkansas about two weeks ago. In association with his brother a virgin field was opened up and the first well came in a gusher that was a sensation. Marx was in Wilmington recently en route for the Western city.

John F. Carroll, formerly manager of the Imperial, Asheville, has left that post to become identified with the Victory and Bonita theatres, Tampa, Fla., in a managerial capacity.

James M. Sulke, of New York City, formerly owner and proprietor of the Grand and Victoria theatres, Wilmington, N. C., before these houses were taken over by the Howard-Wells interests, is spending some time in Wilmington on business.

Percy W. Wells, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., is back from a business trip in connection with one of the large corporations outside the motion picture business with which he is identified.

Phelps Sasseen, of the Lyric, Easley, S. C., has left the theatre in charge of Mrs. Sasseen and accepted a position on the road with Al Lichtman.

Joe Adams, of the Fairfax, Miami, Fla., is vacationing in Asheville, N. C.

Milwaukee "Movie" Battle to Be Fought Out at Polls

The Shorewood movie battle will be fought out at the polls on April 3. The Gold Coast village adjoining Milwaukee decided upon this course of action to determine whether a commercial motion picture house shall invade its boundaries when, at a recent caucus, two slates of candidates, one for and the other against the movie project, were chosen to make the race for the village board. Upon the completion of the board depends, to a great extent, the future of movies in the village, since it is a foregone conclusion that one of its first steps upon reorganization will be to take a definite stand on the row.

For some time previous to the caucus the threat had been made that only those members opposed to a theatre in the village would be nominated. As a result, when the meeting opened, those in favor of allowing the Kel Nau Amusement Company to proceed with the plans for a show house lost no time in making their nominations.

Meanwhile the proposed movie invasion has stirred up a virtual hornets' nest in the village. The matter is being discussed in the churches, school, in the homes, on the street corners and, according to the village paper, has resulted even in splitting families.

With four injunctions pending in the courts as a result of the fight, it is considered doubtful that the bench will be able to clear up the situation without long delay, and for that reason many hope that the election will settle the matter.

One of the injunctions, obtained by a taxpayer favorable to the commercial theatre, charges that undesirable pictures are now being shown in the school under the plan sponsored by the theatre opponents. He cites a case where his child attended a show at the schoolhouse which was heralded as an educational program and at which so many murders were depicted that the child could not sleep at night.

Petitions and counter petitions are being circulated and private polls are being taken by the few stores in the village. The Shorewood Pharmacy, which conducted such a poll, announced that eight out of every ten persons voting favored a picture house.

Efforts to obtain a modification of the ban which prohibits children under 12 years of age from attending theatres in Milwaukee during the scarlet fever epidemic have failed and as a result every day will be "blue Sunday" for the kiddies for at least another ten days or two weeks.

Headed by Walter F. Baumann, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, a group of exhibitors conferred with the health commissioner in an effort to open the houses again to the children. Dr. Ruhland expressed his gratitude for the co-operation movie men have given him despite the great loss to them, but pleaded for an extension of the ban. The exhibitors, after being told how great their help had been in reducing the number of scarlet fever cases, agreed to continue to bar children.

Meanwhile those theatres which have been catering to the youngsters are suffering considerably. This situation applies particularly to the outskirt houses, many of which have been in the habit of staging special kiddie matinees. One of the houses hardest hit is the New Milwaukee, managed by George Fischer. Mr. Fischer has been entertaining between 750 and 1,000 children every Saturday with special programs featuring Punch and Judy shows, community singing and pictures adapted to the youngsters.

Taking leading parts in the recent observation of Style Week in Milwaukee were the Tivoli and Regent theatres, located on the northwest side of the city. Both houses staged elaborate programs featuring living models. At the Tivoli, W. Schoen, manager, was assisted in arranging the program by E. J. Weisfeldt, manager of Saxe's Strand, who has had unusual success with style shows in his downtown house in the past. The orchestra was increased for the week and eight living models took part in the program. The Regent Theatre, managed by Fred Seegert, featured eighteen living models in a gorgeous display of the latest in spring gowns.

Walter F. Baumann, executive director of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, has been confined to his home for a week as a result of an attack of la grippe.

Minneapolis

Al Steffes, president of the Minnesota division, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is making plans for the state convention which will be held the latter part of April. Tentative date for the opening of the convention is April 24. Mr. Steffes said this week that the convention plans have not been completed and the program will not be announced for at least a week.

Joseph M. Bransky, chief of Northwest narcotic agents, is inclined to frown on present releases of "dope" pictures. He declined to support the exploitation of one here recently because the picture was declared by him to be a poor moral preachment against the use of drugs. He criticized the producers for the lack of realism in the picture. Mr. Bransky, however, said he is willing to back a picture with real moral appeal, and one which pictures the dope traffic as it really is.

Exhibitors and exchangemen hope that the Spring is here, following the severe blizzard of last week which practically paralyzed traffic and made it impossible for the exchanges to get prints to the exhibitors on scheduled time. Many theatres in North Dakota and Minnesota were showless last Sunday because of the storm. Normal service was resumed within two days after the storm.

Two Minnesota theatre changes were announced this week. W. A. Bourdage, of Duluth, has taken the management of the Palm Theatre at Two Harbors, Minn., while G. G. McGinnis, who formerly operated the Fotoplay Theatre, Watertown, S. D., has purchased the Cozy Theatre at Belle Plaine, Minn.

Several new summer resort theatres will be established at Northern Minnesota points this summer, according to reports reaching local exchangemen. Exhibitors who gave the summer resort theatres a try-out last summer found them to be a profitable business venture.

One of the special trains which will be made up to carry theatre-owners and theatre-managers to the American Historical Revenue and Motion Picture Exposition at Los Angeles will leave Minneapolis. The de luxe train will leave here either June 29 or 30 and will carry the Northwest delegation to the exposition, which opens July 2.

Purchase of the Princess Theatre at Lake Preston, N. D., by Jack Nodine was announced this week. The theatre was bought from G. A. Lloyd and P. S. Larson. Another Northwest theatre deal was the purchase of the Grand Theatre at Knoxville, Ia., by Byron S. Waltson. Mr. Watson dealt with Mrs. A. Morrison, who formerly owned and managed the theatre.

San Francisco Theatre Deals Surprise Industry in General

Three important deals involving several million dollars in the aggregate and affecting two of the leading theatre circuits in Northern California, and the transfer of a leading theatre property in San Francisco, have been consummated during the week. One of these had been pending for some time, but the others came in the nature of a surprise to the amusement trade in general.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., has exercised its option on the Tuner & Dahnken Circuit and the holdings of this concern in Associated First National, and now owns 90 per cent. of the stock in this amusement enterprise. The consideration in this deal is $1,675,000. The formal transfer took place following the sanction of Judge E. P. Shortall to the deal. Mrs. Hattie Turner appeared in court as guardian for her five children, who will be paid as follows:

Miss Ruth Turner, $97,396.84; Miss Margaret Turner, Miss Florian Turner, James Turner, Jr., and Miss Virginia Turner, $88,266.03 each. Francis Dahnken, a son of Mrs. Fred Dahnken, will get $207,198.35 and Miss Margaret Dahnken, her sister-in-law, will get $150,021.48. The remainder goes to Mrs. Hattie Turner and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dahnken.

The leading figures in the purchasing company are Adolph Ramish, M. Gore, A. L. Gore, Sol Lesser and Joseph Schenck.

The second deal of the week involved the purchase by Louis R. Greenfield of the interests in the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit held by Mrs. S. Kahn, widow of the late half owner of the circuit. This deal calls for the payment of more than $1,000,000, with $250,000 paid as the first installment. The holdings involved include the New Fillmore, New Mission, Realart and Progress theatres, of San Francisco; the New Santa Cruz Theatre, Santa Cruz, Cal., and the Princess Theatre, of Honolulu, T. H. West Coast Theatres, Inc., were bidders for a foothold in this circuit, but were outbid.

This transfer marks another step in the upward climb of Louis R. Greenfield, who came here eighteen years ago as a penniless immigrant and who is now worth at least a million dollars as the result of opening a nickelodeon as his first business venture. He is only 34 years of age and is the youngest large theatre circuit owner in the country. Joseph E. Levin, managing director of the circuit, will retire and devote his attention to real estate projects. William J. Citron, for the past three years in charge of the New Mission Theatre, will be associated with Mr. Greenfield in the management of the circuit, while the publicity work will be carried on by M. S. Vidaver.

The third transaction of note for the week is the purchase by Wobber Brothers, who have long been identified with local picture interests, of the Pantages Theatre property on Market street, above Fifth. The property consists of a lot 90 by 165 feet, improved with a theatre and a seven-story office building. The price paid for the property is approximately $1,000,000.

The Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, which conducts four large picture houses at San Francisco, has created an "Idea Department," which has been placed in charge of Miss Anne McCabe, who has been doing special publicity work for the chain of theatres. Her task will be the introduction of new ideas, particularly those looking toward the increasing of feminine patronage, and to novel presentations.

The departure of Eugene H. Roth for Universal City has brought about a shifting of the personnel in the Rothchild houses, with the addition of several new faces. Hal Reid, long with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, has joined the publicity staff and is working with Charles and Sol Pincus; Leon Levy is now assistant to Managing Director Jack Partington; Louis McDermott has been made house manager of the California; Milton F. Samis has been placed in charge of the Imperial while Eugene Nisbet is in charge of the Granada. The Imperial Theatre has been closed for a thorough overhauling and will be opened in about a month with an extended run of "Bella Donna."

Clay Powers, of the Strand Theatre, Dunsmuir, Cal., who was a recent visitor at San Francisco, left town in real style, driving away in a fine Buick sport model car.

The Century Theatre, San Francisco, which has been given over to a musical show the past seven weeks, has returned to a season of pictures and for a limited time will offer a different picture each day, presenting such classics as "The Four Horsemen," "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "Way Down East."

Recent visitors on San Francisco's Film Row have included Harry Seipel of the Theatre Visalia, Visalia, Cal.; Frank Parker, of Modesto and Stockton, Cal., William Southern, of Bellingham, Wash.; J. H. Crowley, of Sparks, Nev.; Frank Burgi, of the Rialto Theatre, Willows, Cal.; W. S. Webster, of Woodland Cal.; Leslie Hables, of the Real Joy Theatre, Kings City, Cal.; Frank Atkins, Jr., of Marysville, Cal.; T. Matsuo, of the Bijou Theatre, Visalia, Cal.; Ed Stark, of the Opal Theatre, Hollister, Cal., and G. K. King, of the Orpheum Theatre, Red Bluff.

The T. & D. Jr. Circuit has taken over the Iris Theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., and now controls all the houses there. This circuit now has twenty-two houses in its chain, with negotiations under way for the purchase of several others.

Frank Atkins, of Marysville, is contemplating the erection of a picture house at Berkeley, Cal., in the vicinity of the university campus.

Eugene Perry, who has had charge of several large picture houses in the Greater San Francisco field during the past four years, including the T. & D., the State and the Franklin theatres at Oakland, has left for New York to become division manager for the Famous Players-Lasky chain of theatres. Before coming to San Francisco he was with the Stanley chain of theatres, with headquarters at Philadelphia.

Two men have been arrested on the charge of having blown the safe of the State Theatre, Oakland, recently and made away with $2,245. They are being held under bail of $5,000 each.

Los Angeles

West Coast Theatres, Inc., opened its new Mission Theatre at Riverside, Calif., with "The Voice from the Minaret." J. C. Hansen is musical director and Lee Tighe is manager. Jack Retlaw, assistant general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., will supervise the house. Its seating capacity is 1,200.

Ackerman & Harris have purchased the controlling interest in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, which has been booking on the open market ever since the opening of the Metropolitan.

Wild Georgia

Georgia exhibitors should be interested in a forthcoming picture which a publicity story describes as follows:

"Two outstanding features of the tale are its unusual locale on the wild coast of Georgia—a setting seldom, if ever, employed on the screen. . . ."

"Oh, wild, wild Georgia," says our Southern editor.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., has bought out the controlling interest of Grauman's Egyptian Hollywood Theatre. "The Covered Wagon" will succeed "Robin Hood" at the latter theatre. Manager E. C. Bostick, opened the week at Loew's State with "The World's a Stage."

Manager Jack Root, at the Mission, put over the world's premiere of Charles Ray in "The Girl I Loved."

Fred Miller put "Jazzmania" into his Main Street Theatre after it had done two big weeks at the California, and it is still hitting on all six.

The Southeast

Consolidation of interests and operation under a working agreement has been effected by four Tennessee theatres so as to cut down unnecessary overhead and make for more capable concentrated management. These theatres and owners are as follows: H. L. Ruhlander, Princess, Lawrenceville; R. T. Hill, Strand, Tullahoma; R. D. Page, Rivoli, Winchester, and Cowan Oldham, Oldham's Theatre, McMinville. Mr. Hill is president of the new organization and will handle all bookings from a central location for the four towns after June 1, it is stated.

Lady exhibitors are no more the curiosity they once were. Georgia has a dozen or more well known theatre owners among the feminine sex. The latest is Mrs. R. B. Smith, who has purchased the Palaca, Rockmart, Ga., from A. W. Farrar and is reported to be making a "killing."

DeSales Harrison, retiring director of the million dollar Howard Theatre, Atlanta, was tendered a banquet by the employes of the theatre and given a beautiful loving cup as an appreciation at the close of his eighteen months' management of the big Atlanta house. Enrico Leide, director of the Howard orchestra, was toastmaster. Mr. Harrison remains with the Famous Players organization, in the district office, and Howard Kingsmore succeeds him as manager of the Howard.

The Shadowland, Dalton, Ga., is at present being operated only two days a week by Manning & Wink.

Mrs. A. F. Carswell, of the Colonial, Commerce, Ga., and Miss Clara Wagner, of the Rainbow, Opelika, two popular women exhibitors, were on Atlanta's Film Row during the week.

James Irvin, of the Grand, Cartersville, Ga., has closed that theatre and returned to his former home.

D. P. Dixon, Strand, Winer, Ga., and Emory Rylander, Americus, Ga., were in Atlanta during the past week.

Sunday movies are being introduced in Lindale, Ga., in the Auditorium, a community theatre operated by the Massachusetts Cotton Mill Company.

Northwest Business Better

Walter S. Wessling, Western dictrict manager of Pathe, is in Seattle this week. He reports indications of improvement all along the line since his last visit here, and also states that exhibitors are finding less cause for complaint than formerly. Business in Spokane over the last week end was practically capacity in all houses. In the instance of the Rex Theatre, a 600-seat house, 2,900 paid admissions were recorded on Sunday alone.

This is a good sign for Eastern Washington, as Spokane has not been considered very brisk during the past few months. Montana is excellent, and even the Denver territory is picking up. Portland always pursues a steady course as a good, conservative town, while Seattle, which is either "up or down," is at the present time strongly on the up grade, with present indications of a splendid season ahead.

Crack Train Leaves Seattle with Movies for Passengers

The Olympian, the C. M. & St. P. transcontinental train out of Seattle, Monday, March 19, was the first transcontinental train equipped for the showing of motion pictures to passengers. Plans for the installation of a picture theatre on board the Olympian were developed by A. P. Chapman, assistant general passenger agent for the road, with offices in Seattle. He was assisted by the Universal Film Exchange, the Columbia Theatre and the B. F. Shearer Equipment Company, which installed a Simplex projector and furnished the operator for the maiden trip.

Inauguration of the new service was set for Monday so that eastbound passengers from the Orient who arrived Sunday on the S. S. "President Jackson" might have the novelty of the innovation. With each passenger ticket sold was attached a ticket, a free pass to the Movietorium, with the additional information of a printed program giving the daily change of pictures. The program consists of a news reel, comedy and complete high class feature. The initial showing was "Driven," now playing to crowds at the Columbia Theatre here. A complete new program was put aboard at Spokane, one at Butte and another at Minneapolis.

"Robin Hood" grossed approximately $45,000 in a three weeks' showing at the Liberty Theatre. It will probably be brought back for a second showing in the near future.

The Princess Theatre has gone back to second runs, which will be of a high class. Ten cents is the admission.

Studios of the American Lifeograph Company in Portland, motion picture producers, were destroyed in a spectacular fire Monday night. Loss to buildings, stored equipment and films is estimated at about $30,000. The fire started in the developing room.

The Isis Theatre, Blackfoot, Idaho, was completely destroyed by fire recently. L. Manders was owner. A new house will be erected and Mr. Manders will be manager.

Walter W. Barney, who has been operating the American Theatre, Arlington, Wash., has sold out to Flint & Hocum, who will take possession April 1. Barney, who has been studying radio for four years and dabbling in it on the side, will now turn his entire attention to the manufacture of radio.

A theatre party for 130 "shut-ins" was given at the Liberty Theatre last week through Dr. F. R. Loope, with Manager Leroy V. Johnson as host. Everyone who co-operated to make the affair a success felt amply repaid.

Visitors on Film Row during the past week included Fred Walton of Bellingham, Walter Craft of Auburn, N. Y., W. E. Bowen of Olympia, Robert L. Anderson of Forks, Wash., and Fred Mercy of Yakima.

Otto J. Petrick is manager of the Liberty, Kelso, Wash., a new house.

C. Merx has bought the Vay Theatre, a Portland suburban house, from Lester C. Smith.

A special Newsboys Matinee was tendered the Post-Intelligencer staff at the Blue Mouse Theatre, in co-operation with Nordy Leonard of the Loyal Order of Moose, this week. The Moose lodge has a candidate in the Singers' Popularity Contest, which is in its final week at the Blue Mouse, whom they are supporting with great loyalty.

The Sheik and the Shekels

Rodolph Valentino made his first public appearance in Kansas City the night of March 20 in a dance with his wife. He arrived in a private car and was inaccessible to interviewers throughout his stay here. His public appearance was in Convention Hall, the largest hall in the city, and the majority of the tickets were purchased by women. Holders of reserved seat tickets were permitted on the dance floor before and after Rodolph's dance.

According to the daily papers his appearance here was not much of a success from the public's viewpoint. But from the financial side—well, Valentino left town in his private car. He appeared before the crowd of spectators for fully ten minutes, five minutes of this time being taken up in an attempt to impress the public with a speech. The other five minutes he and Winifred Hudnut danced. Then Rodolph vanished and the crowd went on with its dancing, very much disappointed.

Women of the city are undecided whether Valentino still holds first place in their minds as the ideal man or not. They were all quite shocked to learn that the sheik had a bald spot fully as large as saucer at the back of his head, and that his wonderful front hair was hardly thick enough to cover the bare spot from the eyes of his admirers.

Kansas City

This week brings the announcement that another theatre is to be built near Forty-seventh street and Troost avenue, Kansas City. The theatre will be in a $400,000 development of a site 250x133 feet. The Watson-Roth Building and Investment Company recently obtained a 99-year lease on the site, reviving and enlarging a theatre building project which the original lessee had failed to carry through. Officers of the Watson-Roth company said arrangements for financing the development were completed and work would start in April.

The building is to be of Spanish renaissance design and will be fireproof. The front will be chrome terra cotta with red tile roof. Jack H. Roth, president and general manager of the new theatre operating company, is the present manager of the Isis Theatre, one of Kansas City's largest suburban houses.

S. Nusbaum, manager of the Mozart Theatre, 3318 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, closed his theatre about 11 o'clock the night of March 18 and started home with the cash receipts, $25. Two young men drew up to the curb in a sedan and robbed him of the money, then continued on their way.

One hundred entertainers of the city have signed up as prospective performers for the series of the "Discovery Concerts" the Newman Theatre of this city plans for April. The majority of these are pianists and vocalists. Milton Feld, manager, who will direct the concerts, has asked high school principals to assist in obtaining dramatic talent to present a short play at each concert.

The former Century Theatre of Kansas City will be reopened by the Shuberts as the Missouri Theatre, according to J. J. Shubert, who spent a day last week inspecting the remodeled structure at Twelfth and Central streets. Mr. Shubert left for St. Louis without divulging the future policy or the opening date.

S. E. Wilhoit of the Princess Theatre, Springfield, Mo., was elected president of the Springfield Western Association baseball club at a meeting of the club the first of last week.

F. G. Weary of the Farris Theatre at Richmond, Mo., was a visitor at some of the film exchanges recently.

"Safety Last" will show in Kansas City territory at the Miller Theatre in Wichita, Kas., the week of April 8. The Miller has never run a picture longer than three days heretofore, and it is considered as something out of the ordinary for it to book a picture for a solid week.

A. R. Zimmer of the Liberty Theatre at Marysville, Kas., has taken up a new line of displaying posters. He has established a system of shadow-boxes. These boxes are made of regular lumberyard stock and a little electrical material. The arrangement of posters makes a very effective display and attracts more attention than the usual method of display.

Gus Kubach, who has the Lyric Theatre at Abilene, Kas., is planning a trip to the West Coast. He wants to see how moving pictures are made and expects to leave about the first of May.

Mark T. Wilson of the Peoples Theatre, Chanute, Kas., is the first exhibitor in the Kansas City territory to show his patrons the new Chaplin comedy, "The Pilgrim."

Film Exchange Personalities

San Francisco

Arthur Levy is the new manager of the American Releasing exchange. He succeeds Bob Harris, who has gone to Albany to manage the Al Lichtman office. Mr. Levy comes from the City of Brotherly Love.

Henry W. Kahn is celebrating his eighth anniversary as a Metro executive. In order to appropriately celebrate this event he has gone to the Great White Way in Gotham. Henry has been almost five years in Buffalo as Metro manager.

"Popsy" Carrick, Hodkinson manager, has engaged Bob Wagner, formerly with several other local exchanges, to cover the city territory.

H. E. Hughes is now a Metro salesman. Taking care of the local business. Formerly with the non-theatrical department of Fox.

G. E. Flader, Universal theatre department head, stopped off in Buffalo for a few days last week, on his way to the Coast. Edgar B. Haines, salesman, is sporting a new Nash.

Col. Howard F. Brink of Educational had S. B. Taube, Toronto manager, as his guest last week. The Colonel is chalking up some fine business these days, especially since he took unto himself that new Willys-Knight coupe-sedan.

A benefit performance is being arranged for the Elmwood Theatre soon, the receipts of which will be given to the widow of Bobby Matson, veteran salesman, who died recently following a long illness.

H. L. Beecroft, formerly in charge of the local First National exploitation department, is in receipt of a letter from Jack Meegan, contest editor of the Courier, congratulating him on his fine work in aiding the paper stage the private screening of 'Oliver Twist" for the Jolly Junior Club, an organization of children sponsored by the sheet.

Kansas City

Earl E. Langan has accepted the position of manager of the Standard Film Co., Kansas City. Mr. Langan has been out of the film business since he was assistant manager of the local branch of Select, and with the Standard office here. He is the youngest film exchange manager in this territory.

Harry Graham, manager of the local Pathe offices, A. H. Cole, of the Cole Theatre Supply Co., and Jack Roth, manager of the Isis Theatre here, addressed the women of the Athenaeum on "The Evils of Political Censorship" recently.

Sam Dembow, Jr., assistant general sales manager for Fox Film, has been visiting Bert Edwards, manager of the local Fox office, for a week.

W. E. Troug, Goldwyn district manager, was called to New York last week for a conference with the Goldwyn officials.

Jimmie Weeks has resigned from his position as booker at the local Pathe exchange in order to affiliate with the Apex Electrical Co. Clifford Kirkbride, who was in charge of the poster room, is now booker and Leon Abraham is head poster clerk.

Albany

As a host, Bert A. Gibbons, manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Albany, proved himself one of the best a few nights ago when he entertained his associates at the Vitagraph offices with a chicken dinner and dance at one of the hotels on the Schenectady road. Mr. Gibbons recently won a handsome sum in a contest staged by Vitagraph. About seventeen were present.

Robert Harris will now manage the Al Lichtman exchange in Albany, working out of the Bond Photoplay offices. Mr. Harris has just come to Albany from Buffalo and at one time was employed by Pathe.

Frank Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange, has joined the motorists of the Capital District, having just purchased a Lexington touring car.

Marvin Kempner, manager for Famous Players in Albany, was in New York the past week having a conference with the district manager. And incidentally, Harry Buxbaum, who occupies the position of district manager for New York State, is to pay a visit to Albany in the near future.

L. B. Rozell, of Buffalo, has just been named as one of Vitagraph's salesmen out of here, covering the northern territory.

According to Howard Morgan, manager of the Educational exchange in Albany, exhibitors in this section of the State have become just as particular over their short subjects as they are over their feature pictures, and it is no longer a question of quantity with them. In fact, Mr. Morgan is featuring the two-reel Emile Coue in many of the smaller places, with marked success.

George Balsdon, Sr., assistant general manager for Vitagraph, was in town last week, endeavoring to complete a tie-up with the State Forestry Department in connection with the feature "Ninety and Nine."

Frank Bruner of Pathe and Marvin Kempner of the Famous Players made the trip together the past week to Watertown, Malone and Plattsburg.

A. J. Leonard, of Syracuse, who has been with the National Screen Service, takes the place of E. F. Johnson on the sales force of Pathe.

Don't mention open cars to Bert Gibbons, of the Vitagraph exchange. The other day, Mr. Gibbons went up to Fulton Chain, arriving at 4 o'clock in the morning, driving two miles from the station to the village, and then, keen for business, got up at 8 o'clock, only to find that there had been a heavy fall of snow during the last three or four hours. Mr. Gibbons found all the exhibitors still in bed and he broke a path first to the theatre, and then to the homes. Anyhow, he returned with a few contracts and that's some consolation.

James Ruane of Famous Players has just been promoted to the local sales force.

Edwin Lewis, salesman in the First National exchange, has returned to his territory following an illness.

The Southeast

A change that is of interest throughout the Southeastern States is that put into effect last week by which David Prince goes back into the managerial chair of the Paramount Atlanta exchange, succeeding Tom Bailey, who has been put in charge of sales promotion in the Dallas and Oklahoma territory under direct supervision of Fred Creswell, district manager.

Prince was formerly manager of the Atlanta exchange, then was sent to Charlotte, and back to Atlanta in the division offices, where he has since been located. Ernest Dawson, formerly one of the zone managers in this territory, succeeds Mr. Prince in the district offices.

A. S. Dickerson, of Hodkinson, is greatly pleased over a contract closed for the showing of "Ex-Kaiser of Berlin" in all Southern Enterprises theatres in the Southeastern States.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mangham have returned to Atlanta from their honeymoon trip to Cuba and have established their Atlanta home. Mr. Mangham is manager of the Atlanta Enterprise Distributing Corporation office.

C. B. Ellis of the Atlanta F. B. O. sales force is being congratulated upon winning first prize in a national sales drive recently closed.

Lester F. Scott, personal representative of C. C. Burr, was in Atlanta during the week, leaving for Dallas.

Wm. M. Seal, of Hodkinson's sales force, is back from a campaign in Florida.

Buffalo

H. G. Rosebaum, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, journeyed to Sacramento recently in connection with the censorship measure being considered by the State Legislature.

Murray Silverstone, who has been supervising the distribution of films for United Artists in New Zealand, Australia and the Fiji Islands, arrived recently from Australia. He stated that fully 95 per cent of the pictures being shown there were of American make.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., has been added to the sales force of Vitagraph.

John W. Sward, representing Perfect Pictures, is in San Francisco and is making preparations to road show "The Power of Love" and the Yosemite scenic, made by the Fairall stereopticon process.

Philadelphia

Robert Lynch, Metro manager, who has been wintering for fifteen days at Palm Beach and Cuba, is again back at the 1321 Vine street headquarters.

The two picture shows given at private exhibition by Manager W. W. Gebhardt of Hodkinson, exclusively for exhibitors, was so successful that another is scheduled immediately after Easter week.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

John C. Flinn's Advertising Campaign for The Covered Wagon Is a Knockout

GETTING New York excited over an advertising campaign is hardly a simple achievement. Some of the most brilliant achievements get their first light in the New York dailies and you have to take a full page or something like that to get attention, as a rule. Even full pages are not as unusual as they were before the income tax made it profitable to keep business income below a certain point.

And in the theatrical pages the departure from the usual ten and twelve line daily displays has been made so common by Will A. Page and Harry Reichenbach that it has to be something very much out of the ordinary to achieve more than passing notice. Even the drama houses are using the chatty style on plays they want to launch over adverse critical comment and no one thinks that a picture can be good if it is advertised in smaller than twelve point letters.

Flinn Did It

All of this being so, it was a distinct triumph for John C. Flinn, of Famous Players-Lasky, that he was able to hold interest for five days, and he did it chiefly through the interest his copy excited. That his copy did get attention is abundantly proven by the lay comment. Praise from advertising critics may be grateful to the ear, but the attention of the people who pay for their tickets makes pleasant music in the box office, and this writer has heard more non-professional talk about the Flinn series than he has listened to on any previous advertising campaign.

At the lunch table the day this was written a Wall Street broker asked the best way to get hold of some tickets for The Covered Wagon, adding: "It must be a fine story. Think of that man writing the telegrams on a railroad train on the very ground covered by the pioneers such a comparatively short time ago." That's the general reaction.

Ran in Series

The advertisements in question ran in a series of five displays as shown below, the first, carrying the picture of the Twentieth Century, being the last of the series. The first, appearing on the Monday of the Friday opening, is shown on the top line, with the others in their proper order on the lines below.

The first, dated from Los Angeles the day before, tells that he is about to start east with the prints of The Covered Wagon, and will travel over the trail taken by the pioneers, making six hundred miles a day where they could advance but ten.

The next is dated from Fort Laramie, then Kansas City and Chicago. The last shows the Twentieth Century, which was supposed to carry the prints the last lap, although prints were already in the home office. So real did the series make the trip that one questioner wanted to know what would happen should one of the trains on which Flinn traveled meet with an accident.

Building Up

And the final kick was given the idea in the Sunday papers where the space given the theatrical ads was sprinkled with announcements by the speculators that they had seats on sale. These displays were so uniform, carrying the same cut title, and were so well placed as to suggest that they were handed in on a single contract.

It was the best intimate advertising series ever presented to the New York reading public, and it constitutes one of the most brilliant accomplishments yet recorded. After this John Flinn will not have to walk behind any of the star publicity men. He is entitled to lead the procession.

Dr. Jack Campaign Fooled Washington

Using the regulation blind teasers on Dr. Jack, with the theatre street number for the address, was the opening campaign to put over Dr. Jack in Washington, D. C., but Nelson B. Bell, the Crandall publicity man, put on some city trimmings. He did press stuff on the idea.

The opening day told how a number of patients had presented themselves at the theatre, asking for Dr. Jack. There was color for the story in the fact that the Metropolitan is also an office structure. The stuff read right.

Then a policeman on the narcotic squad was persuaded to "raid" Bell's office on a supposed complaint that Dr. Jack's remedy contained habit-forming drugs. That turned the laugh on the police, but they didn't mind. The detective and the higher-ups all got passes. And lastly, Bell exhibited a letter from a trained nurse in Baltimore, applying for the position as Dr. Jack's office assistant. That got in the papers, too.

It was all done on the straight campaign, slightly changed in its wording to suit local conditions, and goes to show that you can punch up the original work with a little dog story stuff. It helped wonderfully to put the idea over and bring a business that worried the fire department.

Took Two Rides

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, used a full page for The Four Horsemen when he played it on a return at popular prices, having shown it first when the advanced admission was essential. By getting four other advertisers to come in, he paid off about half the cost though getting the full result, and the ponies brought the money home again.

Insures the Seats

Walter Eberhardt, of First National quotes a letter from Reid, of the Strand Theatre, Providence, in which he writes that some of the profits on The Hottentot were lost in repairing the seats the patrons shook to pieces in their spasms of glee. Walter suggests that a new form of insurance policy may be devised to cover seat damage on The Hottentot and Bellboy 13. Not bad, at that.

Leaving for New York today with copy of James Cruze's production, "The Covered Wagon," for the Criterion opening next Friday night. I will travel over the Oregon Trail, made by the Pioneers in 1848, whose lives are so graphically related in the picture. It is significant that out of the great west which they created should come the enduring and noble film record of their achievement. Everybody on the train has heard about it and is interested in "The Covered Wagon." The Pullman conductor is the son of a man who walked 2,000 miles to find opportunity. I now travel by railroad 600 miles a day, where the pioneers went ten. They endured hardships, attacks by Indians floods, blizzards and lack of food, I travel in comfort through the civilization they built. Every mile of the land I will cross was fought for inch by inch only seventy-five years ago. There is something in the very thought that gives me a thrill. Will wire tomorrow. Regards. John C. Flinn

Reached here today with copy of "The Covered Wagon," on my way to New York for the Criterion opening Friday night. It was near here that the attack of one thousand Indians on the Wagon train took place. I showed this morning some photographs from "The Covered Wagon" to an elderly woman, sitting across the car aisle. She told me she had crossed the plains in one of the wagon trains of 1848, when she was a little girl of five. She is now eighty years old and this is the first time she has gone back east. The route is over the old Oregon Trail, and she is covering in four days the territory which as a little girl she spent a year in crossing. Vividly she pictured to me the terrors, the hardships and long weary sufferings of those pioneers, whose lives are so interestingly portrayed by James Cruze in his production. "It is all so real, so real," she said. "My father was massacred by the Indians, and mother and I went to Oregon alone. And now, when I look out the car window I see great wheat fields, and cattle ranges, and splendid roads, and Fords and Buicks. Young man, it is wonderful to live in America!" Will wire tomorrow, regards,

Arrived here today with copy of "The Covered Wagon" on my way from California over the old Oregon Trail. This thriving city in the old days was only a small trading station and was called Westport Landing, a "jumping off" place for the old Wagon Trains of 1848. James Cruze shows a reproduction of the old settlement in "The Covered Wagon." The country I have crossed in the last twenty-four hours is full of interesting historical association. Kansas with its great expanses of wheat fields only a few years ago comparatively was the buffalo hunting grounds of thousands of Indians. A buffalo hunt is shown in the picture. We also crossed the Platte River by a wonderful steel bridge where many a pioneer of the forties came to grief in attempting to ford the swift stream. The river fording scene in the picture is its biggest thrill to me. Don't think I will ever forget my impressions of the west, its great plains, its magnificent mountains, its gorgeous rivers. What a panorama was unfolded before the eyes of the pioneers who are visualized in "The Covered Wagon." Will wire from Chicago. Regards.

Reached Chicago from the Pacific coast with copy of "The Covered Wagon" for the Criterion Theatre tomorrow after following the Oregon Trail over which the pioneers travelled seventy five years ago. In three days I have gone as far as they travelled in ten months. Tomorrow will arrive at Grand Central on the Twentieth Century with the great epic of America's making. Every adventure, every hardship that the brave pioneers endured is lived again in "The Covered Wagon." The buffalo hunt, the fording of the river, the prairie fire, the Indian attack—all these will provide thrills and entertainment such as the people of New York have never seen. And they all happened on the very ground which I have just flashed across. Out of the great West which the pioneers built with blood and sacrifice has come the enduring and monumental film record of their immortal achievement. The motion picture industry is proud to pay lasting tribute to the builders of the Western empire. "The Covered Wagon" is greater than any imagined story, because it is the record of life—of the most romantic and thrilling years in all America's history.

Nearly Fifty Feet of Gilt Edged Dope

See the man!
Can you see the man?
I can see the man.
What is the man doing?

SAYRE AND HIS DOPE SHEET

Dropping the primer style the man is proudly showing nearly fifty feet of free-for-nothing press notice, 594 column inches, or about thirty columns of newspaper space.

The man is J. W. Sayre, publicity man for the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Seattle, and the string is the advance dope on Robin Hood. None of it is paid publicity and he did not cheat and add in the regular stuff. It was all run before the showing of the picture and is mostly newspaper stuff, though we notice one page from his own publication, Screenland, down toward the bottom. The stuff is pasted up three columns wide and in that form is nearly seventeen feet long.

Robin Hood opened at the Liberty Theatre on February 24. The first press work appeared December 19, more than two months before, and from the first gun until the opening he kept up a steady firing. He did not make a play for a few big stories, just before the opening, but worked for a constant succession of small stuff, mostly newsy items, and he contends that this constant hammering with the thirty columns split into 190 different items, gives him a better grip on the business than would three or four stories of five or six columns each, just before the opening.

In other words, iteration is better than one big smash. It gradually wears in on the reader with its constant suggestion, and is more apt to generate a "go" impulse than a single smash. With a good attraction and plenty of fresh dope, we agree with Mr. Sayre, as we always have to, for he is hard baked, if not hard boiled, and knows the promotion game backwards.

He contends, with modest pride, that this is one of the best press campaigns, for length of time covered and space gained that has been worked out on the Coast without the aid of the Hearst newspapers on a Cosmopolitan attraction. There are the figures. Beat them if you can.

But the moral is, hit early and often to get the best results. As Mr. Sayre's letter was written, the attraction had been playing to standouts for two weeks, with no sign of a let-up. That tells the story.

RENAUD EXPLOITS "CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S BRIDE TO BE"

The first exploitation on Bella Donna comes from Kenneth Renaud, Salt Lake exploiteer, who put the special pictures of Pola Negri in a shop window in the interests of general publicity, with George E. Carpenter a preferred creditor

Pulled Three Alarms for The Third Alarm

Fire marshals are keeping their eyes on Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. Harry staged three fires lately, and provided only one engine.

He was putting over The Third Alarm and tried to borrow the newest fire engine, but the La France people could only loan him one of the oldest models, which was about as good. He parked it in front of the theatre, with a lecturer to tell inquirers all about it.

Then he got three windows for a trio of capitally planned scenes. One showed a city block with the ladders raised and the firemen saving the child. This he got into a drug store window at the chief transfer corner in the city. Two others showed fires in the residential district. All three displays were built to a scale permitting the use of toy fire engines, which were loaned by the ten-cent store, and just to make it thrilling Gould staged in one window an imminent collision between a three-horse engine and an automobile. We don't know just how he worked it, but the entire exploitation cost was only $20, though any one of the three windows looks as though it might have cost more than the entire appropriation. Most of the stuff was borrowed, but even at that he had to spend some money.

He also introduced something new in co-operative pages, his double truck being dedicated to the chief and the fire department, mentioning the chief by name. Here is a good pointer. It gives a local touch which helps.

HOW OLLIE BROWNLEE TRANSLATED THE METRO PLAN BOOK

This cut shows the front of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., transformed into Hill's Country Store, following the suggestion in the campaign book. It was something new in Muskogee and the investment of $15 sold Quincy Adams Sawyer

Running to Form

First National announces with an air of pleased surprise that Smilin' Through was a clean-up when it played the Colonial Theatre, Seattle, although it had been pretty well played around the town when it was a lot newer. John Danz made a fine garden wall front with cut-outs of the star, and got the business.

We cannot see the reason for surprise. We believe that Smilin' Through can take an encore wherever it has been properly shown and do as well on a repeat as on the original engagement if the same effort is made to put it over.

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE OFFERS ANOTHER USEFUL CUTOUT

It gives a string of figures as useful, if not as striking, as the Coogan "Oliver Twist" twenty-four. This display was made by the Astor Theatre, St. Paul, which used an "old melodies" week to hog in on the phonograph stores and music windows

Limited Contest to Twenty-five

Here is something new—the limited essay contest. Of course, it could not be called a contest, but Harry C. Eagles, Paramounteer, picked out twenty-five business men and women, each of whom was solicited to write an essay on Back Home and Broke for the Bellingham (Wash.) paper. The winner was to be given a box for a night showing at the American and twenty-five additional tickets for his employees. The essays were on the writers' early experiences in business.

It was a better newspaper feature than the usual contest, though not as good a circulation scheme, so it was sold to the editor and not to the circulation manager.

Another new stunt was to set up a desk on a platform in a prominent point in the public market. Signs on all four sides proclaimed that free tickets would be given to all who were down and out.

Some few persons faced the gibes of the crowd to get the passes, and the standees hung around, enjoying the fun, so that it was a continuous ballyhoo. The reporters were there to try and spot the pass claimants, and this gave a good news story, apart from the essay stuff.

This is a good general stunt, but works best with a "broke" title, of course, though it can be used on anything with the argument that a man should not be deprived of seeing the picture just because he was short of cash.

Flowers Talk

Out in Minneapolis Ed Weisfeldt, of the Strand Theatre, prepared fifty 22 by 28 inch cards reading "Don't you think she's Mighty Lak a Rose? Why not tell her? Say it with flowers and then take her to see Mighty Lak a Rose at the Strand Theatre."

He sold the idea to the president of the local florist's association and the latter put the stunt over with the individual members. It cost little, and as each florist dolled up the environment of the sign with rose displays, it got fifty vastly effective windows.

Many exploitation campaigns fall down because the manager starts a campaign feeling that the picture is so poor he must do something to get the business in. Better to stand a loss on a poor picture and save the energy and the ideas for something better worth your while. You cannot sell a picture on which you yourself are not already sold. Sell yourself first and then you can talk with proper enthusiasm.

Tied Old Timers to Mighty Lak A Rose

Because Mighty Lak a Rose is not of the 1923 crop, the Astor Theatre, St. Paul, tied the release to the general idea of old melodies, and from this angle got a better showing in the phonograph windows than they might have gained with the single title for a record sale. The idea was, of course, taken over into the house's musical program and played up as a feature. It pulled in a lot of casuals who do not follow pictures, but who do love the old songs. After they were coaxed in, they went out liking the picture.

The marquise display was a full cut-out from the 24-sheet poster, and this filled in very nicely, though it lacks the dramatic appeal and vivid coloring of the Jackie Coogan Oliver Twist twenty-four.

Whelan Discovers An 8-Line Limerick

Now it is Leslie F. Whelan who is pulling the Golem stuff in opposition to John (formerly Max) Rosenfield, of the Paramount home office.

He hooked a shoe store in Washington to a limerick contest with the first two lines running

In Primeval days of Adam's Rib
There were no Berberick shoes.

Twenty-five merchandise orders for $10 each rewarded those who most cleverly supplied "the remaining six lines of the limerick."

When you are giving away $250 in prizes you can call a limerick anything you wish, and the stunt was immensely helpful to the shoe store, the Washington Times and the Columbia Theatre, but after the contest the limerick shrunk back to the original five lines.

Just to give the poets something to do in their spare time, they had to paste together three stills, offered in jigsaw fashion each day for three days, and send these in along with the elongated limerick.

All it cost the theatre was a coy "Yes,' just like a June bride.

IT'S A LITTLE LATE IN THE SEASON FOR SNOW STUFF

But you can wait until next year to use it. It was worked by the Grand Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., on "The Old Homestead," when C. M. Stauffer and Vernon Gray, Paramounteer, tacked window cards to small sticks and stuck 500 of them in snow banks on Main Street

Made One Big Book Sell Little Ones

This cut shows a large cover for The Beautiful and Damned, supplied a book store as an attractor for the book itself. You will notice that only a few of the actual books are shown. The rest are in the store on the counter where they can be handled easily.

THE BOOK COVER

The stunt was one of the several worked by the California Theatre, Los Angeles, when this production was shown there. It offers a suggestion to others who can frame the stuff up with cutouts from the paper if an artist is not at command.

Birth of a Nation Good Fourth Time

Although Guy Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., had The Birth of a Nation about a year ago, and was due to play it again for the fourth time, he got back of it just as strongly as though it was a first run, and it made him just as much money as this year's crop of big things. He blew $85 on special work and pulled in better than $1,000 above the average.

He did not specifically pin his campaign to the K. K. K., but, on the other hand, he did not go out of his way to avoid mention; indeed, his chief lobby display was the flaming cross in a shadow box.

Novel Shadow Box

This was his usual six-sheet frame, built into a shadow box. On the sides was painted a woods, and in the centre was a pile of rocks, from which rose the Klan emblem. In the daytime this showed painted flame, but at night the lights back of the painting shone through. The paint was nearly transparent at the outlines of the cross and grew gradually thicker into opaqueness, which in the evening permitted a graduated illumination. To get the flicker of the flame he interposed an electric fan, working in series with the lights, so that it was slowed down to give just the right interference.

On either side were klansmen bearing fiery crosses and outside of these a pair of Confederate flags, both of which had seen service in the war, and which made a hook for some good dog stories. All the roads leading into town were bannered, 200 being used, and the Salvation Army was hired to put out 6,000 throwaways into the residences. Boys were sent around to ask for window space for cards, and a surprisingly large number of these were placed.

Bucking a Shrine Indoor Circus and Carnival in addition to the usual attractions, the business was still well over the top—about 50 per cent.

It goes to show that it is always worth while to hustle, and Kenimer always does.

HERE'S THE LACY LOBBY ON ROBIN HOOD FROM PORTLAND

It has been some time since we showed one of Mr. Lacy's lobbies, but that he has not lost his cunning is evident from this very fine treatment of his corner lobby. The painting back of the arch appears to be handwork. Neat, what!

An Elaborate Hoax Fooled Washington

Ed. G. Evans, publicity director for the Moore theatres, Washington, D. C., sends in the evidence to prove that an anti-flirt campaign devoured space in the Washington dailies. It was not a hook-up with one paper, but all four of the sheets came in with cuts and repeats and daily stories. He declares that he and Miss Hattie K. Merrill, the Universal exploiteer, put the smear on the newspapers, but, to be frank, we do not believe it.

With a dozen different "anti" clubs formed since Eddie Bonns' Brothers Under the Skin, we do not believe that Washington editors were so stupid as to fall for what any intelligent person who reads more than one paper must know to be a palpable bunk. We believe that the editors saw in it good reading and illustrative matter and helped the stunt along, but the fact remains that it was an unusually strong campaign, with daily stories in all four papers, and cuts with about half of them. It was one of the best handlings of the idea to be reported.

Miss Merrill organized the Universal typists and other office women into an anti-flirt league. Judging from the photographs sent, they had little to fear from the he-flirt, but they organized and visited the newspapers. The next day they held a meeting for the benefit of the camera men, and even Underwood and Underwood shot the group and syndicated the pictures.

They held another meeting when Representative Herrick, who made an exhibition of himself some time ago by denouncing beauty contests, seeking to suppress them, expressed a desire to horn in with a speech. That gave the idea a new kick. And finally they had an anti-flirt week, and one of the papers seriously declared that its enforcement cut the casualties from thirty-five on the same days last year to fifteen a day during the crusade.

But it was getting close to playing time, and so Evans spilled the beans and got the best stories of the series just before the opening of the Universal picture at Moore's Rialto.

It probably hogged more space in the Washington papers than any recent stunt, and it was all straight news matter and not semi-hook stuff, so far as the public could see. The campaign reflects the utmost credit to both Evans and Miss Merrill, because they kept the papers fed with jazzy stuff they could not resist. That's real press agentry.

Fed 'Em Figs

Tom Schrader, manager of the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, with the knowledge and consent of Amike Vogel, Paramounteer, bought $150 worth of chocolate covered figs, put them in envelopes printed up for Adam's Rib and gave them to cigar stores and restaurants for distribution.

It proved to be a good investment, but it's the first we ever knew about chocolate covered figs in the Garden of Eden. We thought it was apples.

Luck in Shoes

Two six sheets, two ones, a set of stills and thirty-one of the horseshoe cut-outs for The Hottentot gave the Oxford (Ohio) Theatre all the front it needed on the First National attraction. The shoes were spattered all over the display and got the necessary attention for the six sheets, which were hung in the upper sections of the divided entrance.

Very often the accessories will beat out home-made material, and they certainly brought good luck to the Oxford on this run.

THE HOTTENTOT IS DUCK SOUP FOR SPORTING GOODS STORES

Milton Feld, of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, landed this display through a loan of the painting and the gift of the cutout. It made a great flash. And the Hottentot collars got to town just in time to pervade the haberdasheries. Fine for Feld

Made a Calendar of Hook-up Page

Getting a new one on cooperative pages is growing harder, but now and then some one hits an idea. Ross D. Rogers made his a calendar for February when he came to advertise One Week of Love.

There was a strip advertisement across the entire page for a men's furnishing establishment, then a large "February" with advertising ears on either side. Just below were the days of the week, and below this thirty-five oblongs, as in the usual calendar. The first four were blank, the month starting on Thursday. The second line was the week of the run, and the seven spaces here were taken by the theatre, the date figures being left off. All of the other days had the proper number, the advertising running below the figure. The last three spaces were again left blank, so far as a number was concerned.

It was an ingenious conceit, but we think that the playing dates should have been set in, heavier rule being used to enclose these seven days—not smaller than three-point nor heavier than six. This would have given better emphasis, and at the same time would have fixed the dates more firmly; but in general the idea was an inspiration.

Made Heavy Drive on the Leather Pushers

Because he had made money with the first series of Leather Pusher stories, Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, figured that it would pay him to go to extra trouble to put over the second edition, even if they were short lengths.

First he tied the sporting goods shops to cut-outs and stills, and got the paper to go after them for a hook-up page. The page carried a lead line running "Clean, manly sport has ever thrilled humanity from the beginning of time. No branch of sport has ever carried the same thrill as a masterly exhibition of fisticuffs."

A cigar store which drew the local sporting men was given 3,000 forty-cent seats to be sold for the opening day at a quarter apiece—another form of the penny-ticket idea—and other tickets were laid off to the sporting goods stores.

But the big noise was an amateur carnival with the ring in the lobby of the theatre and with kids around fourteen as the contenders for a gold medal. Permission from the City Council was necessary in order to stage this event, but the permit was readily granted, and as the stunt was pulled Sunday morning for the Sunday afternoon opening, it was possible to rope off the street for the convenience and safety of the spectators. The crowd went back to the opposite curb, and not a few women were to be seen in the gathering, and they grew even more excited than the men. The bouts cost only one medal and passes to each contender, and it did a thousand dollars' worth of advance work for the series.

Gould was willing to admit that he was showing Ebb Tide, too, but for the moment he was specializing on the new series.

Split Up

The Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, made effective use of the twenty-four-sheet on Oliver Twist, though the lobby marquise is too small to give the cut-out a proper setting. The group was cut out and mounted and then cut in two, one group being placed on either side of a larger figure of Jackie himself. By slightly angling the groups, the entire display was gotten up without crowding.

Making It Easy

Hearing that the Illinois Press Association was to have a convention at Springfield, Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand grabbed a print of The Christian and hustled down to the Capital, where he got W. W. Watts of the Princess Theatre to help him put over a stunt.

He tied the State Journal to a theatre party for the visitors to see the picture at the Princess, and the S-J naturally had to print a piece in the paper about it, though generally it has a line rate on all reading notices.

It gathered in 126 editors and their families, and it is going to be easier for the small time man to put over The Christian when he gets his chance at it, for the editor will know all about it.

Traded the Screen for Car Windows

Because the street car company wanted to give publicity to a new hydro-electric power plant, the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, got half sheet cards on each side of all trollevs for the first time in history, advertising The Fast Mail.

In return they ran a short length showing the power plant. This was an advertisement for the traction company, but the stuff had a real local news value. Good work for both sides with the theatre getting the long end.

The Lyceum also used the miniature train in the lobby and between the two stunts they managed to use up all the seats.

MAKING A CUTOUT FEEL VERY MUCH AT HOME IN BALTIMORE

W. A. Seligman felt that the lady in "Ebb Tide" would miss the cocoanuts, so he painted in a grove on a false siding when he entertained her at the Victoria Theatre, and found his reward in the additional business this picture drew for a week

A Giggle Stunt for the Leather Pushers

Getting a change from the "blind man" perambulator for The Leather Pushers, the Capitol Theatre, Superior, Wis., sent out a man whose head and shoulders were hidden by a sign announcing that he would see The Leather Pushers if he had to go in a barrel. They backed him up against a lobby three sheet to take his photograph, but mostly he worked on the street.

A Universal Release

THE BARREL BALLYHOO

The stunt was cooked up by Roy McMinn, of the Capitol, and Universalist J. L. Morrisey, of Minneapolis, and it will work on any picture and costs so little that any house can shoot one out.

This seems to be a straight sign, but a three-sides affair with a peep hole would be even better.

Reused Castle Was Good Selling Angle

Because When Knighthood Was in Flower made good at the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., H. G. Griffin figured that to use the castle front for Robin Hood would carry the suggestion that Robin Hood was good, too, so he built it up again, and he did not even take the trouble to chop off the cutout of Miss Davies on the battlements. She might have been Maid Marian, and if she wasn't, certainly she did not look greatly out of place.

He made cutouts of the Robin Hood players, with Friar Tuck doing a levitation act because he stood in back of the other man, but it looked all right, and you did not even notice the easel effects used to keep them up. You got more the general effect of the picture.

The Plaza takes its name from the fact that it stands well back from the street, so there was plenty of room for the castle, which shows to better advantage than it would on a flat front.

And here's the dirty work it did. Knighthood held the record up to then. Robin Hood doubled it. Probably Knighthood would have doubled on Doug had he been played first. That's the big idea. The first big production sold the second on association of idea through the use of the same front. That's the point to memorize.

Esther the Poetess

One of the clever exploitation stunts worked by C. B. C. on Temptation is a 22 by 29-inch card on which are mounted various articles supposed to connect with the title. These are such things as lipstick, perfume, rouge, a powder puff, a cigarette, a roulette wheel and poker chips. Each is represented in actual size or miniature, and is tagged with a clever couplet written by Esther Linder, the demon publicity huntress.

A couple of the "poems" are:

Once Omar sang "a jug of wine and thou."
You're here—and so am I—but where's the wine gone now.

This is topped by a miniature champagne bottle, while the rouge carries:

Beware of the girl who resorts to paint.
It makes her look like what she ain't.

There are sixteen items on the card, along with pictures of the five featured players, and it makes a very attractive display for window or lobby work.

PIPE MARION DAVIES CHEERING ROBIN HOOD

Chinese Exploiter Has Brand New One

THE FRONT VIEW

To the right of the space for the address is a slip, numbered with a hand machine. Between this and the rule is a perforation, apparently made by a sewing machine. It certainly is not perforating rule. This is the coupon for a box. It is to be torn off and retained by the holder. At the bottom of the address space is a legend in English: "Please send this to your Chinese friend."

The reverse of the card shows a scene of the rescue, and below, in English, is "Special ticket for four-seat box. Way Down East. $8.00 Chen Kwang Theatre."

THE BACK OF THE CARD

The strip is torn off for the box and the rest mailed to some friend. It is a novel idea and we believe that it will work as well here. Ticket check can be done from the numbers, where the coupons are required for seating purposes, or the ticket can be taken at the door and the card, properly addressed, mailed by the house.

It's a wow. Mull over it a while.

Did His Stuff Free

There is more than one way to get free ads. A. L. Snell offered to take part in a local minstrel show if they would let him tell the audience about When Knighthood Was in Flower. He sang a song, told stories until he had them falling off the chairs, and then told what a wonderful picture he had coming to the Imperial Theatre, the same being in Gadsden, Ala. They actually gave him an encore, but he was nice about it and told more stories instead of repeating about the film.

Another oddity was pasting a lot of blank half sheets all over town. These were then painted up "Do you remember—" adding one word of the title each midnight until he achieved the full "Do you remember When Knighthood Was in Flower?"

Just a few little kinks like that and he did better than double business. Two days, too.

SIX MAE MURRAYS IS ALMOST AN EMBARRASSMENT

Five of them perched on the one sheet display of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, and the sixth is on top of the hand-painted sign. Charles E. Sasseen changed his lobby lights to conform to the colors used by the artist in the "Jazzmania" banner

Puts Connie Over at Trifling Cost

No one got very rich on the money W. A. Byers spent for a lobby display on East Is West. He figured that Connie should be able to bump it over on her name with very little effort. He put it up to her with a cheap but effective lobby. A few rolls of yellow and black crepe paper masked the walls. Cutouts from the paper were placed in front of this, with a borrowed Chinese god in the centre. At showing times they burned more incense before him than a Chinese gambler up against a run of hard luck would give his favorite joss. A few lanterns under the marquise and the display was complete.

And Connie came through the test with flying colors, rolling the business for a double score, with the second day better than the first.

Ruff Pays Tribute

Leave it to Ralph Ruffner to use the good old brain. The Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, has been presenting patrons with Paramount fanfotos, each in an envelope printed up with the bill for the coming week.

When he came to play Thirty Days he handed out the last of the Wallace Reid portraits and the envelope was black bordered and printed up with a tribute to the star; the offering being a memorial to his popularity.

It not only helped to put the picture over, but it used up the stock of pictures, which is something to think about.

C. W. Smith, of the Empress Theatre, Edmonton, used the same idea.

Made a Fine Show for Little Money

One of the best flashes we have seen in some time comes up from the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

Harry Gould had a tin bank he had used in some other pictures. He knew that in Making a Man Jack Holt comes to New York, so he painted the famous waterfront, borrowed some automobiles, street cars and boats from a toy store, set a cutout from the poster back of the Woolworth Building, and made a wonderful flash even if he did get the Terminal Buildings a mile or so north of where they belong. Fort Worth knew no better.

It cost ten dollars for the painting, and in return he gave him the sign to the left of the right arm. This reads that "Trave Daniels furnished the toys for this display" and adds, "Please do not put your hands in the Hudson River. It's wet."

Gould bought a lot with his ten dollars.

Beat Robin Hood by Selling the Program

Bucking Robin Hood with The World's Applause, C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., stood them out the opening night. He added a Hawaiian act and a local minstrel star, and advertised these and a De Mille production, with Bebe Daniels and Lewis Stone, all for 35 cents, against the dollar for Doug.

Wherever he advertised he used all of his items, instead of just the film, and instead of slumping on the business he went over the top about 20 per cent. He figures that the three-in-one style of advertising, largely concentrated in the newspapers, turned the trick.

Schools Sold Oliver

As soon as he received his dates on Oliver Twist, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., made a bee line for the schools and sold the teachers on the idea of selling the pupils. Most of the classes were told all about the book and the coming of the play, and they went home and told their parents.

Then Mr. White repainted his book, did a banner and cut out a couple of threes. Sunday, before his opening on Monday, he used the handy cut-out from the 23-sheet, and every one was late to church because they stopped to identify the familiar characters.

It cost only $9.50 to get results that in proportion to other cities yielded one of the best campaigns on the Southern Enterprises.

Candy Kids

Working on his Saturday morning matinees for children, Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., builds business by presenting each child patron with a small bag of candy, which he obtains free from a local manufacturer for the sake of the advertisement.

LOOKS LIKE A LOT MORE THAN TEN DOLLARS, DOESN'T IT

H. J. Gould, of the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, hand the tank and the rest of this display for "Making a Man" left some change out of a $X bill. The camera angle makes the cutout appear to be much larger than it really is—a sort of golem.

Beware of The Flirt Says Flirt Herself

Evidently there is neither chivalry nor enterprise to the Ft. Wayne automobile dealers, else they have been overworked. Either way, it may be the Ft. Wayne Flirt had to take it on the walk when she came to the Jefferson Theatre.

THE FT. WAYNE FLIRT

Perhaps it was better so, for she drew a lot more attention than she might have attracted had she been given a car to ride around in. She is pretty much like the Flirts in other towns except that she wore a purple mask, lettered in gold: "Beware of the Flirt." No house name was added, but a liberal advertising campaign took care of the hook-up.

Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, used the two butterfly cutouts for Bebe Daniels in Singed Wings, but he made them resplendent with miniature electric lights in many colors. One was suspended from the ceiling and the other lightly perched on the box office railing, just above a step effect backed by a cutout, and, of course, a candle.

Two dry goods stores contributed window space to hand-painted cutouts and stills.

Makes a Cutout on Old Cartoon Lines

Frank J. Miller, manager of Southern Enterprises theatres in Augusta, Ga., has adapted a cartoon idea to lobby cutouts. When he made a cutout of Charles Ray in The Barnstormer for the Rialto Theatre, he added a "balloon" in which Ray was supposed to announce "The story of a 'ham' who met a lot of eggs."

THE TALKING CUTOUT

This gives a new pull to the cutout stunt, and can be worked to good effect on a lot of pictures. Often a line of selling talk will dispose of many more tickets than the cutout itself. Try it once and see how it works for you.

Egged thereto by Bill Robson, Goldwynner, F. K. O'Kelly, of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa., dressed his lobby with boxes of oranges, apples, green groceries and meats, along with cigars and soft drinks, each with a credit card announcing that this wealth of material would be used in The Stranger's Banquet, soon to play the house.

Then he had to give all the stuff back, darn it. Bill didn't carry the scheme far enough.

Sure Enough Flirt Hit Cleveland Hard

Aided by H. W. Burtch, a U-advisor, the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, put over The Flirt with such a bounce that it even agitated the lake. It was mostly done with the newspapers, lithographs and the proverbs, especially the proverbs. These were printed up in sets on cards and then cut apart to leave one to a card, and they were not only passed out on the street, but a candy concern wrapped one proverb in every package. As it ran a chain of stores, this gave much publicity. Then for two days The Flirt herself handed them out.

A Universal Release

THE FLIRT IN PERSON

A chorus girl was hired from a local theatre and diked out in a squirrel coat, red hat, chiffon stockings and all the rest and provided with a black half-mask. A local auto agency provided a closed car with the case of the spare tire lettered in white. The same legend appeared on an inconspicuous card on the doors on either side. There was no large banner.

This girl, who played her part very cleverly, invaded the stores and dined at the restaurants and whenever questioned replied that she was The Flirt, and passed out one of the proverb cards. At the Statler Hotel the reporters were tipped off of her presence and their arrival so flustered her that she ran out, dropping about 500 of the cards, which the other guests promptly got hold of. The reporters followed and both the Plain Dealer and the Press carried stories.

The Plain Dealer also conducted a definition contest with six prizes for the best definition of a flirt in 25 words or less, to which 400 replies were published.

Plugged with Poem

Perhaps James Oberender has broken the hoodoo which seems to hang over the Waldport (Ore.) Theatre. He is the sixth man in two years to try and wrest a living out of a theatre in a 200 town.

He put in a Paramount program to see what good pictures would do, and "Jingle" Johnson, who writes poetry for the paper, free, told him it was a great show, so Oberender suggested that he write one of his well-known poems, and that is just what "Jingle" did.

Oberender put it on a throwaway and sent it all over town and to the outlying districts, and it seems to have helped some. It winds up with

Then I returned to my lodgings
Feeling that I had made
In exchanging dimes for amusement
A very even trade.

That's what the poetry sounds like, but the big point is that Oberender is awake to his opportunities and plays every bet instead of letting them get past him.

Door Art Gallery Works for Greene

Fred V. Greene, Jr., of the Rialto Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., taking a leaf from the books of the merchants who use news service pictures of the day, is putting his outside lobby doors to good use.

He has twelve of these doors—six pairs—and to the glass of these he affixes stills for coming productions, with a sufficient number of publicity photographs to give the display a general interest, and he writes that during the non-rush hours there are from five to twenty-five persons constantly studying the displays.

More definite is the number of verbal and telephone requests he receives for certain of the pictures. Where possible, the pictures are turned over to the persons making the requests. The only trouble is that so many are ripped off the doors while the doorman is not looking, as they are affixed to the glass with stickers.

If you want to try the scheme, it would be well to rabbet in a double glass.

Fred writes that he has no difficulty in procuring from the exchanges all the novel photographs he requires, but in some districts we believe that a deal with the home office would yield better results.

Finds Another Idea on Knighthood Front

Arthur Swanke, of the Rialto Theatre, El Dorado, Ark., has developed a new idea for his front on When Knighthood Was in Flower. He achieved this effect very simply with a cross piece to suggest the top of a gateway and with gates on either side.

The two shields and the strip carrying the name of the star are in light blue, lettered in black and with a narrow edge of the black, just enough to point up the color. It scarcely shows in the print. The shields are lettered, "Now Showing," and the marks just above are electric globes. Below the star strip is a white bar lettered with the title and notched in simulation of masonry.

The structure is comparatively inexpensive, can be used repeatedly, and was pretty enough to draw an unsolicited comment from the daily paper.

The big point to be noted, however, is that colors are used. Most of the Knighthood displays have been in simulation of masonry in grey or brown. These are forbidding, but the blue and white is as inviting as a breakfast porch on a June morning, and yet it is as completely in keeping with the attraction as the prison effect generally attained.

Shields of crimson and gold—a real crimson and not a brick color—with the blue and white would have done very well, too. Mr. Swanke is to be congratulated. He has done something.

Coffee and Heater Bucked a Blizzard

Because a snowstorm of blizzard proportions tied up Seattle for four days, and made traffic exceedingly difficult where it was not impossible, R. W. Case, of the Columbia Theatre, resorted to intensive methods on The Flame of Life.

He figured that no attraction was going to pull them in from the outlying territory and that he must make the most of the population in the more or less immediate vicinity of the theatre.

An electrical supply store had a giant model of the room heaters it was selling. Mr. Case borrowed this and set it up outside of the theatre, with a card for the company and another for Priscilla Dean. A surprisingly large number of those who stopped to warm themselves decided to stay warm for a while and went inside.

In the foyer—not the lobby, you will notice—free coffee was served in co-operation with a local dealer, who supplied the coffee, cream, sugar and wafers and a man to run the urns. The house detailed an usher to serve the cups. Outside the front was plastered with "The Flame of Life will warm your heart. Crescent coffee will dispel the winter chill. Served now in the foyer."

People did not exactly buy a ticket to obtain a cup of coffee, but it certainly helped to sway them.

Personal telephone calls in a limited radius helped not a little and a perambulating book was put on the streets where locomotion was possible. No records were broken, but the house did much better than an even break where only a loss was naturally to be anticipated.

Like Russian Rubles

Mindful of the checks on Back Home and Broke, Frank H. Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., printed up the money heralds on Nobody's Money so they were worth one cent toward the purchase of a ticket to the show—not more than one to each ticket.

This gave them a greater value than the deflated paper currency of Russia and Central Europe, and a lot of the curious came just to see if they really could get a penny for nothing, investing the rest of a quarter to find out.

Grub Stake Raffles Dug Out Much Space

In the recently described Raffles stunt for The Grub Stake, worked on the Shipman production in both Seattle and Portland, the returns are interesting, especially for comparative purposes.

In Portland, where the display advertising used ran 308 inches, the newspaper space on the Raffles stories was 138 column inches. Press matter other than on the Raffles angle ran 129 inches.

In Seattle the paid display advertising was only 65 inches, but the Raffles stunt brought in 178 inches. Seattle did not supply the American Releasing Corporation with a full set of the press stuff, but four days gave 23 inches.

It goes to show that there is no direct relation between the paid advertising and the press stunts. One paper got nearly five times as much paid advertising as the other and yet contributed two columns less on the circulation stunt. In either case the result should be judged by the straight return and not in comparison to the display space taken, for there is no real relation. Give a newspaper the material for a good circulation stunt and often you will get a warmer welcome from the circulation manager than from the editor.

You have three best bets on any paper—the editor, with stories; the advertising manager, with co-operative page suggestions, and the circulation manager with good ideas to form new readers. You are missing on one or more cylinders unless you make all three. And just remember that the newspaper is just as hungry for readers as you are for patrons, and really welcomes clever ideas for building up.

On the Engine

Jack Prescott, manager of the Strand Theatre, Lansing, Mich., picked out a side angle from The Dangerous Age, when he played up the railroad scene with a big painting of an onrushing engine and an automobile headed in the same general direction.

It made a big flash, but it is to be questioned whether or not playing up an incident is always wise. This is apt to give the impression of a railroading play to the exclusion of the more important appeal angles. The thing to sell is the chief angle of the story, and then the patron feels that the goods have been delivered. The engine episode is likely to sell patrons who want The Fast Mail and not sell those who would better appreciate the social questions in this story.

Rode in a Serial

William Mick, of the Dome Theatre, Akron, Ohio, and W. H. Burtch, U-man in that territory, put out a mounted rider for the opening chapter of The Oregon Trail, the rider being dressed as a Westerner and the horse carrying a banner reading: "I'm Art Accord. See me in The Oregon Trail at the Dome Theatre."

The horse was a real four-legged affair with plenty of pep, and you did not have to ring a gong twice to get him started, so the suggestion of a vivid story was carried in the ballyhoo. The rounds of the schools was made about dismissal time, the rider putting out throwaways.

It brought in the children, and the youngsters make or break a serial.

A Plastic Compound

Richard A. Addison, of the Pickwick Theatre, San Diego, Calif., supplies the formula for a plastic compound for use in lobby work. The original use was for a 40 by 60-inch shadow box frame, but you can employ it for a multiplicity of purposes. It consists of Plaster of Paris and calcimine—equal parts.

Chicago white flake glue—sufficient.

Water to form into a stiff paste, about the consistency of putty.

Mr. Addison uses "dekorato," apparently a patented compound, but any similar calcimine will probably work as well, the color being that of the shade wanted.

This is formed into a plastic mass which can be worked by hand or with modeling tools into any required form. The frame was made by putting a layer of the compound on a compoboard base and pressing upon it a proper mould. It was allowed to dry overnight and then touched up with color.

Mr. Addison warns that if too much glue is used, the compound will shrink in drying, opening large cracks. A small amount of glycerine will overcome this.

The composition takes paint nicely and can be handled with ease once you have caught the proper proportions. Make up small batches for experiment until you learn the proper proportions of the materials you use.

Get over your spring fever and get to work on jazzing up business so that the momentum you acquire between now and hot weather will carry you along into July, and by that time they'll be used to the heat and come anyway.

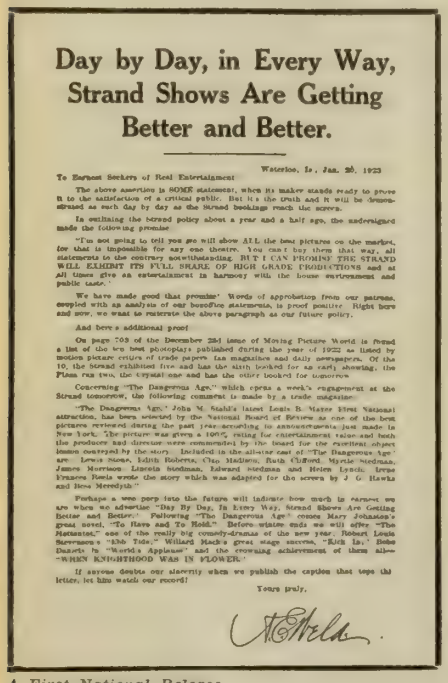
Weld Is Modest in His Claim to Coué

Arthur E. Weld, of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, writes that he may not be the first exhibitor in the country to use the Coué formula in his advertising, but he does claim to be the first business man in his own town to use the better and better, having made that a slogan since the originator first came to this country. He encloses his first gun, in the shape of an open letter putting over The Dangerous Age as the first example of the better and better picture. This was merely a side line to a vigorous campaign based on the use of the plan book cuts, bas-



Day by Day, in Every Way, Strand Shows Are Getting Better and Better.

Waterloo, Ia., Jan. 26, 1923

To Earnest Seekers of Real Entertainment

The above assertion is SOME statement, when its maker stands ready to prove it to the satisfaction of a critical public. But it's the truth and it will be demonstrated as such day by day as the Strand bookings reach the screen.

In outlining the Strand policy about a year and a half ago, the undersigned made the following promise

"I'm not going to tell you we will show ALL the best pictures on the market, for that is impossible for any one theatre. You can't buy them that way, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding. BUT I CAN PROMISE THE STRAND WILL EXHIBIT ITS FULL SHARE OF HIGH GRADE PRODUCTIONS and at all times give an entertainment in harmony with the house environment and public taste."

We have made good that promise! Words of approbation from our patrons, coupled with an analysis of our booking statements, is proof positive. Right here and now, we want to reiterate the above paragraph as our future policy.

And here's additional proof

On page 703 of the December 23rd issue of Moving Picture World is found a list of the ten best photoplays published during the year of 1922 as listed by motion picture critics of trade papers, fan magazines and daily newspapers. Of the 10, the Strand exhibited five and has the sixth booked for an early showing, the Plaza ran two, the Crystal one and has the other booked for tomorrow.

Concerning "The Dangerous Age," which opens a week's engagement at the Strand tomorrow, the following comment is made by a trade magazine

"The Dangerous Age," John M. Stahl's latest Louis B. Mayer First National attraction, has been selected by the National Board of Review as one of the best pictures reviewed during the past year, according to announcements just made in New York. The picture was given a 100% rating for entertainment value and both the producer and director were commended by the board for the excellent subject matter conveyed by the story. Included in the all-star cast of "The Dangerous Age" are: Lewis Stone, Edith Roberts, Clay Hadley, Ruth Clifford, Myrtle Stedman, James Morrison, Lincoln Stedman, Edward Stedman and Helen Lynch. Irene Frances Rosa wrote the story which was adapted for the screen by J. G. Hawks and Jane Meredyth."

Perhaps a wee peep into the future will indicate how much in earnest we are when we advertise "Day By Day, In Every Way, Strand Shows Are Getting Better and Better." Following "The Dangerous Age" comes Mary Johnston's great novel, "To Have and To Hold." Before winter ends we will offer "The Mentastic," one of the really big comedy-dramas of the new year, Robert Louis Stevenson's "Ebb Tide," Willard Mack's great stage success, "Kick In," Bebe Daniels in "World's Applause" and the crowning achievement of them all—"WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER."

If success despite our adversity when we publish the caption that tops this letter, let him watch our record!

Yours truly,

A. E. Weld

WELD'S DANGEROUS AGE

ing a fine display on the three-column cut with the letter; a capital piece of ready-made sales talk. If you can run that letter with proper copy and not get out all the married folks and engaged couples, you might as well stop advertising. Now and then something like this comes along and the manager who fails to make use of it should be prosecuted for criminal negligence. But no charges can rest against Weld. He took up the cut and plays it in a very good display, ending with "First presentation in Iowa" of Buster Keaton in The Balloonatic. He announces it as the first showing in Iowa "and probably in the United States," which is a lot more convincing than the usual "world premier" in a small town. He knows he can make good on the Iowa part of it, and that should be enough for his patrons. Weld uses the plan book suggestions plus his own ideas and gets out a thoroughly good brand of advertising.

Cartoon Strip Is Used in Many Ads

The cartoon strip put out by Pathe on Dr. Jack is finding many uses. Some houses have been able to persuade the photoplay page editor to use it free as a jazz feature in his regular reading matter, while more have made it the basis of their advertising. The example shown comes from the Columbia Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio, but J. W. Sayre, of Seattle, sends in a strip advertisement along the same lines and many others have made similar use of the material, which is about the handiest cut supplied by Pathe. A strip has value only when it really entertains the reader, and this is good enough to get over on its entertaining value. The best use is to try and persuade the editor to run it with the film criticisms, where criticism is used. Then there is a more direct connection between the scenes from the play and the story, and most editors will be in a melting mood after they have seen this comedy, for it will reach even the hard-boiled, for in every way we think this the best of the Lloyd productions, in spite of the farcical treatment of the story. It really has a story and an interesting one, in which it differs from most comedy productions which are merely gags knitted together more or less cleverly, but generally less.

Plan Book Cuts Nicely Handled

Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, does not believe in going to the expense of art material so long as the press book offers stuff as good or better. Now and then the house will have a space sketched that works better than the plan book in the area it uses, but if Bottsford can deliver the goods they are perfectly willing to let him save them money. This layout is taken from the Paramount press book. It works as well as a good, original design could, and so it is put in, and there is no charge for art work. Probably a local artist might not have done as well, for this gives a capital effect, and the copy sells the idea still better. It's a 110 by 3, and it makes one of the best displays in the Sunday papers of that date. A lot of managers are wasting not alone money but opportunity in discarding the press books on the general idea that they cannot have any value simply because they are press books. That might have held good a few years ago, but this is another time, and some of the best displays are entirely plan book; and it is no discredit to the houses that they use the plan book stuff in preference to their own material. If for no other reason than that the home office artist has access to a greater number of stills he should be better able to turn out the work.

Different Layout Helps This Space

This triple panel idea is a little different from the usual and therefore it is better than usual. It makes a sightly space and the lower panel is cleverly worked into the portrait cut. With a punch panel at the top to send them looking for the title, we think that this gives in a three eights about all that is

That will challenge the attention of everyone whether they ever heard of Barthelmess or Tol'able David. This small space has all the punch that a half page or even a page could be made to carry. They could use larger type, but they could not better the idea, so why waste the space for larger type faces?

Saves One Hundred Buying Full Page

More than once we have shown a short full page, but generally the page is shortened by the omission of one full column. J. W. is deeper than many papers, and this, of course, means that a full page costs more, in proportion to the inch rate, than it would in many places. Sayre pays for six twenties instead of eight twenty-twos, a saving of 60 inches; and, not only that, but with a little talk he gets his free cut right alongside and leads off the film story of the week just below that. He bunches all of his hits on one page instead of booting away this chance by filling the page so full they can put nothing else there. "Full page" listens well, but if you can get a full-page effect at smaller cost it is better yet, though it may not sound as imposing; and if you can get a full-page effect and pull your free press stuff alongside it is still better. Sayre has been in the game so long that it is reported around Seattle that he was running a theatrical department for the Indians before the whites settled down there, and he knows all the tricks, and smiles when many of them call him "daddy." Evidently they are not superstitious, for the picture opens on a Friday for an eight-day run instead of the usual seven. Sayre not only gets out the advertising for the Jensen and Von Herberg houses, but he still finds time to edit Screenland, the general house organ for all the local houses under that management. It is the best planned magazine ever put out in the interests of any circuit, and has consistently kept to the same high level for several years. He has to edit it in between his other jobs, and we do not see how he manages to keep it up to standard week after week. We have read every issue since it started, and we have not seen a poor issue yet. It classes as a fan magazine rather than as a house organ, and it is better edited than some of the for sale weeklies. It's a model widely copied, but not yet successfully imitated, for it takes a veteran newspaper man and not merely a press agent to turn out a job like that week after week.

Three-in-one Space Is Nicely Planned

It has been a long time since we ran any displays from the St. Louis houses other than the Missouri, chiefly because we did not get them; but here is a nice combination for the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol on "Tess of the Storm Country." all right, and they give proper emphasis to the fact that this is a brand new production, though do not add of a favorite play. The drawing is a bit crude, for Miss Pickford's eyes are staring, and her nose mostly isn't, while the mouth is almost too heavily laid in; but the message is put over nicely in small compass, and it is to be presumed that the rest of the heavy selling was done elsewhere, though the display ad is the proper place for the sales copy. A much better effect is given the following attraction, Constance Talmadge in "East Is West," in which a plan book cut is used to greater effect, and there is a real sales value to the line above the lozenge for star and title. The cut has been mortised to let in the other features, and the effect is decidedly better. Most U. A. plan books give the exhibitor so much help that we cannot understand why some of the art work was not taken off for Tess, since the layout for the First National is so well handled, proving convincingly that they know how to do it.

Pretty Drawing Is Hard on a Display

There was no identification tag on this three tens from the Broadway Theatre, somewhere, so we cannot give full credit; but, apart from the sinking of the title, this is a remarkably good design. In the effort to carry out the idea of flames the artist has spread it even over the star and title, obscuring these. In the original drawing it is probable that the names stood out well against the white ground, but the public does not see the india ink sketch. It gets only the grey ink on an off-tone paper, and the title sinks in. If this artist would only discount the black and white and see it in newspaper terms he would take his rank with the best of them, for on the figure, and particularly in the face, where so many otherwise good men go down to defeat, he has done an unusually good job—an artistic job. We do not believe that there are many men who can do as good work in advertising drawing, and he has the right idea in permitting the mortise to carry type display; but he fell on this one point of not realizing that there would be a loss in contrast when his work got on the press. As there is a strong cash value to Miss Talmadge's name, even art work should be sacrificed to get the fullest possible publicity for the star, and in this case it would have been a simple matter to have let the flames start from above the name instead of at the bottom of the space. Apart from this advertisement is capital, both as to copy and drawing, and the figure is charmingly done. We will be glad to get further examples of this artist's work, for we find him an interesting figure. It is seldom that cut and copy work so well together.

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

American Releasing

BLUEBEARD, JR. (5,000 feet). Star, Mary Anderson. Another good American Releasing picture. The advertising slants are fair. Had big attendance. Large city, 32,000. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

FOOLS OF FORTUNE. (5,609 feet). Selected cast. Trade paper reports were bad, but the picture made a real hit! Titles very clever. Had fair attendance in town of 4,000, drawing students and family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,377 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Good, clean comedy. Very entertaining. Will make money if bought right. Attendance was fair. Town of 4,229; draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-20 and 10-30 special. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

SILAS MARNER. (6,344 feet). Star cast. Grab this one; tie up with schools; it's easy. Then watch them turn out. Drew big for me, with strong opposition. Used lobby and six sheets on it. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES. (4,687 feet). Star, Leah Baird. Splendid, and would go as special. This will go good in any community and sure will please your patrons. Draw family trade; attendance was good. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

F. B. O.

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES. (4,900 feet). Star cast. An excellent picture that pleased everyone here. General patronage. Good attendance. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES. (4,900 feet). Star cast. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. The photography was very good. A fairly good program picture. Used posters and slides. Draw better class. Poor attendance. Very cold and windy night probably caused this. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

First National

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. (7,268 feet). Featured cast. Very good picture. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS. (5,192 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Like all the rest of the MacDonalds for me; very ordinary program picture. So far, haven't had one with this star to make good. Poor business. City of 35,000; draw family trade. Admission 25-50-60. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 feet). Special cast. Good picture but not as good as Marshall Neilan has made. Fine cast. Picture just wouldn't draw. Used extra advertising. Fair attendance. Large city; draw high class patrons. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

Used by a host of exhibitors, they have aided in the booking of good pictures and the avoiding of bad ones. They are published in a spirit of fair play to producer and exhibitor, without fear or favor. Use these tips and send some from your own experience.

GYPSY BLOOD. (6,000 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This, for me, is a regular "ham show" and they get the price for it; at least they did from me. Used program advertising. Fair attendance. City of 12,000; draw all classes. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

HAIL THE WOMAN. (7,222 feet). Featured cast. Thos. Ince production. Consider this one of the greatest dramas of home life we have had. While story seems unreal to our modern conditions, such things exist; and Theo. Roberts' portrayal of the stern New England father is most remarkable. Florence Vidor, as the woman, is wonderful. Story pleases and caused widespread comment. The kind of picture the smaller town movie audiences like. City of 15,000; draw general class. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

HALF BREED. (5,484 feet). Star, Wheeler Oakman. Scenery beautiful—that's just about all to it. It failed to please, but drew fairly well. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide, with fair attendance. Town of 4,200. draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER. (6,000 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Very good; all patrons had a good word for this, and besides the women like to see Anita Stewart come into town often, in a picture at least. Usual advertising. Good attendance. Town of 1,500; draw all classes. Admission 10-22. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

HER SOCIAL VALUE. (5,000 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. I had noticed some bad reports on this picture, so was afraid of it. It pleased all and drew as usual on Saturday night. Sometimes pictures are or seem to be panned unnecessarily and this is misleading. Used photos, slide, posters. Good attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood class. General admission 10-22, special 15-30. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

JIM, THE PENMAN. (6,100 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. A good crook drama. Good print. Used two ones and one three. Mixed patronage. Fair attendance. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet) Star, Miriam Cooper. A mighty fine picture; one that we put over to big business for two days, and had lots of favorable comments on it. Spend a little extra putting this one on. That's the advertising slant. Town of 7,125; draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS. (5,720 feet). Star cast, Maurice Tourneur production. Tourneur knows and he shows it in this one. Indian pictures always will be in favor. Used three sheets. Excellent attendance. Town of 600; draw mill help. Admission twenty cents. Howard James, Union Theatre, Voluntown, Connecticut.

LIGHT IN THE DARK. (7,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Good picture with Lon Chaney in good role. Play up Tennyson's "Holy Grail" theme. It will get you extra money. Used special angle for woman's club. Attendance good. Town of 3,700; draw general small town classes. Admission 10-20. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Extra good. Attendance only fair. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

MASQUERADER. (7,835 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Good picture. Star is a fine actor. Town of 3,700. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MIDNIGHT BELL. (6,140 feet). Star, Charles Ray. A good Ray picture. Will please all who like Ray. Advertising slants are star and story. Draw small town type. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

MIDNIGHT BELL. (6,140 feet). Star, Charles Ray. The best production Ray has made to get the little town business. Used a special street worker. Had good attendance. Small town of 1,474. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

NOTORIOUS MISS LISLE. Star, Katherine MacDonald. Very light program picture you can get by with in a pinch. Transient and neighborhood patronage. A. W. Sage, Masonic Theatre, What Cheer, Iowa.

ONE CLEAR CALL. (7,450 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Claire Windsor. Picture very pleasing to those who saw it, but did not draw extra well. However, business was satisfactory and I'm glad I played it. Used newspaper, photos, slide, ones, threes, etc. Fair attendance. College town of 5,000. Admission, adults 25-50, depending on production and day played. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES. (6,137 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. This picture is good for a laugh most any time while being screened. A. R. Workman, Colliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

THE ROSARY. (7,045 feet). Featured cast. Not churchy. For me a fine picture. Pleased a mixed audience nearly a hundred per cent. Used regular threes, ones, photos. Attendance fair. Town of 1,500; draw general small town classes. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

TRUST YOUR WIFE. (5,000 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. A good program picture. Play on the star and title. Attendance fair. Town of 2,300, regular small town draw. Matinee admission 10-15, night 15-20. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

WEDDING BELLS. Star, Constance Talmadge. Did not see this one, but all reports said it was a dandy. Nothing will get the people out, however. Have lost money for six months. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

WIFE AGAINST WIFE. (6,000 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. There is an unpleasant element throughout this story that sort of kills the interest in it. Pauline is at her best in it, with very little chance. Just a movie. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

WHITE SHOULDERS. (5,966 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Why can't they put some life into Katherine MacDonald? She acts as though she was an automatton. The picture will please wherever she has any following. Used newspapers and window cards. Good attendance. County seat and surrounding to draw from. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. (6,000 feet). Star, Mildred Harris. An excellent picture. Used newspaper, slide, programs, photos. Attendance fair. Town of 2,000; draw general class. Admission 10-15, 10-30. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

Fox

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,400 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Did not see it myself, but most that did report good, except too much Sheik stuff, though some wonderful scenery and well acted. Better than a lot of other Sheik pictures. Used regular advertising with good attendance. Mining town; draw mixed class. Admission 10-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

BRASS COMMANDMENTS. (4,829 feet). Star, William Farnum. Nothing extra, but as good as the average W. Farnum picture. Advertised the regular way. Very good attendance. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CALVERT'S VALLEY. (4,416 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A very good picture which drew very good business. Regular advertising; general patronage. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE. (8,291 feet). Star cast with Harry Myers. A picture worth going a long way to see. Some of the funniest situations ever seen. The subtitling was surely handled by an artist. Used ones, threes, photos, window cards. Attendance good. Town of 1,700; draw town and country class. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Taft, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

CRUSADER. (4,780 feet). Star, William Russell. Good picture. Plenty of action. Drew a big crowd. Pleased all. Used threes, ones and newspaper. Fine attendance. Town of 5,000; draw mixed class. Admission 15-30. Gus Frank, Lincoln Theatre, Petersburg, Indiana.

FAST MAIL. (4,880 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. A very sensational, fast-moving and far overdone melodrama of the old order; the improbable and impossible stuff that aims to get thrills and interest without a logical story. It is not a picture for a big time house. It drew excellent business for three days, however, and that is what we are looking for. City of 15,000; draw general class. Admission thirty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7,000 feet). Stars, Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone. A well produced picture that modernizes the "vamp." They didn't let Estelle Taylor act too much and therefore the picture pleased. It's a right good product if it can be bought reasonably—but I barely got by at the rental. Heralds, threes, ones, photos gave fair attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. The usual Jones picture; as good as its predecessors. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Just a common picture, so my audience thought. Would have gone flat had we not had vaudeville that night. Used sixes, threes, ones, photos, slide, etc. Attendance was good in town of 2,150, drawing better class. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

HONOR FIRST. (5,000 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Good acting and story. Gilbert does fine work. Regular advertising gave good attendance. Thos. J. Romine, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix; features horse "Tony." By far the best picture that Mix ever made. The work of the horse causes a lot of talk on the streets. Played two days to best business ever done with a Mix picture. You can go after business on this one. The advertising slant is the horse. Good attendance. Town of 7,125; draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix, featuring horse "Tony." A good Saturday feature that pulled some extra business. Many comments on the acting of Tony. Worth-while where Tom Mix is ever good. Used lobby, slide and newspaper for good attendance. College town of 5,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. This is by far the best Gilbert picture so far, being a Western it went over good for me. Lots of comments on this one. Town of 7,125; draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Most wonderful costume picture ever shown at our theatre. Excellent material to back an educational entertainment. Pleased our patrons a hundred per cent. Ran one day. Print in good condition. Used advance newspaper ads, full paper, photos, etc. Attendance S. R. O. in town of 3,500, drawing working people. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. A worthy big-time production of great classical beauty and execution; done in a manner befitting the theme and by characters who are extremely good in their parts. Drew very satisfactory business for entire week. It is costume picture of early French period, but made in America. No kicks registered on this one. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. A great picture for my class of patrons. Star a wonderful actor. Advertised with window cards, etc. Pulled good attendance. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

MONTE CRISTO. (8,000 feet). Star, John Gilbert. An excellent cast in a well directed play by Dumas. That's all that need be said. The story must necessarily be "there," for Dumas was a wonderful writer. The picture was very well liked here and I did a good business with it. It has good rental value, but don't be afraid—you'll be asked enough for it, but once having contracted for it, go after it! The appeal will be more to the highbrows than to the other type. Good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MY FRIEND THE DEVIL. (9,555 feet). Star cast includes Richman and Castleton. Good production. My patrons liked this one and did not hesitate to tell me so. Pleased as near 100 per cent as anything I have played in some time. Do not fail to get back of this one. Used ones, threes, photos, slide, heralds. Had good attendance with bad weather. Town of 992; draw mixed class. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

OVER THE HILL. (11,000 feet). Star, Mary Carr. One of the greatest pictures I have ever shown and the only one I have had to turn them away from. The only picture I ever made a good profit from. Boys, you can play it and make good, even if it is somewhat old, if you can get it from the exchange at a reasonable price. Used ones, threes, twenty-fours, slide, dodgers. As above, attendance good, plus. Town of about a thousand, draw general class. Admission 10-20. H. H. Herberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. An exceptionally good program offering that will please any class and an exhibitor cannot go wrong in boosting this one to the limit. Pleased a hundred per cent. Used posters and mailing list. Small town patronage. Good attendance. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Nothing to it. People did not like the story. Shirley herself is a drawing card for me. Chas. Hutchinson in "Speed" held up the program. Used posters and newspaper. Poor attendance. Town of 1,200. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Every exhibitor who sends a report to Straight From the Shoulder does so in a sincere desire to help you.

Sometimes his report won't agree with your opinion of a picture both of you have shown—but maybe it agrees with the opinion of other exhibitors who have the same type of audience that he has.

I hope you all saved Mr. Collins' talk on the way to use reports, in last week's Moving Picture World. He has the key to the best use of reports, and now Mr. Harry N. Lamere, of the Hammond Theatre, Ludlow, Vermont, goes at the same idea in a little different way. It all helps.

If you have found a way to make the use of reports more helpful—sing out! VAN.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Drew well on the star. Truly a good picture and played well. Print good. Therefore a good picture; you can rely on it. Used regular advertising; had fair attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

PERJURY. (8,372 feet). Star, William Farnum. Positively one of the best Farnums we have ever played and we've played his best. Were a bit afraid of this on account of some of the reports in trade journals, but those exhibitors must show me; if your patrons like Bill they'll surely enjoy this one. Also a fine moral. A slam on town gossip. Don't be afraid of it for it will back up anything you may say about it. Can be bought right and will make money. Bad snowstorm knocked us out. Let me hear from the Lyric, Harlan, Iowa. This man said it was 9,000 feet of exposed film gone to waste. How about the Liberty, Long Beach, California, who stated the best part of it was "the end." Be candid and fair, fellows, for the good of everyone concerned. The film was in excellent condition. Not an out-of-frame in the whole nine reels. (Note—the two theatres referred to do not report in Straight From the Shoulder, but we'll be glad to hear from them any time, Ed.) Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This burlesque of "Connecticut Yankee" is done in an altogether thrilling style. Our people went wild over it. The rodeo shows some new stunts for Mix that will win him even more followers. Advertised with ones, threes, photos. Full house in town of 3,500, drawing factory people. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,868 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. What's the matter, Shirley? Our patrons did not like this at all. But your work was good. Story not interesting. Usual advertising drew fair attendance. Town of 7,000; draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A very good picture, but they made it too darned long. Could have been told nicely in five reels, and they put four more reels of agony in it that made it too slow for this fast moving old world. Comments very scattering. No one claimed it was worth more than they paid to see it. Town of about 8,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SILVER WINGS. (8,275 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Just one actress—Mary Carr. Same old story as "Over the Hill." If you have run "Over the Hill" I wouldn't run this one; not as good as the other. Used threes, sixes, ones, newspaper. Small town draw. Poor attendance. H. L. Perkins, Dixie Theatre, Bastrop, Texas.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER. (5,327 feet). Star, Chas. "Buck" Jones. A fair program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THREE WHO PAID. (4,859 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. This picture took good here. Everybody seemed to think that Dustin was better in this than in most of his other pictures. Used posters and newspapers for good attendance. Town of 1,200 Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

THE UNTAMED. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Very poor story. They walked out on this one. Fair attendance. Draw general small town classes. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

WESTERN SPEED. Star, Buck Jones. Speed is right. Had the hard boiled ones as well as the better element sitting up from beginning to end. If your audience is out for a good Western, show them this one and they'll all go home with a good taste in their mouths. Used ones, threes, slide. Fair attendance. Town of 1,000; draw general class. Admission 10-20 to 25-50. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHATEVER SHE WANTS. (4,616 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. This was a very good comedy drama, but there doesn't seem to be enough action for here. Very bad night; only sixty-five turned out. Town of 1,100; draw second and third class. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? (8,361 feet). J. Searle Dawley production; star cast. This picture was a most pleasant surprise—it's not a sex-y melodrama as its title indicates, but a good, clean uplifting drama of everyday life. Wonderful picture for regular movie audience. Parts well taken, story convincing. Has a grand moral. Orphan asylum views most convincing. Many favorable comments and satisfactory business three days. City of 15,000; draw general class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

WITHOUT COMPROMISE. (5,173 feet). Star, William Farnum. Good program picture. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

YELLOW STAIN. (5,006 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Very good picture. People very much pleased. This type picture takes very good here. Used ones, threes, sixes, local newspaper, photos, with very poor attendance. Town of 1,500; draw country and small town trade. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, for F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Fair picture. Town of 7,500. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

YOURS VERY TRULY. Star, Shirley Mason. If you want to find a nice, pleasing little picture, here is one that will do it. Many went out of their way to tell me how they liked it. Usual advertising pulled good house. Town of 2,000; draw general type. Admission, except Specials, 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

How Mr. Lamere Uses These Reports

"Dear Van: Please pardon the familiarity—but seems as if I had known you for some time as I receive a word from you each week through your valuable department. I am sending my first effort.

"Often I wonder how other exhibitors draw conclusions from this department; one fellow will say a picture is good, the other says poor. Which do you want to stand by?

"Well, here's the way I do it. Follow one man's opinion for a while; if his conforms with yours, stick to his dope. Benson, of Woonsocket, is the man I follow. Wish he would send in more often. H. N. Lamere, Hammond Theatre, Ludlow, Vermont."

How about it, Mr. Benson? And Mr. K. H. Sink, and Kenneth Thompson, and A. L. Middleton, and Stanley Chambers, and E. L. Partridge, and M. Oppenheimer—and all the others of our good friends. Somebody is watching your tips. Give them all you can.

Goldwyn

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). Star, Helen Chadwick. An excellent picture and the entire cast does excellent work. A true-to-life picture, extremely clever and entertaining. This is a Peter B. Kyne story, delightfully portrayed and marked with all the finer shades of human appeal characteristic of his works. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). Star, Helen Chadwick. One of the best comedy-dramas of married life I have seen in some time. Will please all the old married heads immensely. Advertising angles are type of story, title. Attendance was good. Town of 5,000; draw mixed type, all nationalities. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. (5,503 feet). Star, Helen Chadwick. I have yet to get my first picture with Miss Chadwick in it that is a bad one. My people sure raved over this one and it pleased a hundred per cent. Print was good and price was right. Advertised with sixes and lobby, in small town, drawing all classes. Good attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

DOUBLING FOR ROMEO. (5,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. Poorest Rogers picture I ever played, except "One Glorious Day." Used regular advertising with fair attendance. Town of 2,400; draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

GRAND LARCENY. (5,227 feet). Star, Elliott Dexter. Here's a dandy good picture. Most any audience will like it. Good cast, and plot is very good. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Small town draw. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

GRIM COMEDIAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Rita Weimann. The picture should please all seeing it. Photoplay and execution good. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HOLD YOUR HORSES. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Moore. If we had got a good print this sure would have been a knockout. It is extra good and if you can get a good print and haven't played it, don't pass it up. Small town, drawing all classes. Fair attendance. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

HONEST HUTCH. (5,000 feet). Star, Will Rogers. This picture, while it had a well based theme, would take better with the older group. It has a deep thought that is hard for some of the younger people to grasp. Used slides, posters and letters to pull fair attendance. Calvin Caldwell, Republic Theatre, Freeville, New York. (This theatre caters exclusively to the Junior Republic and report must be considered in that light as to drawing power.—Ed.)

NIGHT ROSE. (6,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. In these days of trying to clean up the screen, I don't think that this is a good picture to run. Fair attendance. Town of 4,000; draw students and family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Santschi. Very good Northern picture that satisfied. Put this on with Jimmy Aubrey in "The Tourist" and had special music, which made the cost rather high to us, but we made good money. One of the best crowds for many a moon. Used ones, a three sheet, heralds and local paper. Very good attendance. Town of 305; draw town and rural classes. Admission 10-30 and 10-35. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

POOR RELATION. (4,609 feet). Star, Will Rogers. This was a fair program picture, but failed to draw. Rogers is usually a very good bet for us, but this one fell flat. Used ones and newspaper advertising. Poor attendance. Size of town, two squares; draw small town and farmer type. Admission 10-22. P. S. Neilson, Rex Theatre, La Moure, North Dakota.

Hodkinson

SLIM SHOULDERS. (6,050 feet). Star, Irene Castle. A very good picture and would have been more pleasing had it not been a return date picture. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

U. P. TRAIL. (7,000 feet). Star, Roy Stewart. A good Zane Gray picture, which drew better than some of our recent so-called Specials. On Wednesday, a poor night, the business was better than usual by fifty per cent. Used regular paper, newspaper, programs, etc. Farming community, town of a thousand. Regular admission 10-30, once a week 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

WESTERNER. Star, Roy Stewart. A little old, but a good one. Ran this with movie chat; gave this show to the Mercy Club; they sold tickets in advance and packed the house. Used handbills, posters, photos, slide. Town of 1,100; draw second and third class patronage. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,266 feet). Star cast includes Lon Chaney. An excellent story of the sea and of the South Sea Isles. Made with a capable cast and a good director. The scenes of the whale hunt were extra good. Usual advertising. Good attendance. Town of 4,034, draw loggers and lumberjacks. Admission 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,266 feet). Star cast includes Lon Chaney. Billie Dove, Malcolm MacGregor also in cast. Good picture, should please all. Good story, good direction; scenes showing catching of whale above the ordinary. All three stars do good acting in this. Advertised with everything. Good attendance. Town of 2,500; draw all classes. Admission 15-30, 25-50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

CAMILLE. (6,000 feet). Stars, Nazimova, Valentino. Picture drew well for three days Valentino does some of his best work in this. Usual advertising. Good attendance. Large city; draw from high class element. Admission 20-30. C. R. McCown, Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tennessee.

CONQUERING POWER. (7,000 feet). Rex Ingram production with Valentino. Did not see this one myself, but my patrons came out and told me that it was good. I did not look for this at all from the looks of the advertising matter, but it pleased most all of them. Used six and lobby; fair attendance resulted. A Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

"The Bright Shawl"

You can't find anything finer than the way the friends of Straight From the Shoulder jump in and help give you the latest as well as the best picture tips. Here comes Al Hamilton with one you can't whip for lateness!

THE BRIGHT SHAWL (First National). Stars, Richard Barthelmess, Dorothy Gish. At preview presentation, patrons all agree it is the best production Barthelmess has ever made. Get this picture by all means. It is going to be one of 1923's best attractions. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

FIGHTIN' MAD. (5,436 feet). Star, William Desmond. A picture that pleased about ninety per cent. Ran with Larry Semon in "Golf," which made extra good program. Used ones, threes, photos, newspaper. Good attendance. Regular small town draw; town of a thousand. Smith Read, Patriot Theatre, DeKalb, Texas.

FORGET-ME-NOT. (6,000 feet). Featured cast. A very ordinary program picture and with too much sob stuff and not any action. Story unreal and very poor. Advertised with lobby, slide and newspaper. Fair attendance. College town of 5,000. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

FORGET ME NOT. (6 reels). Certainly a pleasing little picture that pleased all who saw it. A better drawing card, a cleaner, better story than we expected. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

JAZZMANIA. (8,000 feet). Star, Mae Murray. They came—they saw—they went away pleased a hundred per cent. Absolutely Mae Murray's best. I hired one of the best jazz orchestras in the State and put it over big. Paid too much; did not make any money. The manager of the Dallas office sold me this and I'll say he could sell a fan to the North Pole. I couldn't even get a press sheet—they insist you run a feature before it's made. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

JUNE MADNESS. (5,600 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very good and pleased—especially the young people. Boys and young men seemed to like Miss Dana's dancing very much!—but I'm glad it was shown on a day when the "good" grown-ups were away. Used good newspaper and lobby pullers. Attendance was good considering competition. College town of 5,000. Admission, adults 25 to 50 cents, depending on production and day played. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

LOVE IN THE DARK. (6,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. An excellent little comedy-drama. A sure-fire audience picture. Usual advertising for small town patrons brought good attendance. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. Should be a clean-up, but failed to register here in spite of heavy outside exploitation. A splendid production in which the star proves herself as capable on the screen as on the stage. For advertising did everything but blow up the city. Fair attendance. City of 44,000; draw mixed class. Admission 10-17-20-25. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. One of the best pictures we have played in a long, long time. Used very good advertising, for good attendance. City of 32,000. Admission 10-20-30. H. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star cast. Fell down terribly on this one, got burned badly in buying it; made no money by showing it. Did not please my people nearly as well as any ordinary picture. Ten reels could have easily been done in five. Many people left after seventh or eighth reel. We have no couches in the theatre. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A really extra good picture and one that should please a hundred per cent. Many favorable comments which helped second day's business. Personally I thought this one of the best productions I have run in some time. The story, and characters as played by the star cast, seemed to be almost perfect. A picture crammed with entertainment without a dull moment. Did not make money because rental was too much and the picture as a box office attraction was not what it should have been. Used extra good newspaper campaign, heralds, window cards, photos, ones, threes, a six, a slide, trailer, also banner. Attendance was good. College town of 5,000. Admission on this 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Very, very good story of the rural type that seemed to please all who saw it. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. Town of 4,034; draw loggers, lumberjacks. Admission 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Featured cast. A splendid picture that will suit all classes, pleasing all and displeasing none. Entertaining from start to finish. Many realistic thrills presented. A very good picture to book. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RIGHT THAT FAILED. (6 reels). Star, Bert Lytell. Good program picture; pleased all. Lytell draws big for us. People said, "Give us more like it." Some thought it couldn't be beat. The children raved when the prize fight took place. Used handbills and newspaper with good results in town of 599, drawing all classes. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

THEY LIKE 'EM ROUGH. (4,700 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Not the sort of picture in which my patrons like to see Dana. The whole thing looked as though the outfit got the bug they wanted a vacation up in the woods, and conceived the idea that they would shoot a picture while there. Not so good. Attendance very thin. Town of about 2,000; draw town and country classes. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9 reels). Star cast. A wonderful cast and picture. It pleased a hundred per cent. Will stand lots of boosting. Used lobby and newspaper. Fair attendance. Large city, draw mixed class. Admission 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. Heavy drama; an excellent cast; good story and direction. What more can anyone want? My patrons went out talking with the result that the second day's business went over the top. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. City of 44,000; draw mixed type. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Paramount

ACROSS THE CONTINENT. (5,481 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. One of Reid's best. Absolutely the kind that is sure fire. Don't be afraid to advertise it as it won't disappoint. Advertised with ones, photos, slide, to good attendance. Large city; draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Del Grande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

AFTER THE SHOW. (5,884 feet). Featured cast. A good Society picture, well liked by all who saw it; went over good. Used newspaper and posters. Fair attendance. Town of 2,000. Admission varies. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

ALWAYS AUDACIOUS. (6 reels). Star, Wallace Reid. This is a good one that they are sure to like. Plenty of action that keeps 'em guessing. Plenty of comment. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,100; draw family class and steel workers. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

ANNA ASCENDS. (5,900 feet). Star, Alice Brady. A picture that satisfies but causes no comment. It is well acted and a fairly interesting story. This star just gets by for us although we've been showing her a long time. She seems to lack personality. Aesop's Fables and Topics of the Day shown in connection. Advertising slant is that feature was a stage success, that's all. Average attendance. City of 14,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

AFTER THE SHOW. (5,884 feet). Special cast. Pleased about eighty per cent. Well done, and a little better than an average program picture. O. K. if you don't pay too much. Advertising angles are the cast and William DeMille. Fair attendance. City of 14,000; draw clerks, farmers, merchants and other classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,299 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A 100 per cent picture that will please everybody. Should be run in every theatre throughout the country. A good, clean story all the way. Book this one by all means. Used photos, slide, ones, threes, sixes. Good attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood class. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Stars, Rodolph Valentino, Gloria Swanson. Very good. Pleased a hundred per cent. Wonderful story and well cast. Miss Swanson always draws well. Used lobby, newspaper, billboard, handbills. Good attendance. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Good feature. Would have pleased better if Valentino had lived. However, this star's acting is at its best. Advertised with extra space. Had fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BONDED WOMAN. (7,178 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A very good program picture which is sure to please ninety per cent of the patrons. Heard no kicks registered. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. (5,601 feet). Stars, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt. With such stars, yet it did not draw out. Those who did see it praised it very highly, so much so as to say that it was one of Ayres' best. Holt makes a splendid leading man. Used ones, photos, slides. Fair attendance. Large city; draw from church community. Admission 10-20. P. J. Del Grande, Jr., Parkland Theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Wanda Hawley. Book this one, exhibitors, and you won't go wrong. A very fine picture. Advertised with posters. Had good attendance. W. Ventura, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Wanda Hawley. Milton Sills good, Wanda Hawley does fair work. Liked by everyone. Jacqueline Logan great; she is a coming star, watch for her, she will go to the top if they put her in the right stories. Pictures pleased about eighty per cent here. Story and settings above the ordinary; direction good. Used twenty-fours, six, threes, heralds, to good attendance. Town of 2,500; draw all classes. Admission 15-30, 25-50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

CAPPY RICKS. (5,962 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A hundred per cent entertainment. Clean. Film in poor shape. Used threes, ones, photos, newspaper. Poor attendance. Town of 1,200; draw general small town sort. Admission 10-25. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre, Mapleton, Iowa.

CITY OF MASKS. (4,800 feet). Star, Robert Warwick. A good, average program picture. Advertised as usual to general patronage. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CLARENCE. (6,146 feet). Star cast includes Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, May MacAvoy. A very clever picture, exquisitely played and very pleasing. Should draw well anywhere. Advertised regular ways. Good attendance. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DAUGHTER OF LUXURY. (4,538 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A very quiet, clean little story which will please almost any high class audience, but has little to offer in the way of punch. Usual advertising pulled very good attendance. City of 44,000; draw mixed class. Admission 10-17-20-25. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

EBB TIDE. (7,336 feet). Stars, Lila Lee, James Kirkwood. Excellent picture; fair drawing power. Action somewhat slow, but will please if you can get them in. Advertising slants are author and story. Fair attendance. Town of 4,100; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

MAKING A MAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A good picture which will please, but which failed to get the crowd for me, as Holt is not popuar here. Still it is good. Usual advertising brought fair business. Draw farmers and from town of 2,000. Admission 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED. (6 reels). Star, William S. Hart. This picture was highly enjoyed by all. It has a clean and wholesome theme; while it exploited the life of a man who was afraid of the mounted and had to flee rom the law, in the ending it was that which draws your imagination and thought. Advertised with slide, billboard, posters. Good attendance. Calvin Caldwell, Republic Theatre, Freeville, New York. (As you probably know, this theatre caters to the boys of the Junior Republic, and reports are to be considered in that light, Ed.)

ON THE HIGH SEAS. (5,050 feet). Stars, Dorothy Dalton, Jack Holt. Good melodrama and one that will please most any audience. Plenty of action. Fair attendance. Small town, regular type, 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SINGED WINGS. (7,788 feet). Stars, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel. A Penrhyn Stanlaws production. This picture drew excellent business three days, but caused no particular comment. Story is different and most satisfactorily done. Stars at their best. A clown plays an unpleasant part all through story and gets laughs from the audience where they are not intended, spoiling some of the effect. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY? (5,000 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A good picture. Reid always takes good here. Patrons all feel sorry because of his demise. Used 11x4. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is it! It's long—send it through about ten minutes to thousand feet. If you can't get business with this, close up. Used billboards, window cards, lobby display, book store tie-up. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. All that has been said is right, that it is an excellent picture, well worth seeing and very pleasing. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A picture that will go over in any town. I believe that this is Marion Davies' best, while Forrest Stanley is a surprise to all. True it is a costume play, but out of the ordinary; one that pleases. Small towns should pay the fine and grab this one now and benefit by the city advertising. Biggest business ever. Advertised with press, posters, three sets of teasers, special eight-page program. Town of 2,000; mixed population. Harry N. Lamere, Hammond Theatre, Ludlow, Vermont.

WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE. (5,947

Special On This

Mr. William Noble is kind enough to send a special tip on the picture below. It isn't a report of a regular theatrical exhibition before paying patrons, but it's valuable information none the less.

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS (Hodkinson). Elmer Clifton production. Here is an honest-to-goodness photoplay treat. A much better than the ordinary picture and the peer of any such picture heretofore produced by any producer. A genuine thriller and very interesting from start to finish. Realistic—extremely so, as all will say who see it. This picture was specially screened before the Oklahoma Theatre Owners' and Managers' Association at its semi-annual meeting, held in Oklahoma City, March first, and had as its invited guests Governor J. C. Walton and a large majority of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Oklahoma Legislature. With such a distinguished audience, its unanimous approval and approbation, "Down to the Sea in Ships" was one of the very best pictures ever shown in this city. The picture is sure to make a hit with movie fans and those not fans, no matter where shown or before what kind of audience. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good show, but did not do so well on this one. Used newspapers and posters. Poor attendance. City of 12,000; draw all classes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

WORLD'S APPLAUSE. (6,526 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Very good William DeMille picture, but did not make any money. In our opinion the title did not help it any. Play it if you can buy it reasonable. Used newspaper and lithos. Fair attendance. Town of 6,000. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

WORLD'S CHAMPION. (6,030 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A disappointment. The producers tell you of a good fight scene and the audience expects it from the title and you boom it as a four-round "go"—and then, nothing to it and the people wonder what it is all about. Draw the better class. Thomas L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. Though everyone knocks this picture it drew good for my two days' run; had better crowds second day than first. Everyone well pleased. Valentino scores big here. Used newspaper and billboard, none extra. Good attendance. Town of 6,500; draw all types. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

Preferred Pictures

THE HERO. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Al Lichtman slipped a cog or two with this piece of (for me) "cheese." If Photoplay Magazine rates this as the best picture of February I'd say they were picking a "lemon." Usual advertising brought fairly good attendance. Town of 4,034; draw loggers, lumberjacks, etc. Admission 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Splendid cast in an excellent picture from every standpoint. Drew well and pleased about every one. Received dozens of good comments from patrons. And the price was certainly reasonable. Used banner, slide, ones, threes, photos, window cards and newspaper. Good attendance. College town of 5,000. Admission, adults 25-50, depending on production and day played. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

RICH MEN'S WIVES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A corking good picture. All pleased. Favorable comments. Advertised usual way for neighborhood class, with fair attendance. J. A. Emory, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

Playgoers

RECKLESS CHANCES. (4.542 feet). Star, J. P. McGowan. Good picture that pleased my Saturday night crowd. Star's first appearance; therefore did not draw very good. Used threes, ones, slides. Fair attendance in small town drawing general type. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

Selznick

GOOD NIGHT PAUL. (5,000 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Surely a lively comedy drama, although the lingerie scenes should be cut out if your audience is quick to comment on these technical oversights. The story is fine and the theme was well received with the above exception. Regular advertising. Fair attendance. Town of 282, draw small town and country. Admission 10-15-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

SAFETY CURTAIN. (6,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Another revival which clearly shows why Norma Talmadge holds the attention of the theatre-going public. Good cast. Well directed. Used ones, papers, photos. Poor attendance not fault of picture. Town of 282, small town regular type. Admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

WAY OF A MAID. Star, Elaine Hammerstein. For good, clean comedy and at such a fair price as Select holds on this service, you should by all means run this one. Advertising as usual; fair attendance. Town of 282, draw usual type, small town and rural. Admission 10-20-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

Late Ones

CAN WOMAN LOVE TWICE? (F. B. O.). Star, Ethel Clayton. Nice little attraction that will satisfy, but don't promise too much. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT (United Artists). D. W. Griffith production. This picture pleased those that saw it and the house was full for entire week. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JAVA HEAD (Paramount). Star, Leatrice Joy. Picture cleaned up. Story is main thing with this picture, not star. She looks as much like a Chinese girl as I look like Mr. Lasky. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

JAVA HEAD (Paramount). Star, Leatrice Joy. Title bad, no drawing power, sure flopped for us. The third of the "Super 39" that failed for us. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

RACING HEARTS (Paramount). Stars, Agnes Ayres, Theo. Roberts. Of all the pictures centering on auto racing this is one of the swiftest and best heretofore shown on the screen. You'll get so excited you'll find yourself unconsciously nudging the stranger or friend in the seat next to you. "Racing Hearts" is a bird of a picture, a fast and swift one, full of pep from start to finish and very exciting. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

United Artists

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Eight thousand feet and over. Two thousand feet too much—it would have been fine in the shorter fottage. As a result I could only play one show a night and kept it two days and "died" standing up the second day. Didn't do much the first. I had to boost the price, slightly, and the patrons roared "awful," so in future if Mr. Ray has any features of eight thousand feet they can't play here. He's a good average star—maybe a shade better—but when you stick him in the "advance price" (and you've got to do it if you pay the rental demanded) you're "sunk." I'd stay off of this unless it's reasonable. Used teasers and special slides, mailing list, house programs, threes and ones, to draw health seekers and tourists. Attendance poor and then worse. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. A very good picture of a very good play. Ray's work very good. Not a big Special, but one that you can play to a profit if you buy it right. Used special advertising mediums and extra newspaper space. Attendance only fair. Town of 6,000, draw all classes. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

TAILOR MADE MAN. (8,649 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Ray's best. If he keeps this up he'll be back where he was before he made those "punks" like "The Barnstormer." Usual advertising yielded fairly good attendance. Town of 4,034, draw loggers, small town, etc. Admission, 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

THREE MUSKETEERS. (12,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A pleasing picture, full of pep, ginger and energy. Should please any audience. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THREE MUSKETEERS. (12,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Wonderful production. Ran it too late. Used regular line of advertising. Poor attendance. Town of 3,000, draw oil field patronage. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

A WOMAN'S WOMAN. (7,900 feet). Star, Mary Alden. Voted a fair picture here—just fair—not a thing to the box office in either the title or the cast. Used mailing list. Poor attendance, drawing health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Just only a fair five-reel program picture that pleased about seventy-five per cent. Too much gambling in this to please my audience. Lost money. Advertised with ones and photos. Poor attendance. Town of 400, draw common type for small town. Admission, 10-20. J. I. McCarthy, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

CAUGHT BLUFFING. (5,000 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Good program picture. Regular advertising, drew fair attendance. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DR. JIM. (4,474 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A dandy little program picture. Didn't have a kick. The ocean storm scene rivals anything of that nature shown in the Big Specials. The marital difficulties of a doctor who loves his profession are unravelled in a series of perplexing situations to a thrilling climax. Used one sheets. Fair attendance. Town of 200, draw rural type. Admission, 10-25. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

FIRST DEGREE. (4,395 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Get behind this one. It has them going from start to finish. Star getting better every week. Plenty of comment. Usual advertising pulled good attendance. Town of 1,100, draw railroad and miner types. Admission, 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

FIRST DEGREE. (4,395 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. An excellent picture with an unusual plot. Well made and a credit for all concerned. Usual advertising gave good attendance. Town of 4,034, draw loggers and small town. Admission, 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

GHOST PATROL. (4,228 feet). Featured cast. One of the ordinary kind, but prices are right and the print perfect condition, so the small town can get the money nicely. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Town of 1,100, draw miners and railroad men. Admission, 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Not such a big picture as was supposed. Ran as good a picture of its kind for one third the price of this one. Used heavy advertising to bring fair attendance. Town of 1,150, draw mixed class. Admission, 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

LOADED DOOR. (4,653 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. While not quite up to Hoot's standard, it's good none the less, and pleased because you don't have to take all of a day's wages for labor for tickets for the family.

Advertising slant—Hoot, Hoot, Hoot! Good attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. Admission, 5-10, 10-20. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

LONE HAND. (5,000 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. The usual Gibson picture—they are all alike here, neither pleasing nor displeasing. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LONG CHANCE. (4,331 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Excellent picture and Frank Mayo made a hit with my people. Print good. Usual advertising gave good attendance. Town of 1,364, draw general class. Admission, 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

PARISIAN SCANDAL. (4,739 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. A fair picture. Can't complain if they don't make 'em worse than this. Miss Prevost and Tom Gallery are fine. Used photos and newspaper. Attendance poor. Draw townspeople in town of 600. Regular admission 10-25. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Good program picture. Universal improving very rapidly on quality of their pictures and they can be bought at the live-and-let-live price. Used posters, slides, photos; getting good attendance. City of 30,000, draw from workers and small merchants. Admission, 10-17. Walter Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

RIDIN' WILD. (4,166 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Hoot's good pictures and drew the usual good crowd. Used lobby and daily papers. A. R. Workman, Colliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

THE STORM. (7,400 feet). Star, House Peters. Ran this second run to a good business. Wonderful picture. Fine snow scenes and great forest fire. We darkened our house for the fire scenes, which showed up great. City of 15,000, draw middle class. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

THE TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Good picture and pleased ninety per cent. Rental at figure that will let the exhibitor live. Used ones, threes, photos, newspapers. Good attendance. H. L. Bennett, Victoria Theatre, Parsons, West Virginia.

THE TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Good picture. The star was also good. General patronage. Fair attendance. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Good attraction. Not anything to brag about; did not do so well on this one. Finish of this attraction very good. Used special printed one sheets and throwaways. Good attendance. City of 2,000, all classes. Varying admission. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

GIRL IN HIS ROOM. (4,523 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A very good program picture. Good, clean entertainment, good photography. Used six, three, one, slide, photos. Drew fair attendance. Large city, pulling all classes. Admission, ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

NO DEFENSE. (5,700 feet). Star, William Duncan. Very good picture. Vitagraph also has good comedies. Used photos, ones, slides. Fair attendance in town of 900, drawing Americans, Germans, Russians. Joseph Schlaht, Opera Theatre, Bowdle, South Dakota.

SON OF WALLINGFORD. (8 reels). Selected cast. A crackerjack farce that seemed to please all. Eight reels in good condition. Don't go too heavy on the Fire Scene; it's not so wild. Advertising slants, the authors, the production. Good attendance. Town of 2,500, draw all classes. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

STEELHEART. (6,000 feet). Star, William Duncan. A very good program. Duncan's pictures seem to have more in them than other Western pictures as the stories are always good. Usual advertising. Town of 3,000, draw mostly working people. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). All star cast. Haven't seen much on this picture, but can recommend it as a knockout for me. Laughs all the way through. All ages will enjoy this picture. If you book it, don't be afraid to advertise heavy. Advertised with mailing list and usual ways. Good attendance. Small town draw. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). Special cast. A very funny and pleasing picture. Sure to please all classes. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Comedies

PUPPY LOVE, AND STEP LIVELY, PLEASE (Fox-Sunshine). There is no doubt but that Fox makes the best comedies. They are always good. The worst Fox comedies are better than some of other companies' best. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

RENT COLLECTOR (Vitagraph-Semon). Not so bad! A little slow in getting into the action, but it keeps them guessing and laughing after it gets started, near the close of the second reel. Semon's first appearance; well received generally. Used extra advertising and pulled excellent attendance. Town of 282, draw small town and country. Admission, 10-15-25. R. K. Russell, Lyric Theatre, Cushing Iowa.

SAILOR MADE MAN (Assoc. Exhib.-Lloyd). Return date. Pleased all. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 350, draw small town and rural. Admission, 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

STEP FORWARD (First Natl.-Turpin). They charged me $20 for this Sennett-Turpin comedy. Pretty nearly as good as the $5 Sennetts used to be (first two Turpin comedies are hopeless). Family patronage, fair attendance. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

STEP THIS WAY (Educatl.-Mermaid). A good comedy. Some good stunts pulled off that produced some good laughs. Draw better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TOONERVILLE TOPICS (Educatl.-Mason). Did not take at all here. Same stuff all over in each release. Regular advertising with good attendance. Town of 350, draw small town and rural. Admission, 10-28. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

A TOUGH WINTER (Pathe-Pollard). Hardly an average comedy for us. People are tiring of 'Snub" here. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

'TWAS EVER THUS (Educatl.-Christie). A good comedy. Everyone enjoyed it, as indicated by their hearty laughter. Draw better class with poor attendance. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BIG V COMEDIES. These were all good so far. Jos. Schlaht, Opera House, Bowdle, South Dakota.

Serials

IN THE DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Univ.). Personally, I like it. It's instructive and clean entertainment, but it hasn't seemed to have enough bloody action for my fans. Used photos, etc. Attendance fair. Town of 600, pulling regular small townspeople. Admission, 10-25. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

DANGEROUS ADVENTURE (Warner Bros.). A good animal picture. Directing very poor. A wild monkey in the jungle with a collar on. Some liked it, and more didn't. Will get by as a Saturday picture. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

MIRACLES OF THE JUNGLE (Federated). Used the twelfth episode; had very good program. Always pleased to see it. J. M. Vidinha, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Hawaii.

SPEED (Pathe). Star, Hutchinson. Fell flat here. Well enough made, but no story for fifteen episodes. Poor attendance. Town of 4,000, draw family and student class. Admission, 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

SPEED (Pathe). Star, Hutchinson. All that they claim. Hutch good here. Good attendance. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadara, Oklahoma.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Star, Ruth, Roland. Held up. Fifteen episodes too long for any serial. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

VANISHING TRAILS (Campbell). Just an average serial. Held up fairly well as a whole, and the serial will please the average serial fan O. K. Used one, three, six, photos. Fair attendance in town of 2,150, drawing all classes. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

Mr. Nauman Has the Right Spirit

"When I see the good work that is being done for me by other exhibitors in your 'Straight From the Shoulder Reports' I think that even if we do have a small town second-floor theatre we may be able to give the other fellow a tip or two on current films.

"We have been showing Fox films almost exclusively for three years and our patrons always want more with Tom Mix, about twice a month. We can always be sure of a good house with Tom Mix, Charles Jones, Dustin Farnum or John Gilbert pictures, with Shirley Mason, William Russell and William Farnum drawing an average attendance.

"Your Moving Picture World, to my mind, is just about the most complete magazine published by any Moving Picture interests. For reliable news and reviews I always look through it first. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania."

Short Subjects

FOX NEWS. We have run two of these and they both have been interesting to our audiences; and our audiences do not take to News Reels as we tried them before and had to stop them. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOLDEN BULLET (Universal). Two reels. Star, Harry Carey. The usual Carey picture, a good program picture, but have seen better. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

HAIR TRIGGER BURKE (Universal). Two reels. Star, Harry Carey. Fair program picture, but too much like its predecessors. Business very good. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NEW LEATHER PUSHERS (Uiversal). Star, Reginald Denny. Series. The best two-reelers made, but not as good as the first series, in our estimation. Have helped to put over some punk shows to more than average business. Featured as well as big features. Attendance above average. Town of 4,034, drawing small town. Admission, 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

OLD LEATHER PUSHERS (Universal). Star, Reginald Denny. Series. They have been a clean-up for me. I have played five and they get better every week. Use ones, threes and slide. Good attendance. Town of 1,100, draw general class. Admission, 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

Special Subjects

FROM THE MANGER TO THE CROSS. This is the old Kalem subject now handled by Vitagraph. Well, this one is old, but my patrons like it. Had favorable comments on it. Went over very well. I think any exhibitor will make no mistake in playing this. Used ones, threes, heralds, photo, slide. Attendance good. Town of about 1,000. Mixed draw. Admission, 10-25, 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

State Rights

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED (Warner Bros.). (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. An honest-to-goodness picture, which enjoyed pleased, good business for entire week. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BIRTH OF A NATION (D. W. Griffith). Special cast. This picture always pleases, and pleased at the Rialto for four days. An excellent picture which drew good business. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BURN-'EM-UP-BARNES (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. Great. First three reels is one continuous laugh. The other three have laughter in spots. Audience sure was well pleased with this one. One or two improbable incidents in this one that certainly did not go over the heads of the people, but they let that go as long as the rest of picture was good. Used three, ones, slide, bills. Good attendance. Town of 2,800, draw working class. Admission, 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

MORE TO BE PITIED THAN SCORNED. (C. B. C.). Stars, Rosemary Theby and Alice Lake. Very good picture, swell scenes and settings. Will take good anywhere with any kind of audience. Used twenty-four, six, three, ones, news, 11x14, slide. Good attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

NOTORIETY (Weber & North). (8,600 feet). Any exhibitor in any small town, don't run this picture until you have screened it. They knew better than to sell this production; it may go by in a big town, but it is absolute dynamite in a house where a manager realizes his responsibility to the community. In the first place, it is morbid. A half-wit plays through the entire picture, not for a flash but a prominent part; the main character, the girl, does not screen well and her actions are worse. She, of course, plays the part to perfection, but it is so silly and preposterous. Again, the moral, if there is any, is in the center of the picture, the rough stuff is last; and while you have seen the man with the motive in dozens of other pictures, in this it is the way it is done. Any time a villian with lust in his eyes entices a young girl into a barn to "see the kitties" (that's one of the subtitles) closes the door "so the kitties can't get out" (another title), and tries to force the girl up the ladder into the hay, roughing her all the time in a manner that cannot be described on paper and published, it is time to call a halt. If Will Nigh's conception of good pictures—pictures that will elevate and not drag down the industry, to the detriment of all who have money invested in amusement enterprises—is "Notoriety," he stands in need of a guardian, in my opinion. Had I been in the theatre when this picture opened, it would not have gone to the second showing. But I was out for the evening and did not see it; I saw it in the morning, first thing, and pulled it, prepared to go dark, but fortunately got some real service from Chicago Metro—Thanks, Metro, I'll not forget you. Perhaps I'm over-sensitive—I've never been accused of it—but I know this production is too "raw" for the average neighborhood theatre and I urge again that it be screened before being run. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

RIDERS OF THE LAW (Arrow). Star, Jack Hoxie. This is the best Hoxie picture I have ever shown. Drew good attendance. Print in first class condition. Don't be afraid of this one. Used a three, ones, newspaper. Town of 2,000, residential class. Admission, 10-25. W. C. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). (6,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. This is a good, clean picture, very funny and entertaining. Don't be afraid to go after this one, as it will please all seeing it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT? (Equity). (6,579 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. Not all they claim it to be. Very sad, and not the kind that builds business. Better go slow with this one. Advertised with ones, threes, six, photos and newspaper. Fair attendance in town of 5,000, regular type. P. L. Vann, Opera House, Greenville, Alabama.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME (Warner Bros.). (7,666 feet). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. A very good, true-to-life story. We have made money on all our Warner Bros. features so far. Used threes, slides and bills. Fine attendance. Town of 2,800, drawing mostly working people. Admission, 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mount Joy, Pennsylvania.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

The Woman Conquers

(Katherine MacDonald—First National—5,102 feet)

M. P. W.—If your patrons like this star, they will surely like the picture.

N.—Serves simply as a vehicle for Katherine MacDonald—nothing more.

F. D.—An average offering that has good combination of atmosphere and fair dramatic situations.

T. R.—Generally speaking, the picture ought to prove a reliable box office attraction.

E. H.—Katherine MacDonald gives one of her best performances. * * * Some splendid snow stuff is presented.

The White Flower

(Betty Compson—Paramount—5,731 feet)

M. P. W.—Will furnish pleasing entertainment for majority of patrons.

N.—Though the plot may be trite and obvious, there is enough color, incident and atmosphere to make it fairly entertaining.

T. R.—Entire feature is permeated with a sensuous touch of color. * * * Develops suspense as it proceeds and does not lack action.

F. D.—Highly colorful atmosphere and a particularly attractive production greatly alleviates the shortcomings of story.

E. H.—Betty Compson and a competent cast make of this a sincere and very interesting film.

Stormswept

(Wallace and Noah Beery—F. B. O.—5,000 feet)

M. P. W.—The storm scenes and the fight between the two men give the picture a certain force. * * * It will be more apt to appeal to men than to women.

E. H.—Another sea picture but not an especially strong one.

N.—The two Beerys, Wallace and Noah, are in the picture, but their work is hopeless in the face of such an incoherent story and such a mediocre production.

T. R.—Obviousness of the plot and the woodenness of the characters restrict this appeal to the so-called "less discriminating."

F. D.—Poorly constructed and weak dramatic offering that doesn't get far as entertainment.

Scars of Jealousy

(Featured Cast—First National—6,246 feet)

M. P. W.—Aside from the unusual angle of the story this picture is not especially distinctive and from a standpoint of general interest does not appear to be as strong as other recent Ince productions.

F. D.—Southern feudal story that has original twists and furnishes first rate screen material.

N.—Strong enough in its plot, action and interpretation to interest even the most jaded of fans.

T. R.—Affords the average amount of entertainment although the plot is rather exaggerated.

E. H.—A thoroughly worth-while production filled with dramatic situations and suspense.

Racing Hearts

(Agnes Ayers—Paramount—5,600 feet)

M. P. W.—Any person with red blood in their veins will like "Racing Hearts," and you can use plenty of publicity in playing up this picture, as it is worth it.

E. H.—Swift-moving, high-geared automobile story that hits on all cylinders and furnishes good entertainment.

N.—This is a crackerjack of an automobile picture.

F. D.—Slight but agreeable feature that contains fair excitement in racing sequence.

T. R.—Good automobile romance and should easily satisfy the lovers of action.

Love in the Dark

(Viola Dana—Metro—6 reels)

M. P. W.—It is a production which ranks with the better class of program offerings and should prove satisfactory with average audiences.

F. D.—Pleasing comedy drama that offers satisfying entertainment; a good mixture of both elements.

N.—A snappy picture, well told and acted in a spirited fashion.

T. R.—A bully crook melodrama replete with thrills, comedy and pathos, "Love in the Dark" should give thorough satisfaction wherever it is shown.

E. H.—Viola Dana in a crook reformation story that differs but slightly from hundreds of others.

Adam's Rib

(Cecil DeMille—Paramount—9,526 feet)

M. P. W.—Far above the average from every standpoint and one which should particularly appeal to DeMille fans.

N.—Is a vivid refutation of the argument that there is nothing new in motion pictures.

T. R.—Quite outdoes any of its predecessors in point of spectacular beauty and gorgeous effects.

E. H.—It has many novel twists and DeMille manages to keep the interest up despite the slight story.

F. D.—Spectacular novelty that presents old situations with elaborate new dressings.

Hearts Aflame

(Featured Cast—Metro—8,110 feet)

M. P. W.—Fine acting, entertaining story and exceptionally thrilling forest fire in Metro feature.

F. D.—Fine timberland story that has been splendidly made with mighty spectacular and thrilling climax.

N.—A thrilling melodrama with splendid human interest and romance; many comedy touches.

T. R.—Spectacle that will live long in the memory of those who see it. * * * The story itself is interesting.

E. H.—A big box-office attraction with suspense, action and thrills enough for two features.

Making a Man

(Jack Holt—Paramount—6 reels)

M. P. W.—If your audiences accept the plausibility of the theme or are willing to overlook it, the picture affords good entertainment.

N.—Here we have a character study put over with enough surefire incident to make it fairly acceptable even though its development shows several gaps which insult the intelligence.

F. D.—Well directed picture that offers a good entertainment in spite of fallacy upon which the story is based.

E. H.—Excellent comedy-drama. * * * One of the all too rare pictures that fulfills every requirement of screen entertainment.

T. R.—Should go well in any locality, carrying equal appeal for both men and women.

Milady

(Featured Cast—American Releasing—7,622 feet)

M. P. W.—An interesting and romantic picture.

N.—The picture may be called interesting in places. * * * The story, however, is highly complicated and poorly edited.

T. R.—Picture is of a foreign make, but it is one of the better type.

F. D.—Well made French production that will please and interest those who like costume plays.

E. H.—Generally well directed and will prove interesting as screen entertainment.

Omar the Tent Maker

(Guy Bates Post—First National—8,090 feet)

M. P. W.—Its main points of audience appeal will be on the spectacular side and because of the fact that it is a story of life of the Persian poet, philosopher and scientist, Omar Khayyam.

F. D.—Just a movie with a Persian background. * * * Will probably disappoint those who expect big artistic production of "The Rubaiyat."

N.—There is distinct value to this production from the standpoint of its being a spectacle, but there is additional value in that it brings vividly to life the ancient and romantic Persian poet and philosopher.

T. R.—Seems to possess the elements which make a photoplay popular with the theatre man, and therefore with the public.

E. H.—Is an artistic eyeful. * * * As dramatic screen entertainment though it is too long.

Jazzmania

(Mae Murray—Tiffany-Metro—8 reels)

M. P. W.—Looks like a wow from the box office, for it offers so much in the form of honest entertainment and shows the star at her best.

F. D.—A lame excuse for the picture but lavishly trimmed by a bankroll too generous for such weak material.

N.—We'll wager that the exponents of syncopation eat this one up.

E. H.—Another fantastic bit of screen entertainment that should prove a good box office attraction.

T. R.—A picture that ought to swell the box office receipts wherever shown.

Gossip

(Gladys Walton—Universal—4,488 feet)

M. P. W.—Another Gladys Walton success.

N.—Until the climax, which is highly melodramatic and typically theatrical, the story sags in interest, offering nothing but some colorless incident.

T. R.—Registers as a clean-cut, wholesome picture which should win widespread popularity.

F. D.—Somewhat improbable but star gets it over satisfactorily.

E. H.—An interesting and amusing adaptation of Edith Delano's story, "When Carey Came to Town."

The Bolted Door

(Frank Mayo—Universal—4,126 feet)

M. P. W.—Stands out above the average picture principally because of the strong continuity of the story. * * * It is exceptionally well put together.

T. R.—For audiences who admire Frank Mayo the picture should go over satisfactorily.

E. H.—A well-made screen play with a convincing climax.

N.—The picture is staged well enough. * * * The story lacks detail and incident.

F. D.—A fairly good short entertainment. * * * Climax lacks punch.

Can a Woman Love Twice

(Ethel Clayton—F. B. O.—6,100 feet)

M. P. W.—Should be favorably received by a large class of patrons. * * * Particularly will it be apt to appeal to those who have suffered any loss through the war.

N.—A well constructed story, based upon a novel idea gives Ethel Clayton the best picture she has had for some time.

T. R.—An interesting melodrama, lacking much in the way of conviction but it sustains the interest.

F. D.—Good heart interest picture with appealing mother love theme that makes it first rate audience feature.

E. H.—Has story interest and is one of the best vehicles Ethel Clayton has had under the Film Booking office banner.

"Grumpy"

Theodore Roberts Scores Biggest Hit of His Career in Delightful William De-Mille Feature for Paramount

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Patrons of both the stage and screen all know Theodore Roberts because of his long and successful career in both fields, but never has he shown to such advantage as in "Grumpy." William C. DeMille has taken this successful stage play and made of it a really delightful picture that amuses you, thrills you, and at all times pleases you.

Excellent as is Mr. DeMille's direction, it is Theodore Roberts to whom the lion's share of the credit for this exceptionally entertaining production is due. Roberts does not act the role of "Grumpy," he lives it, and gives you the impression of getting a rare delight himself out of the performance. He makes the role of the grouchy, grumpy, but inwardly kind-hearted old criminal lawyer, intensely human. Never once does he overact and for subtle, repressed acting, it is just about as fine as it is possible to conceive.

Nor is Mr. Roberts' superb acting the only merit to the attraction although that alone would seem enough to insure its success. There is a vital story of the theft of a diamond which Grumpy solves through the medium of two gardenias. Though you are let into the secret immediately, it is a delight and absorbing study in following the way in which he solves the mystery, employing his own unique methods. You become so intensely interested that at times you want to put the old man wise and help him out.

All of this is wound around a pretty little romance in which you feel unusual sympathy for the girl who is apparently going to give her love to the wrong man. Characteristic of William DeMille, the story is told in an exceedingly direct and straightforward manner with no unnecessary scenes or characters, the dramatic interest and suspense being skillfully worked up and held.

The remainder of the cast gives fine support to Theodore Roberts. May McAvoy is attractive and winsome as the girl, Conrad Nagel as the unfortunate lover who loses the diamond has not much to do but gives a good account of himself. Second only in importance to Roberts' work as an example of excellent acting is Casson Ferguson as the society thief. He carries himself with a sureness and nonchalance that is exceptionally well done and really looks the part.

"Souls for Sale"

Goldwyn Has Exceptionally Fine Audience Picture in Rupert Hughes Story of Hollywood

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Rupert Hughes' latest Goldwyn production, "Souls for Sale," is an audience picture and a showman's picture if there ever was one. It contains an unusual number of angles that will appeal to the public. To begin with, it is a story of Hollywood and the motion picture colony. Fans will revel in the development which not only gives a lot of "inside dope" of the making of pictures, but reveals the players as just like other human beings with the same motives and desires, no better, no worse. Then there is a rattling good story of the studios, which is unusually gripping in its realism and finally a particularly thrilling and spectacular ending when the big circus tent burns. Added to all this and by no means a small part of the entertainment, are the always snappy, sometimes pointed, sometimes comic, subtitles of Rupert Hughes.

For the exhibitor this picture offers unusual advantages. The selling title, the fact that it is a story of the picture people themselves, the presence of an imposing array of prominent players, which has been augmented by the presence of about thirty-five other well-known stars and leading players. For instance there is a scene showing Charlie Chaplin directing his ten-reeler.

While Mr. Hughes has taken up his cudgels in defense of the Hollywood motion picture colony which has been the subject of adverse criticism, he has done so in a way that is highly entertaining, and at all times holds the interest.

It is a picture that is superbly directed and intensely human. Its hold on the spectator is little short of amazing. Telling the story of a small town girl and her experiences in Hollywood, it grips your attention and holds your interest intensely from the first scene until the final fade-out. He has improved upon the story as told in the novel.

The entire cast is excellent. Eleanor Boardman gives a wonderful performance in the principal role. Richard Dix, as the director who wins the girl's love, again adds to his laurels; Frank Mayo as the leading man, Barbara LeMarr as the vamp, Mae Busch as the leading lady in the picture company, and in fact every one in the unusually big cast give good accounts of themselves.

Here is a picture, Mr. Exhibitor, that will please and enthuse your patrons and cause you to smile broadly when you count up the receipts. Grab it, play it up big, exploit it heavily, don't be afraid for it will repay you.

She does not return to Hollywood with the company, but later goes there and tries to get a job in various studios where she sees the famous stars. In desperation she applies to Claymore, the director who helped her. He gives her a screen test for comedy but she fails. He then tries her in emotional work and she makes good, finally reaching stardom. Meanwhile her husband, who is a crook and murders his wives for their insurance, returns, and in the big climax where the circus tent used in the picture burns, he is killed in trying to save Remember from being killed by a wind machine he has started with the hope of "getting" Claymore. His death leaves "Mem," as she is called, free to accept the love of Claymore or the leading man and she chooses Claymore.

"The Leopardess"

Familiar Effects in Paramount South Sea Island Picture with Alice Brady

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

South Sea Island settings, the story of an untamed native girl and her marriage to a brutal adventurer, a sinister tribal superstition lurking in the background combine to make this picture a fair example of a popular type. There is nothing to make "The Leopardess" more distinguished than others of its class. It has the usual atmospheric appeal, and conflict between the primitive and the civilized. It should be agreeably received in the theatre where such pictures continue to please.

Alice Brady is not the type that is usually associated with the part she plays. Taking into consideration this lack of physical fitness, her performance shows an imagination and intelligence that compensates to a notable degree. Her later scenes New York surroundings and clothes seem much more plausible. She has several moments of vivid acting, proving that she has definite ability when there is an outlet.

Montague Love's performance is the most forcible note in the production. He is huge and terrific with a grasp on the primitive qualities of his role that makes every scene of his register as it should. There are some splendid water scenes. The caged leopardess provides a certain amount of suspense all the way through and determines the climax in an attack, successfully directed. The picture shows good construction and directing.

Length, 5,621 feet.

Story

The story deals with a superstitious South Sea island belle, who is coerced into marriage with a ruffianly American of wealth and a hunter of big game. He takes his wife to New York, together with a leopardess, his purpose being to tame both. But the magic by which he has held his island bride in leash fails, and after many dramatic incidents she regains her freedom. The leopardess kills the husband, and she is free to marry the man she loves—the skipper of her former husband's yacht.

"Quicksands"

Splendid Cast and Thrilling Drama in Picture Handled by American Releasing

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

As a production and as a performance, "Quicksands" is crammed with entertainment. The thrills are plentiful. The cast is a long list of famous performers who, individually and in the ensemble, make every scene vivid.

The strength of the cast as a box-office magnet can hardly be overemphasized. In addition to Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick there are at least ten well-known actors who have been associated with important work in the past. Almost every one of these plays a "heavy" in this picture, which will give some idea of the melodramatic character of the production.

Mexican border pictures, frequent as they have been, have seldom had the effect of an authentic military background which this has. A few shots from an aeroplane present a spectacular opening. The scenes in camp and the colored regiment comedy are effective and not overdone. The exteriors reveal long perspectives of the plains and hills beautifully photographed.

Richard Dix as the First Lieutenant, gives a performance that would instantly make him a screen idol, even if he had had no past successes. As a soldier and as a lover he gives an intensely sympathetic interpretation. Helene Chadwick is appealing personally, and a fine actress. Some of the other performers who are splendid are Noah Beery, Alan Hale, Walter Long and George Cooper.

The story concerns the smuggling of narcotics in Mexico. The atmosphere is realistic and the suspense, at times, tremendous. "Quicksands" seems like a far-fetched title, but applied figuratively, successfully describes the plot which is highly involved and melodramatic. The exhibitor in search of thrilling screen entertainment realistically portrayed will be pleased with this.

Story

Col. Patterson keeps a sharp lookout on a "cantina" across the Mexican border, headquarters of a viciously active ring of narcotic smugglers. Col. Patterson's First Lieutenant is in love with the Farrell girl, whose father is connected with a branch of the government service. A beautiful Spanish girl attracts his attention at the cantina for a reason the Lieutenant cannot understand. But when he discovers her costume hidden in a deserted cabin it all comes to him: she is the Farrell girl and he believes her to be one of the drug ring. With this discovery comes one exciting moment after another until the big climax.

"Is Money Everything"

Norman Kerry and Martha Mansfield Are Convincing in Lee-Bradford Problem Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In answering the question of the title, this production follows a consistent course of action, sufficiently out of the ordinary to sustain interest. It makes its appeal primarily to the thoughtful person. It will be appreciated by these, largely because of Norman Kerry's excellent characterization.

He pictures that rare screen character—a man almost impervious to an attractive woman's wiles. His work will be admired for its strength. The scenes between the vampire and him have been directed and the author's point has been illustrated—that acted with exceptional skill. Realistically there is a type of man who will fight against infidelity of his wife almost as he would for his own life. Martha Mansfield plays this unpopular part with an alluring sweetness. When he finally does falter, it is convincinly done and not over-charged with melodrama.

The settings are appealing and include a number of society affairs. Miriam Cooper enlists sympathy as the wife. Her final move to bring about her husband's financial ruin, and his subsequent taking of the cloth to atone for a life of greed may seem like extreme touches to some. But on the whole the story shows capable construction and leaves a feeling of satisfaction.

Story

John Brand is so blind in his ambition for wealth that he fails to give his wife any real happiness and plunges deeper and deeper into danger. She sees another woman's infatuation for him, and not knowing that he is struggling against this, takes desperate measures to save him. She has him ruined in the stock market, and in what follows, discovers his real character at last.

"The Lion's Mouse"

Hodkinson Film Made Overseas Has Confusing Plot and Lacks Realism

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

One of the most interesting experiments nowadays is the attempt of skilled American picture men to utilize European backgrounds by producing abroad. There has been much said about the handicaps encountered and the ability of Americans to overcome them.

One of these pictures is "The Lion's Mouse," produced abroad by the Hollandia Film Corporation for the Producers Security Corporation and distributed by Hodkinson. It is destined to play the small theatres despite the fact Oscar Apfel directed and Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh have the principal roles.

This apparently is not due to any lack of skill on the part of Apfel or the players, but is directly because of impossible story material and, to some extent, because of lamentably poor editing and titling. A highly melodramatic plot was built on a slim idea and developed in an involved fashion, so that a spectator's reaction to the picture can be only one of confusion. There is no inkling of what it is all about until the denouement, and then the slight explanation leaves you still bewildered. Furthermore, the veriest tyro of a film fan could not fail to recognize the picture as a foreign production.

Length, about five reels.

Story

Beverly White and Justin O'Riley alternate in possessing a package of letters. Beverly's husband, Roger Sands, becomes suspicious because she keeps a secret from him. Clo Riley, a shopgirl, is befriended by Beverly, plays detective for her, stealing the letters from O'Riley. A gang of blackmailers after the letters are foiled, and it develops that they had been trying to blackmail Beverly's brother.

"The Queen of Sin"

Impressive Spectacles Set in Weak Modern Story in Ben Blumenthal's Austrian-Made Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In presenting this Vienna-made production, Ben Blumenthal apparently staked its drawing power on the title and its appeal on the fact that it contains two huge spectacles, the invasion of the palace of the Queen of Sin and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. With its well handled mobs of hundreds, possibly thousands of persons, and enormous sets, these scenes are impressive, particularly the Biblical episode.

They are, however, but part of the picture and are introduced in a modern story that fails to hold the spectators' interest. Distinctly foreign from every angle, and occupying much of the footage of the picture, with acting that does not measure up to our standards, with continuity that is not at all times coherent, and a story that is further broken up by the injection of the two spectacles of thousands of years ago, with large numbers of persons in a fete scene handled in such a manner that it is confusing, this part of the story seems far away and at no time grips you.

On the whole, the picture does not measure up to American-made spectacular films and despite its big scenes, it would appear to be a production that will not appeal strongly to the American theatre-goer. Lucy Doraine, the featured player, has appeared in two other imported films, the remainder of the cast are unknown here. Attractive in the spectacles, she is not impressive in the modern story. The picture is beautifully photographed. Those expecting spicy scenes or action will be disappointed as there is nothing along this line that the censors could object to.

To save her mother from being jailed for forgery, Mary Conway gives up her poor artist lover, Harry Lighton, and agrees to marry Jackson Harber. During the stupendous betrothal fete Lighton shoots himself. Mary in revenge sets out to make Harber's son love her. She succeeds, but the boy's tutor to try and save him tells him the story of the heartless queen of sin to whom he likens Mary. Unsuccessful in this, he goes to Mary, denounces her and recalls the story of Lot's wife. Mary goes to sleep and sees herself in that role back in Sodom and Gomorrah. She learns her lesson and, awakening, returns to her artist lover, who recovers from his wound. Harber and his son become reconciled.

"Glimpses of the Moon"

All-Around Satisfactory Production by Paramount Featuring Bebe Daniels

Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

"Glimpses of the Moon" is a picture exhibitors will delight in presenting to their audiences, for it contains in such large quantities just the things patrons most desire.

A cast containing so many favorites, an author whose name is as well known as Edith Wharton and one of the "best six sellers" as the basis of the picture—all spell a box office success. All the exhibitor has to do is to let the public know about these attractive points to bring the people in, and once in they will feel they are receiving more than their money's worth.

This is a society drama with luxurious backgrounds and immense sets. It is the first production Allan Dwan has made since "Robin Hood" and the stupendous sets of that production were evidently in his mind when he was planning some of the palaces in Paris and villas at Venice. The fete in Venice also adds much to the gala attire of the film.

The gorgeous array of clothes will please the women.

Those who like a dash of spice in their pictures will find it here in the affairs of the society women, yet there is nothing which could in any way offend the most fastidious.

The acting is exceptionally good. Bebe Daniels is more than usually pleasing and brings great appeal in her characterization of Susy. Her dramatically emotional work will strengthen the admiration of her followers. Nita Naldi is getting more used to the camera but her work seems a little heavy—nothing subtle about her methods as a vamp. Many of his old friends will be glad to see Maurice Costello again looking a little more mature and dignified but the same likable Maurice. David Powell, as always, fascinates, and his impersonations of Nick will arouse a good deal of sympathy. Ruby de Remer is attractive in a butterfly role. Charles Gerard is another who turns a small part into a personality.

"Glimpses of the Moon" is an all-around satisfactory production, and will interest young and old, man and woman. A good story well told, the action moves along quickly and steadily, bringing dramatic situations and unfolding natural events in an interest sustaining manner.

Their friends give them large checks for wedding presents and let them use their villas in Paris, Venice and Monte Carlo for their honeymoon, so they live in luxury for one year, and then their money gives out. "Trimmed in Scarlet"

Universal Production Features Kathlyn Williams in Melodramatic Role

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

"Trimmed in Scarlet" has a strongly sentimental theme, concerning a daughter's love and sacrifice, for its chief appeal. Through some misfortune, lying partly in the directing, the story seems unconvincing. The production seems to lack that fundamental sincerity that is particularly necessary when dealing with a trite theme.

This quality may not be apparent to those for whom compromising situations, elaborate wardrobes and sentimental passages between mother and daughter suffice as entertainment. This is essentially what "Trimmed in Scarlet" offers.

Kathlyn Williams plays a woman who has become notorious since deserting her husband and child. After a quarrel with a suitor in which she believes she has accidentally killed him, her servant demands huge sums of hush money from her daughter. The remainder of the story concerns chiefly her daughter's great devotion to her, and the establishment of a mutual understanding that eventually rights everything. The action seems rather uneven. Through no fault of the cast the emotional moods of the picture have too much of a theatric flavor. Roy Stewart and Raymond Hatton do their best to make the performance interesting. Lucille Ricksen is charming in an ingenue role which will please many because of the vast wardrobe displayed.

Story

Cordelia Ebbing had been separated from her daughter Faith since Faith was a baby. She returns to find her grown and championing the mother she has never known in the face of the most damning evidence that her mother was "trimmed in scarlet." Faith even went so far as to commit a crime to shield her mother from slanderous tongues and when Cordelia learned this she nearly "went the limit" to protect her child. A kindly fate intervened, however. Then to Cordelia Ebbing came Revere Wayne, who had waited for her through the years, and to the mother was offered a haven of rest if she chose to accept it, and to the daughter came the promise of reward for her sublime faith.

"Crashing Thru"

Harry Carey's Newest F. B. O. Feature Is a Conventional Western Handicapped by Weak Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In his newest F. B. O. feature, "Crashing Thru," Harey Carey appears as a ranch owner who is troubled by the mysterious theft of his horses. While there is an abundance of material and sufficient action and incident to make a snappy Western of a conventional type, as this picture reached the screen it provides only mediocre entertainment and is not up to the standard of some of his other recent productions.

The star does good work as usual and he is assisted by a good cast which individually give entirely satisfactory performances. The plot, however, is somewhat complicated and so much attention has been given to developing the side angles that the interest is not concentrated but is continually switched from one thing to the other. This lack of cohesiveness results in only a mild interest being aroused, and at no time are you carried along tensely by the desire to know the outcome.

The picture is in six reels, and it would seem that judicious cutting would make it a stronger attraction, for there is some good material present. For instance, the introductory scenes showing how Carey's pal lost the use of his legs, is repeated at length in a flash-back. There also does not appear to be any strong logical reason for certain of the developments which consequently fail to register strongly, as when the little girl suddenly blossoms forth as a full grown woman with the excuse that she posed as a kid because her mother thought Blake (Carey) might like children. What was probably intended for the big punch scene, the stampede of the horses after the heroine has fallen in their path, arouses only a mild thrill and somehow seems to have been injected simply for effect.

"Backbone"

Production of Many Thrills, Featuring Alfred Lunt, Released by Distinctive Through Goldwyn

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Box office appeal has been well calculated by the producers of "Backbone." In this release from Distinctive Pictures, handled through Goldwyn, the exhibitor has a splendid opportunity to please a variety of popular tastes.

First of all there is an absorbing story. The suspense has been handled unusually well, so that this in itself would keep the spectator entertained. The cast, introducing Alfred Lunt, featuring Edith Roberts and including a number of other interesting personalities is an assured attraction. The material production is elaborate and painstaking. There is so much that will be diverting to the average spectator that the picture seems from every standpoint an advantageous offering.

Early in the picture the action reverts to the period of Louis XV in France. These scenes have been entertainingly produced and serve to give the following story a romantic background. They are not sufficiently prolonged to weary those who avoid costume pictures, and are dramatic as well as spectacular.

The modern chapters take place in America, mostly in and about a stately old mansion. One of its mysterious rooms, into which the heroine is never permitted to enter, is supposed to be occupied by her fast-failing grandfather. This unexplained imprisonment heightens the suspense and interest throughout. There are moments of swift melodrama, as when she attempts to climb the roof to get into his window. There are frequent touches of comedy, obvious perhaps, but well-timed. There is a strenuous endless fight that will be sure to thrill anyone who likes fighting on the screen. Alfred Lunt and Frank Evans are responsible for this big scene.

The many who have enjoyed Alfred Lunt on the stage will welcome his first screen appearance. In addition to having a strong, pleasing personality, he is a slightly different type and offers something new for the fans. Edith Roberts is charming in the role opposite. Edward Sloman has given the picture fine directing and the photography by Harry Fischbeck is another skilful feature.

Entertaining Story and Beautiful Scenic Effects in Associated Exhibitors' Release

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

This is an exceptionally good sheik picture. The story is so entertaining, the atmosphere so intriguing that it should please even where there has been a reaction against this type of attraction. It has been produced with an eye for spectacular beauty and acted with compelling skill. Monte Blue, Mary Alden and Mary Thurman unite in making the performance real.

The plot is an elaborate and involved treatment of the usual desert thriller—an American girl taken captive by a sheik. But the story has unusual vitality. There are different angles, all involving dramatic interest and constructed so as to give an effect of smoothness. There is continual action, so well managed that there is no impression of triteness.

Scenically, the production is a treat. Expert attention has been devoted to getting the best effects in framing and lighting. There are many thrills for anyone with a sense of beauty. There is a wide range of settings that seem different from what is usually seen, and show fine camera work.

An extensive cast has been used for the dramatic scenes. Monte Blue plays the desert bandit with dashing force. Mary Thurman, with her black hair worn bobbed and straight, is a striking figure in vivid scenes which she makes more vivid. Mary Alden, Frank Currier and Macey Harlam are all excellent.

Charles A. Logue, the author and director, has provided here a desert picture distinctly above the average. It has fast and intense action without any effect of unwholesomeness.

Written and directed by Charles A. Logue.
Photography by A. Fried and Gene O'Donnell.
Length, 6,357 feet.

Story

The traveler in this case is an impulsive and beautiful American girl whose innocent interference in a religious rite makes her hated by the sultan. When she is kidnapped by desert bandits who seek the favor of the sultan, the situation becomes romantic, dramatic and political, and sweeps on to a climax that comes after a thrilling hand to hand battle on the sultan's ship between his soldiers and the desert tribesmen.

"Outlaws of the Sea"

Fairly Dramatic Picture on Liquor Smuggling—American Releasing Corporation

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Life in a house-boat with rum-running and motor boat races for thrills is pictured in fairly interesting style in "Outlaws of the Sea." The greatest appeal is furnished by the scenes of action on water. Settings along the Florida coastline are introduced with picturesque effect and the story, while not especially forceful, is presented in a way that commands a certain amount of interest.

The heroine and her father unwittingly become the tools of liquor smugglers. They get involved in the plots of the leader of the band by renting his house and subject themselves to prosecution at the hands of the girl's sweetheart, a revenue officer.

Some of the situations have a rather novel bent. The house-boat scenes have a picturesque and dramatic appeal, and the undercurrent of intrigue will no doubt make the picture popular with some. Marguerite Courtot has a chance for considerable action, taking the wheel in a dashing motor-boat race. Gordon Standing handles the important role of the villain smoothly.

Robert Graham ..... Pierre Gendron

Capt. Abel Grimshaw ..... H. J. Pattee

Length, 5,355 feet.

Story

The house rented by Abel Grimshaw, retired sea captain, at Miami, is owned by Leonard Craven, leader of the rum-runners. All this is unknown to the Captain and his daughter Polly. Polly's sweetheart is commander of a revenue cutter, but he does not know that the girl is living in sinister surroundings. Nor does the Captain suspect that in piloting Craven's boat he really is smuggling liquor. Finally Craven taunts Polly with the fact that her father has been hoodwinking her. The girl dashes out in a motor boat to warn him of the danger. A trial follows and the Captain is unexpectedly cleared.

"Haunted Valley"

Thrilling Action, Interesting Story and Capable Performance in Pathe Serial

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Everything that makes for the successful thriller is included in Pathe's new serial, "Haunted Valley." The first three episodes show not only an abundance of exciting action but the progress of an unusually interesting story.

Ruth Roland, as the head and brains of a construction company in the West, has a course of intelligent action which she follows most capably. Her performance is always attractive because of this alert mental and physical quality. Jack Daugherty is likable and forceful in the leading masculine role and Larry Steers is good as the gentleman villain.

The conflict is more one of brains than muscle. There is no lack of physical action, but it is more the result of carefully laid plans than impulsive demonstrations just for the sake of thrills. The laying of the plot is in itself highly entertaining. It involves the possession of a valley with hidden wealth, which appears to be haunted because of ingenious electrical devices with which the heroine's enemies try to terrify her. There is considerable novelty in the material which is worked out in detail. Panoramic shots at the beginning reveal beautiful exteriors as the seat of action.

"Bound to the Enemy," the first episode, gives the serial a splendid start. It ends with an effective bit of suspense with Ruth Roland facing a revolver which has just killed one of her aids.

The second, "The Adventure in the Valley," solves the mystery of the valley, revealing a stream of water underneath which by irrigation will make the property invaluable as farm land. In the final scene, the heroine and Craig, an engineer who has befriended her, fall into the rushing waters underground.

Third, "Imperilled at Sea," shows the girl being deceived into boarding a foreign-bound vessel in the hopes of visiting a power house belonging to her firm. She is saved by grabbing hold of the rope-ladder on the hydroplane in which Craig has followed.

The Right Idea

BY ROGER FERRI

WE thought manufacturers of women's wearing apparel were the only ones who found inspiration in the wealth of antiques discovered in the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen. But judging from the batch of publicity copy we received this past week we're forced to change our belief, for no less than a dozen productions have been inspired by those historic findings.

ARROW FILM CORPORATION has the right idea. Immediately after acquiring a picture for independent distribution, they seek out a good showman and test the drawing power of the feature at his house. They get behind the showing with maximum exploitation, give it all the publicity they can get and in that way get a good line on just how much of a drawing card it is. The system is working satisfactorily.

LET'S hope that exchanges throughout the country will profit by sad experiences of the current year. Some of them, in a desire to get as much good product as possible, literally overstocked themselves. Result: Their overhead was so great they had to get out and buy comparatively inferior product at lower prices in order to get out from under.

THOSE "dope" pictures we have been hearing so much about are having a varied career. From Pennsylvania we received word about the "success of 'The Greatest Menace.'" The same mail brought a complaint from a New England exhibitor, who complained about a certain picture he charged had been sold to him "under false pretence." Frankly, we don't believe the public care much about this stuff even at this time when the country is united in fighting the narcotic traffickers.

WE'VE met a lot of queer birds in our time, but the queerest we've met in the business is the chap who works on a shoestring. And the picture business seemingly has more than its share of this type. For instance, a certain producer, who has been making a series of pictures, came East last week. He called the trade paper reviewers together and asked them to review a mediocre product. The picture was reviewed accordingly—much to the apparent dissatisfaction of the visitor. He showed another picture that the reviewers praised. These latter reviews he had reprinted and circulated broadcast, capitalizing the personal opinions of those whom he had previously charged with being "incompetent," "unfair," and what not. This "shoestring" never advertises, just comes and goes, makes charges left and right—and doesn't realize that, after all, he is his own worst enemy, let alone being a menace to the industry at large.

WE'RE sorry for the producer who spends $50,000 making a picture and who expects to invest only $500 advertising and exploiting it. He's the chap who is complaining about conditions in general. And believes he is correct in his deduction that the business "has gone to the smash." If he would only stand in front of a mirror and look into it he would have no difficulty ascertaining what is the matter with his business ventures.

NOW that "The Covered Wagon," Paramount's masterpiece of the current production year, has been uncovered to the public and pronounced "perfect," watch for a deluge of "leeches."

MR. INDEPENDENT PRODUCER, Distributor and Exhibitor, have you been reading Van Powell's "Straight From the Shoulder" department and Epes Sargent's "Exploitation" section? If you haven't, you haven't been playing square with yourself. Every line spells money for you.

IN fact, we congratulate ourself on being on the staff of such a wide-awake publication as Moving Picture World. Our big chief, Bob Welsh, is a showman-editor who knows the show business and journalistic profession from A to Z. Epes Sargent, our exploitation genius, is so far ahead of anybody in his division—they rank merely among the "also rans."

We wouldn't exchange the company of Johnny Archer, Charley Sewell, T. S. Du Ponte, Sumner Smith, Mary Kelly, Wen Milligen, Jim Milligen and the rest of the gang for the President's cabinet. And we mean it. All regulars—and hard workers.

And we'll tell the whole wide world we have a trade publication that not only leads 'em, but gives all the news to the trade when it is news.

Service? This publication gives more service to the trade in one day than our self-styled competitors give in two months.

Look the book over from cover to cover and say so, too.

MR. EXHIBITOR, don't worry about next summer. There are plenty of pictures in store for you. Independents will contribute their share of pictures. We know of at least a dozen truly big box office pictures that will be available through independent exchanges during the warmer months of the year.

THAT testimonial banquet to Ben P. Schulberg at the Ritz-Carlton the other night certainly won't soon be forgotten by those who were on hand. It was one of those gatherings of good fellows honoring a regular fellow who has consistently been turning out good money-making pictures so that all who handled them made a substantial profit. And that is as it should be.

EXPLOITATION — good exploitation — means money. But like counterfeit money there is also counterfeit exploitation. We, for one, believe in going the limit on a picture warranting exploitation—namely, a picture that entertains. Unfortunately, however, there is altogether too much counterfeit exploitation of poor pictures. Exploitation is intended to bring people to theatres. If the picture is satisfactory, the picture will make money; if it isn't, no amount of exploitation can save it. It can't be done. It isn't in the cards.

FARMING out" players is seemingly as popular in the picture business as it is in organized baseball. Only last week we heard Charley Burr had "farmed out" Johnny Hines to Warner Brothers. Now that same gentleman steps forth with news that he has loaned his promising kid star, Russell Griffin, to Famous Players. This system is quite popular out on the Coast, we hear, with stars' agents profiting liberally—in some cases too liberally.

BESIDES being a master at exploitation, Harry Reichenbach also is a business man of no small ability. We have always admired Harry for what he has been able to do in the way of exploiting pictures, but we admire him more for the fact that he has set a valuation on his services—and it's a question of take it or leave it. Too bad we have not more Harry Reichenbachs. They would be a credit to the business. Harry is a safe investment for any distributor because he knows his business. Which is more than we care to say about countless other gentlemen impersonating and passing themselves as exploitation and publicity managers.

TRUART bids fair to become quite a progressively determined organization next season for three important announcements concerning that company have emanated from the Coast during the past three weeks. Last week we were told about Elaine Hammerstein's four Truart pictures. This week word comes reporting a tie-up with William Farnum and Dolores Cassinelli.

YOU'VE got to hand it to Sol Lesser, Michael Rosenberg and Irving Lesser for daring. Their announcement this week of the release of five big pictures on a franchise basis at a time when there is very little doing cinematographically, certainly is demonstrative of the implicit confidence these gentlemen have in the independent market.

Principal Comes to Rescue with Solution of Summer Problem with Announcement of Franchise Plan

Setting new precedence—a precedence that will interest the motion picture industry in general but particularly independent exchangemen and exhibitors—Principal Pictures Corporation this week announced a franchise distribution plan that guarantees five super-special productions for release through foremost exchanges to theatre owners during a period when all producers and distributors are concentrating their plans on production for next season—the late Spring and Summer months.

Realizing, too, that productions released during that period will necessarily have to be of unusual attraction value, based on stories that carry extraordinary weight, written by famous authors and enacted by stars whose names are by-words in every American household, Principal Pictures Corporation in its pretentious plans, communicated this week to leading exchanges with whom they will become associated in this equitable proposition, made known the identity of their productions, authors, producers, directors and stars. They represent the greatest money-making galaxy of successful motion picture theatre business-building ever brought together under any one banner. The plan, in view of the fact that it is being materialized for operation during an otherwise dull part of the American theatrical season, involves the expenditure of over one million dollars in production and exploitation costs.

The five super-special productions that will be included in the Principal franchise arrangement follow:

"The Spider and the Rose," by Gerald Duffy, author of "Officer 666," "Sure-Fire Flint."

"East Side, West Side," by Leighton Osmun and Henry Hull, an adaptation of a Broadway stage success which for many months played to capacity audiences at the Nora Bayes Theatre, and written by two of the most famous young playwrights in America. The production is still being played throughout the country by stock companies.

"Temporary Marriage," a super-special dealing with the "dangerous age" of the fair sex, of divorce, happiness and love.

"The Man from Ten Strike," one of the most fascinating and thrilling of James Oliver Curwood's stories of the outdoors.

"Bright Lights of Broadway," scenario to be supervised by Edmund Goulding, one of the most popular writers of the screen today.

Bennie Zeidman, for many years associated with Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, and in the production of "I Am the Law," one of the best outdoor pictures of last season, has already completed "The Spider and the Rose."

Irving Cummings, one of the best known directors, already has completed producing on "East Side West Side," which Principal Film Corporation, of which William Fox is president, has this week wired from the Coast that it has completed "Temporary Marriage." George [illegible] Newman will shortly have finished [illegible] on "The Man from Ten Strike," while Bennie Zeidman will turn out "Bright Lights of Broadway."

Jack McDermott directed "The Spider and the Rose," in which appears such a distinguished all-star cast as Alice Lake, Ruby Richard [illegible], Gaston Glass, Joseph J. Dowling, [illegible] "The Miracle Man," James Rennie, Robert McKim, Noah Beery, [illegible], Frank Currier, Andrew Arbuckle, Alec Francis, Edwin Stevens and Louise Fazenda.

Lambert Hillyer, who has been [illegible] with unquestionable success, and who is now [illegible] "The Spider and the Rose," directed "Temporary Marriage." Kenneth Harlan, Montagu Love, Myrtle Stedman, Tully Marshall, Stuart Holmes and Maude George constitute the remarkable "name" and capable cast of [illegible].

Irving Cummings personally supervises the production of "East Side West Side." This is interrupted in New York this week by the most pretentious production he has ever [illegible] an all-star cast of artists including Kenneth Harlan, Louise Lovely, Wm. Von and others including Charles Mailes.

Robert [illegible] has been in charge of the production of "The Man from Ten Strike," the James Oliver Curwood story which marks the initial Guy Bates Post starring vehicle under the Principal banner. Guy Bates Post, one of the most distinguished stage and screen stars, heads a brilliant cast of artists who are extremely popular and who have proved their ability through tested achievements.

Conway Tearle, Grace Darmond and George Seigman constitute but a part of the all-star support Producer Newman has engaged for Guy Bates Post's production.

Webster Campbell will make "The Bright Lights of Broadway." The cast for this special will be selected this week. Producer Bennie Zeidman, who came to New York last week purposely to deliver to Mr. Lesser a print of the first of the five big Principal releases, "The Spider and the Rose," has opened negotiations with notable stars for important roles in "The Bright Lights of Broadway." Among those with whom he is negotiating are Tom Moore, Doris Kenyon, George Fawcett and others. The cast will be announced as soon as selected.

Philly Firm Buys "Red Schoolhouse"

W. E. Shallenberger president of Arrow Film Corporation, this week announced the closing of a contract with Messrs. Nunhild and Lindsay of the Deluxe Film Company, Philadelphia, whereby that company secures the rights to the Martin J. Hoyt production, "The Little Red Schoolhouse" for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

"The Little Red Schoolhouse" was made from the famous old stage play by Hal Reid, was directed by John G. Adolfi with a cast of favorites among whom are Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln and Sheldon Lewis.

Goldburg Closes Many Sales Contracts

Jesse J. Goldburg, President of Independent Pictures Corporation, this week announced sales on the first four releases, "Flames of Passion," "The Power Divine," "The Devil's Partner" and "The Valley of Lost Souls," to the following: Apollo Exchange, Inc., Greater New York and Northern New Jersey; Griever Productions, Northern Illinois and Indiana; All Star Feature Distributors for California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaii; Exclusive Film Co., Michigan; Lande Film Distributors Co., Ohio and Kentucky; Midwest Releasing Co., Iowa and Nebraska; Mountain States Film Attractions, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah; Quality Film Corp., Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Standard Film Co., Northern Missouri and Kansas, and active negotiations are now nearing completion with buyers for New England and the Seattle territory.

"An Only Son" Goodman's Next Equity

Daniel Carson Goodman announced to the Equity Pictures Corporation this week that he has practically completed the story and continuity of his next production, and the story will be submitted very shortly to the officials of that corporation for approval and for all necessary changes that may enhance the box office value of the new production.

The present title selected as a working title is "An Only Son." Dr. Goodman states his next contribution to the screen will be a brand new departure from the line of dramatic thought and action covered by his last two features, "What's Wrong With the Women" and "Has the World Gone Mad?" These two releases dealt with society life and the unrest that permeated this social order of beings, and by holding up a mirror of life to the audiences, Dr. Goodman showed them the apparent evidences and the panacea for all their social ills.

Shows "Jacqueline" to Legislators

AUGUSTA, Me.—(Special)—Ex-Governor Milligen, of this city, was host to members of the Maine Legislature on Wednesday evening, March 21, to an exclusive showing of the latest special of Pine Tree Pictures Corporation, a Maine corporation, "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," based on a James Oliver Curwood story. This was the first time such a stunt was worked here. The forest fire, which is featured in the production, was made in Maine as were also most of the exterior scenes. Governor Percival Baxter was very enthusiastic in his praise of the picture as were also the legislators. Ex-Governor Carl Milliken, treasurer of the company, and Senator F. W. Hinckley, president were also present. Ex-Governor Milliken came here direct from Paterson, N. J., where, on Monday night, he witnessed the world premier showing of the picture at the United States Theatre there.

Blumenthal to State Right "Othello"

Ben Blumenthal who created quite a sensation with his foreign-made "Othello" this week announced that he will state right that production. Howells Sales Company will release the picture independently, while Associated First National Exchange in New York will handle the picture in the metropolitan district.

Phil Goldstone Sued by Dick Talmadge

LOS ANGELES—Special—Richard Talmadge, who for the past year has been starring in a series of independent pictures, has broken with Phil Goldstone, who produced his pictures. According to his statement he is threatening suit on a breach of contract charge.

Toledoians Wild Over "Luck"; Holy Week Jinx Is Broken

[Exclusive to Moving Picture World]

TOLEDO, O.—Johnny Hines has completely captivated Toledoians, so much so that the next time he is shown here his picture bids fair to be given a royal reception. House manager, audiences and press were unanimous in declaring Johnny Hines one of the most entertaining stars on the screen today, for the show opened to capacity on Monday and business continued accordingly all week. Johnny Hines was the magnet, but his latest Charles C. Burr special, "Luck," was the vehicle by which the audiences that jammed the Princess Theatre were entertained to the degree where they went out praising the production and sending audiences on the following day that exceeded, in number, those of the opening.

This marks the premiere public showing of "Luck." It is understood here that the production was shown in several other cities, but that was for a testing period. The praise accorded "Luck" by critics of the Toledo News-Bee, Toledo Blade and Toledo Times were the most enthusiastic of the season, Hines' future being pictured as "the most promising of any young man now making a living via the screen," as one reviewer put it. The clean cut tactics of the star made a deep and favorable impression on the audience, which thoroughly enjoyed the production, judging from the hilarity that prevailed. While there is comedy, the picture is not without its serious moments that are cleverly put over. "Luck" is one of the best pictures shown in Buffalo this season.

The picture was well exploited, particularly in the newspapers, considerable space being used. But the space used was not in excess of that used by other houses, which furnished stubborn opposition. Several of them, in view of Holy Week, used special attractions as a bait for business.

CLEVELAND—(Special) — Reade's Hippodrome is doing its share to keep independent productions on the map, for this week it is featuring C. C. Burr's "I Am the Law," which opened to a big business Monday and continued encouragingly through Tuesday and Wednesday, when this report was filed, despite the Holy Week setback. Next week Principal Pictures Corporation's production, "The World's a Stage," will be the attraction at this house.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—(Special)—Warner Brothers' "The Little Church Around the Corner" did something like $14,000 at the Strand Theatre here last week. The picture was well advertised and the gross figures represent an unusually good business for that time of the year.

BOSTON — (Special) — "Brass," Warner Brothers' latest special, played out its three-week run at the Park Theatre, closing Saturday night. Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships" followed. "Brass" did about $8,000 on the third week, the total gross takings for the three weeks amounting to about $26,000, which is very good, for the picture opened at a bad time and in the Lenten season. The seating capacity is limited and the top figures were enabled to be got for the top admission was $1 at night.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Special)—"Thorns and Orange Blossoms," an Al Lichtman special, was booked into the Rialto for Holy Week and bids fair to score well, judging from the enthusiasm of the opening day audience.

NEWARK, N. J.—(Special)—Marie Prevost in "The Beautiful and Damned" topped the bill at the Goodwin last week, and on Saturday and Sunday drew packed houses.

PATERSON, N. J.—(Special)—"Bell Boy No. 13" shared the double bill with "The Broken Silence" at the Garden Theatre here this week. Business this week threatens to be off, for the openings were the weakest of the season.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. — (Special) — Richard Talmadge has developed into one of the best stars in this city. This week he is being starred at the Victoria in "Taking Chances." This is a whirlwind picture and particularly appropriate for double bills and combination houses, although it is a shame that the producers of Talmadge pictures will not spread themselves on this lad.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. — (Special)— The first independent picture to be booked in the million-dollar Eastman Theatre was shown this week when Wesley Barry appeared in Warner Brothers' "Rags to Riches." Despite the fact that this is Holy Week, the management is looking forward to a good business.

BOSTON, MASS.—(Special) — "The Drug Traffic," which Harry Segal is handling in this territory opened Monday, Gordon's Scollay Square, where it played to capacity week. This house is located in the centre of the so-called "tough section" of the Hub and the picture drew surprisingly big all week, on a bill with vaudeville (five acts) and Jack Holt in "Nobody's Money."

BALTIMORE, MD. — (Special) — Betty Blythe's latest picture, "The Darling of the Rich," was given its premiere showing at the Parkway Theatre here Monday night and bade fair to score financially this week.

Detroit 'Changemen Making Changes

DETROIT—Dad Whitman, of the Rex Film Company, will make public this week the announcement which he has held so secret the past ten days. Dad is building up a real independent exchange and is very careful in buying pictures. His policy is to never misrepresent a picture. In other words, Dad isn't going to say they are specials if they are merely program pictures, but if he has a special he'll admit it. Tom Whitman is covering the state, while Wally Baker is in charge of city sales. Both are meeting with good success.

J. O. Brooks who resigned from Goldwyn, has joined the Warner Exchange, and started out Monday morning to cover the state. Ollie was never more sold on a product in his life than he is on Warner pictures, present and future productions. He believes that with the plans they have under way that next year will see Warner Brothers releasing the greatest specials of any producing company.

"Poor Men's Wives," an Al Lichtman production released through the Standard, will follow "The Christian" at the Broadway-Strand. "The Christian" will likely stay until April 1. "Poor Men's Wives" should stay there at least two weeks.

Art Elliott, of the Film Booking Office, received a print on the second Daniel Carson Goodman picture, "Has the World Gone Mad," which is being screened for the first-run exhibitors.

Jack Moss, 304 Film Building, Detroit, who some time ago purchased "Ten Nights in a Barroom" for Michigan, has just bought another picture, "The Schemers," which is a dramatic story of unusual interest.

The Favorite Film Company announces that nearly every key city in the state has been closed on "Sure-Fire Flint" and all first-run zone Detroit houses have arranged play dates on this subject.

Engagements played to date have shown a big increase over "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which had such a successful run in this territory.

Southern States Buys "Notoriety"

The territory including Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas was sold by Sam Sex, sales manager of L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North to the Southern States Film Co., Inc., of Atlanta, on the Will Nigh photodrama "Notoriety." This sale almost completes the disposal of state rights on the society drama. An early first run has been arranged on a Southwestern circuit, and an exploitation campaign to be conducted on one of the largest scales the territory has yet seen, will soon be launched. A tie-up with the Dallas newspapers on an Anti-Notoriety campaign is being perfected.

Zieler Buys "Why Women Re-marry"

A. Canter, sales manager of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., announced this week the sale of the first Milton Sills picture to be released by Associated Photo-Plays to Sam Zieler, president of Commonwealth Film Company.

The first of the series of new Milton Sills pictures made by the John Gorman Producing Company has been titled "Why Women Re-marry."

Charles Baumann Seeks Scripts for House Peters Productions

The market is being combed to find suitable vehicles for the first of the new House Peters Productions following the announcement last week that he had been signed up by Chas. O. Baumann on a long term contract to head his own company. To find just the right story for this popular leading man, who has become one of the best box office drawing cards now appearing on the screen, is not an easy task.

Among the directors who are producing or will produce pictures for Principal Pictures Corporation are Lambert Hillyer, who is now making "The Spoilers," Webster Campbell, Irving Cummings, Jack McDermott, Robert Thornby and others. Blizzard Maroons Cast of "Wolf Fangs" at Work

LOS ANGELES—(Special)—In the filming of the latest Warner Brothers picture under the working title of "Wolf Fangs," featuring the famous Belgian police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, director Chester M. Franklin and his group of players encountered the biggest blizzard that has ever faced a detachment of film players visiting the Feather River country, Plumas County, California, according to a letter received by Sam and Jack Warner at the coast studios.

Director Franklin makes known that three more weeks will have to be spent filming the picture in the frozen north, if the members of the company "live that long." The letter in part reads as follows: "In the first place we never got our heavy clothes until two days after our arrival, as some kind baggage man put everything aboard the train but the things we actually needed. Our arrival was heralded by a blinding blizzard that swept for miles around.

Eddie Polo, who recently returned from England, will be starred in "The Real Thing," which the Walker-Polo Company is making here. John W. Grey is directing, while Alfred Gosden is photographing. The cast, in addition to Polo, includes Katherine Bennett, George Williams, Jack Carlisle and Max Wexler. Polo's last American picture was a serial, made for the independent market and distributed by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

The complete cast for Principal Pictures Corporation's "The Meanest Man in the World," which Eddie Cline is directing, includes Bert Lytell (starred), Bryant Washburn, Helen Lynch, William Conklin, Frances Raymond, Blanche Sweet, Maryon Aye, Lincoln Stedman, Forrest Robinson, Ward Crane, Victor Potel and Frank Campeau.

After having completed making distribution arrangements with Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, H. A. Sebastian of Belasco Productions, Inc., is back in Los Angeles. C. B. Lenore Ulric and Hope Hampton, two new Warner Brothers stars, are expected to arrive at the Warner studios early in July to work on "Tiger Rose" and "Gold Diggers," respectively, both David Belasco stage successes. Edmund Goulding will adapt both to the screen.

Bennie Zeidman's tieup with Principal Pictures Corporation caused no surprise here. It was generally believed here when Benny left last month that he would ultimately give the Lesser-Rosenberg organization the distribution privileges to the production, "The Spider and the Rose."

M. H. Hoffman of Truart Productions, Inc., is here overseeing production of "Broadway Gold," his first Elaine Hammerstein special. It is believed that while here Hoffman, who is also interested in the Mae Murray pictures, will make arrangements for a studio for his units.

I Am an Independent!

I am an Independent.
I am the man whom you cursed.
I am he whom you condemned.
I am the man who came back.
When you said it couldn't be done.
I am the one exhibitors laughed at.
I am the one exhibitors dodged.
Oh, yes, I'm that blacksheep of the business—
The bird you scoffed at—
The bloke you scorned—
The outcast you ignored.
Yes, I'm an Independent.
And you can tell that to the world.
I'm the Independent you branded impossible.
And I'm the guy that is here to prove—
That, if you've got it in you, you can come back.
I know.
I've been through the mill.
Yes, I'm that outcast whose comeback
Glorified Independent,
But willing to help you.
For you who scorned, who condemned, who ridiculed and laugh
Need me now.
And I'm regular;
So I've come back for your sake.
And Independent,
Who's here to help you.—R. F.

Showmen Mopping Up on "Little Church" with Exploitation Gags

Warner Brothers' "Little Church Around the Corner," directed by William A. Seiter and adapted from the stage play by Charles E. Blaney and the novel by Marion Russell, was given its New York premiere presentation at the Strand Theatre during the week of March 25. Last week at the Strand, Providence, R. I., this feature did a gross of $14,000.

The cast headed by Claire Windsor includes Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long, Pauline Stark, Alex Francis, Margaret Seddon, George Cooper, Winter Hall, and Cyril Chadwick. The story and scenario was written by Olga Printzlau.

The showing at the Strand was preceded by an exploitation campaign which was confined to the newspapers, the use of merchant counter co-operative cut-outs, window cards, billboards, doorknob hangers and the use of the management of novelty heralds.

In direct contrast to the Strand engagement, the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, utilized in addition to the advertising accessories one of the big scenes in the production, and played up the marriage angle. For example, a teaser campaign was started in the local dailies with the following: "Has she asked you to take her to 'The Little Church Around the Corner?' She will and there is not a chance to say NO—this time."

Another teaser ad read: "Man—tell her you will take her to 'The Little Church Around the Corner.' Not in New York, but here in Des Moines—soon." The teasers were run for a number of days, after which considerable newspaper advertising space made known the fact that the picture would be shown at the Des Moines Theatre.

An American company is making the picture.

"La Garconne" is quite popular in France and, incidentally reported by cinema experts of Paris, to be the best and biggest picture made by French producers. It was to be given a premier showing this week in Paris.

Adolph Zukor is being given splendid and deserving advance publicity in England preparatory to his visit to that country within a few weeks. Editor Ernest W. Fredman of The Film Renter and Moving Picture News, recently editorially paid him a remarkable tribute.

The children situation in England is much the same as it is in America. Cinema owners there are in a quandary for want of a proper solution for the situation.

Exploitation is getting quite a boom among cinema owners in England and exploiteers are expanding the propaganda so effectively that theatre owners in France, Spain, Italy, and Switzerland already are considering further boosting their pictures.

The exchange rates, lower than ever, is certainly discouraging production in continental European countries right now, although the propaganda against American productions continues with greater force every month.

Commonwealth Sets Sale Month

Exhibitors of New York and Northern New Jersey are responding splendidly to the announcement of Sam Zierler's Commonwealth Film Corporation that from April 16 to May 12 will be celebrated as Commonwealth month. Announcement to that effect was sent out this week by Sam Zierler.

The double bill policy introduced at the Strand Theatre in New York this week came as somewhat of a surprise to exchangemen in that city. Whether or not this is a forerunner to competing double bill experiments remains to be seen, although the situation generally is being received with skepticism.

Coast Business Better; 'Changes In 1923-24 Tieups

SAN FRANCISCO—(Special)—Gene Emmick, of Progress and Peerless Features, spent last week in Los Angeles with comedy producers who have arranged to deliver Peerless eighteen two-reel comedies by January first. Two prominent comedians have been secured and possibly a comedienne, well-known for her past performances in the comedy field, will arrange to make six two-reelers which will go through Peerless. Gene is also in conference with the Amalgamated Film Corporation directors who will make their future productions for Amalgamated in the southern city, and the Progress Exchange is endeavoring to have them make "Easy Money," from the book by Edward Owings Towne, instead of "The Fire Patrol" and "Sunshine of Paradise Alley," as the comedy market is sadly in need of more product. As the boys say, they have sufficient melodrama for several months.

Ed Rubens, the hustling celluloid salesman, has been making a special trip in the interest of Progress Features. Down the South Coast conditions reported far better than expected. All the towns doing a prosperous business. The territory south of Santa Barbara is reported even better than the north section.

Rubens found Los Angeles to be quite a theatre town. One in every suburban block, sometimes two, and quite often each of the four corners of cross streets occupied by a large theatre. Business was very good indeed for Ed in the southern city and his reports of the San Joaquin Valley so far have been splendid. Bakersfield especially came through very generously for the features.

George A. Oppenheimer, who directs the destinies of the George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., Exchange on Turk street, returned last week from New York City with a bundle of contracts in his brief case for some unusually fine cinema productions to be distributed in this territory.

He pre-viewed "Brass," the Warner Brothers picturization of Charles Norris' famous novel, while in New York, and he proclaims it to be even better than "Smilin' Through" and "East Is West," two of the most successful offerings of last year, and which was directed by Sidney Franklin, who also directed "Brass."

Edgar T. Roberts, better known to exhibitors in Northern California as "Torey," the booker for George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., will sweep out into the one-nighters and display his ability as a salesman for the same firm, according to Morgan A. Walsh.

Messrs. Max Balaban and Maurice Katz, heads of the chain of biggest motion picture theatres in the world, are paying First National releasing units a visit. Katz and Balaban arrived in Los Angeles this week from Chicago. They are at the Hotel Alexandria.

Starkman has purchased the rights for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. It is his intention to present this feature version of the Old Testament for an extended engagement in one of the leading downtown legitimate theatres in Philadelphia within the near future. He presented it successfully at Woods' Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., a short time ago, following which he acquired the rights for his territory. Weiss Brothers will market the picture.

Legislators Praise Anti-Dope Film

HARRISBURG, PA.—(Special)—Following a special showing given members of the Pennsylvania Legislature here last week, of the Quinn & Mayer picture, "The Greatest Menace," handled locally by De Luxe Film Exchange, of Philadelphia, the House members of that body passed a resolution, introduced by Representative Armstrong of Armstrong County, commending the picture. According to Bill Haggerty and Oscar Neufeld, who arranged the showing, the picture also has been endorsed by the State Health Board through its executive head, David Blair.

Change "Wolf Fangs" to "The White Silence"

"The White Silence" is the title definitely chosen by Warner Brothers for the production which has been announced under the working title of "Wolf Fangs," featuring the Belgian police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin. Harry Rapf is supervising production on this picture. Chester M. Franklin is directing.

Second Nigh Feature Ready, Weber and North Expand Interests

With the completion last week of the second Will Nigh production, tentatively titled "Morals and Marriage," Weber & North, who will release the picture in the independent plan, this week prepared their plans for extensive operations in the independent market next season. While nothing official has emanated from the offices of the firm it is known that Bobby North, that dynamic head of the firm, is negotiating with a number of authors and producers whose pictures that company will release. Negotiations, it is said, are also under way for the services of a number of well-known stars.

The finish of Nigh's latest marks ten weeks of straight shooting—the longest that Nigh has ever taken in making any of his record successes. The proportions of this feature stamp it as probably the first real super-special to be produced by an independent. It is taken as a sign of the enterprise and ambition of Weber & North, only recent arrivals in the independent producing market, to set higher standards in their field. Altogether, 200,000 feet of film were photographed on this feature, 213 scenes were taken, 800 people were used, 130 costumes were worn 16 special sets were constructed. More than 80 tapestries and rugs were hired and the contents of four private collections of antique statuary was requisitioned. The total equipment of two private museums of period furniture was included in staging.

Nigh's second production is said to be exceptional in its cast. Tom Moore is the male star and appears here in his first state-right production since he rose to fame. Ann Forrest, star of "The Town That Forgot God" and "If Winter Comes," was engaged for the feminine lead and a cast of the best character actors filled the remaining roles. Harry Morey, Edmund Breese, Tom Lewis, Florence Billings, Shannon Day, John Goldsworthy, Charles Craig and two juveniles, Mickey Bennett and Russell Griffin—are some of the members of the cast. It is estimated that the cast alone represents the biggest investment ever put into an independent production.

Bennie Zeidman Ties Up "Spider and the Rose" with Principal

Bennie Zeidman, after several weeks' negotiations, has finally closed with Sol Lesser, Michael Rosenberg and Irving Lesser to have Principal Pictures Corporation release his latest special production, "The Spider and the Rose," which has won considerable praise from the trade press reviewers. The picture is one of the best of the season with a lineup of splendid names, including Alice Lake, Baby Richard Headrick, Gaston Glass, Robert McKim, Noah Beery, Frank Campeau, Edward Stevens, Hector Sarano, Otis Harlan and Alex Francis.

Mr. Ziedman's splendid picture will be the first of the "Big Super Six" program that Principal Pictures Corporation will release through exchanges this season on a franchise basis.

Burr Farms Out Griffin to F. P.-L.

C. C. Burr has "farmed out" another one of his stars. This time it is his five-year-old "find," little Russell Griffin who, by the way, has been much sought after by the big producers because of rare ability, so cleverly demonstrated in "Sure Fire Flint," with Johnny Hines; "You Are Guilty," with James Kirkwood and Doris Kenyon and in the All-Star comedies.

Russell has been loaned to Famous Players-Lasky and is to have an important role in that company's screen production of "Lawful Larceny," adapted from the Broadway stage success. Little Russell will be one of the featured players with Lew Cody, Hope Hampton and Nita Naldi and will have Allan Dwan as his director.

C. B. C. and Simmons in Big Foreign Deal

Announcement emanated from the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation in New York this week that it had sold the entire foreign rights to all its pictures to Joseph Simmons, of 145 West 45th street, New York. The territories excluded in the deal are the United States, Canada and Argentine. Mr. Simmons is well known in the field of foreign rights distribution, being one of the oldest in the market. The pictures he will take over immediately include the Edward Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," "More To Be Pitied," "Only a Shop Girl" and "Temptation."

"Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn seem to have a sure sense of values," he said. "They have hit the trend that the exhibitor and the public wants. The reception that has already been given these first four features in the American market proves this fact, and also that they are fair in all their dealings, and that their productions are of such a nature and available to exhibitors on so equitable a basis that everyone concerned can make his fair profit. In addition to this, they get out a fine assortment of exhibitor and exchange helps, and their advertising and publicity accessories are all just what is needed and excellently selected and worked out. I will be delighted to handle the entire foreign distribution on their whole output—because one can see already they are headed in the right way. I am confident that if they continue as they are going, and as all their production plans indicate, the C. B. C. organization will be one of the biggest factors in the industry."

"For You My Boy" Ready for Sales

William L. Roubert has finished the cutting and editing of "For You, My Boy," his latest production, soon to be released on the independent market. The titles are now being made and it is expected that the picture will be ready for its initial showing to state right buyers early next week.

The outstanding feature of this production is said to be that it is a showman's picture for showman. These are reported to have been amply set forth in the elaborate twenty-page press book that is now being prepared and should go a long way to making of this picture one of the outstanding box office successes of the independent market.

"For You, My Boy," is a picture dealing with the little depicted and often repressed emotion of father love and for this reason is different from the ordinary picture shown upon the screen.

Columbia-Liberty, Pittsburgh, Merge

PITTSBURGH — (Staff Special) — Probably the most interesting film news of the week in the local section is in the announcement from the Columbia Film Service, Inc., that they have taken over the films of the Liberty Film Renting Company, the transaction including the transferring of the lease of the Liberty's premises on the ground floor of the building at 1010 Forbes street, to the Columbia Exchange.

The Columbia Exchange will move their offices from 119 Ninth street, their present location, to the new address on April 1, when they will have the best located independent film exchange in Pittsburgh.

The sale of the Liberty Film Renting Company marks the retirement of Mayer Silverman, one of Pittsburgh's oldest film men, from active participation in the film business. Mr. Silverman will hereafter devote his entire time to the interests of the Western Pennsylvania Amusement Company, in which he is a stockholder, and which company controls six picture theatres, four in Pittsburgh and two in Beaver Falls, Pa.

The acquisitation by the Columbia Exchange of the large list of films formerly owned by the Liberty, and the consequent change in location, marks another rapid stride forward in the remarkable progress being made by this live-wire exchange. The Columbia Exchange was organized two years ago this April by Messrs. John Davis, James Alexander and Edward Lebby, and since its inception has been a big success. The Columbia has released many of the best independent productions in the past few months, and coupled with their fair dealing with the exhibitors, have established an enviable reputation for their office.

Announcement has just been made that Daniel Carson Goodman's long-awaited Equity production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" has just been secured for release in the Pittsburgh film section by the Film Booking Offices of America. Manager A. H. Schnitzer, of the local F. B. O. office, is highly enthusiastic anent the production, and predicted that it would be a sensation in film circles.

Miss Henrietta Friday, who will be remembered by many of the exhibitors as having been formerly employed at the Wid Gunning exchange here, and who has been away from the film exchange life for several months, is back with us again, this time as stenographer at the Supreme Exchange.

O. B. Hullinger and Frank Windstein, both well-known as film salesmen in the Pittsburgh territory, have deserted the business and are now selling automobiles, the former is selling Stephens cars, while the latter is confining his efforts to the Chevrolet.

"Hard boiled" reviewers, exhibitors with widely divergent classes of patronage and distinguished "movie fans" go on record with Pathe as a solid unit of Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" boosters, it is said.

Of his pre-lease showing of "Safety Last" at the Carolina Theatre, Pinehurst, N. C., Manager Charles W. Piquet writes "'Safety Last' is one of the best comedies ever made. It will prove a boon to every exhibitor, both in box office receipts and prestige, who is wise enough to book it. My advice to every exhibitor is to book it, pay a good price for it, raise his admission prices and get out and holler!

"The American people are hungry for this kind of entertainment."

Manager Stanley C. Warrick, of the Beaux Arts Theatre, Palm Beach, Fla., wired to General Manager Elmer Pearson as follows about results of his world's "'Safety Last' is a knockout. premiere of "Safety Last:" Played yesterday and today to the largest Saturday and Sunday business in the history of the house, exceeding even that of 'Robin Hood' which established a new record three weeks ago."

Victor Hugo Story Filmed in Italy

"Toilers of the Sea," Victor Hugo's picturesque romance, has been filmed in Italy by R. William Neill with a cast in which American players predominate and has been obtained for distribution by American Releasing.

"Toilers of the Sea" is as well known as the genius of Victor Hugo. It ranks with "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" as a masterpiece of the novelist's art, and is even more replete with elemental conflicts in which the hero is shown at war, not with his emotions so much as with the sea. "Toilers of the Sea" was published in 1866 and was written in Victor Hugo's exile on the Island of Jersey in the English channel.

"Success" Is to Be Seen at the Capitol

"Success," a Ralph Ince production based on the stage play of the same name, will be shown at the Capitol Theatre in New York. No date for the presentation of this Metro release at the world's largest theatre has yet been set, but its definite announcement is expected soon.

Samuel Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol, and one of the best known figures in American motion picture presentation, witnessed a showing of "Success" recently and determined at once to find a place for it on the already crowded schedule of the Capitol.

"Success" is a story of the stage, told from the inside. It is a human interest melodrama, with novelty in plot construction as well as in story and atmosphere, it is stated.

The authors and adapters of the screen version of "Success" are Adeline Leitzbach and Theodore A. Liebler, Jr. It was produced by Murray W. Garsson. Metro Pictures Corporation is the distributor.

"The Crash" Sent to Vitagraph Studio

Miriam Cooper in Preferred Film

Miriam Cooper, as a result of her work in "The Girl Who Came Back," has replaced Marjorie Daw in "Daughters of the Rich." Gasnier now has the picture well under way at the Schulberg Studios for Preferred Pictures. It will be released next month in the first group of Al Lichtman attractions.

The complete cast is Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Miriam Cooper, Joseph Swickard, Stuart Holmes and J. Gunnis Davis.

Shrieked at "The Shriek of Araby"

"Occasionally there comes to the screen a picture which urges an exhibitor to express a genuine appreciation thereof. Such a picture is 'The Shriek of Araby,' now in the fourth week at the Symphony," said Dr. H. B. Breckwedel, of the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, in a letter to Mack Sennett, producer of this feature length Ben Turpin comedy, which was still playing to capacity business under an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release.

"And this expression of appreciation is not influenced simply by the box office success of 'The Shriek'—that is, of course, very gratifying, but it is also very gratifying to be able to sit in my office and listen to shrieking audiences acclaiming their approval of a picture as they are doing in the case of 'The Shriek.'

"It would be superfluous to wish 'The Shriek' the same success throughout the country that it is enjoying at the Symphony—that is already assured."

Hall Making Debut as Director

Sheridan Hall, formerly with the Lubin Company and American Studios, is making his debut as a full fledged director with Distinctive Pictures Corporation, having been engaged by Arthur S. Friend to do "The Steadfast Heart"—third of Distinctive program of twelve big features for 1923.

First National Art Director Has Novel Way to Lower Costs

The art of miniature stage building has been introduced into the production of motion pictures as another means toward economy and efficiency.

The use of models, for experimental purposes, is not new to the stage, but their use as a factor in the preparation of scenic effects for the film is regarded as an innovation.

The system of planning the picture settings by means of the quickly constructed models has been brought to the movie lot by Wilfred Buckland, art director, who is now engaged in laying out the settings for "Trilby," du Maurier's classic, which is to be produced for release by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by Richard Walton Tully, the producer of "Omar the Tentmaker," "The Masquerader," and other popular pictures.

Mr. Buckland graduated to filmland from the theatre, where in turn as actor, manager, stage director and producer, he learned the value of the model as an adjunct to stage efficiency.

With the more general use of model building in motion picture production, Mr. Buckland promises the elimination of many delays, expenses and wastes, which in the past, have been considered unavoidable.

Every setting that will be used in the filming of "Trilby" will first be built in miniature, either by Mr. Buckland or under his direction. Assisting him in this will be Conrad Tritschler, a London artist, who was brought to America by Mr. Tully, especially to assist in the artistic development of the piece.

MICKEY DANIELS

who has just been engaged on a five-year contract by Hal Roach. He starts in the two-reel comedy, "Boys to Board," which Pathe announces for release on April 8.

"The Mystery Box" Gets Big Exploitation in St. Louis

Announcement has been received from the St. Louis Branch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, has contracted to use eighty stands in advertising "The Mystery Box," a one-reel Bray production on radio, released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This is considered to be something unusual in the way of advertising for short subjects in the estimation of the Hodkinson officials.

C. D. Hill, branch manager for St. Louis, was responsible for this successful tie-up. Through the St. Louis Post Dispatch arrangements have been made to broadcast the news of the film's showing every night for the entire week. The Post Dispatch has also agreed to give two inches of free publicity to every theatre booking this production within a radius of forty miles.

Many additional contracts have ben made for the showing of "The Mystery Box" in the St. Louis territory. In lieu of the increased demand for "The Mystery Box" additional prints have been sent to the Hodkinson Exchange in St. Louis for their use.

"Suzanna" Makes a Hit at the Capitol

Mack Sennett's big comedy drama feature, "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand, is said to have made a distinct hit with public and critics when this Allied Producers and Exhibitors' Corporation release had its Broadway premiere Sunday, March 25, at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

"Suzanna" opened to capacity business, and the consensus of opinion among the New York reviewers was that Mabel Normand can be subjected to but one criticism, namely that she doesn't appear as a star in such a vehicle as "Suzanna" often enough.

"Mabel Normand's appearances on the screen are regrettably infrequent," says Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald. "Once a year, perhaps, she steps forth to remind us that she is still the first comedienne of the silent drama—but this annual visit isn't nearly adequate."

"The next time any one raises the question: 'What is the matter with the movies' we will suggest an answer. It is that Mabel Normand doesn't make half enough of them," said Beauvais Fox in the Tribune.

Said Grena Bennett in the American, "Mabel Normand acted Suzanna. Her art is flawless. She understands the value of a look, the raising of an eyebrow, the shrug of a shoulder. She is thoroughly natural, unaffected and utterly devoid of any exaggeration."

"Mabel Normand, under the excellent direction of Mack Sennett, made another hit at the Capitol in 'Suzanna,'" said the critic for the Evening Telegram.

"We've always contended that Mabel Normand was about the greatest screen comedienne and see absolutely no reason in the world for changing that opinion after sitting through her performance in 'Suzanna,'" said Don Allen in the Evening World.

Said the reviewer for the Sun, "The picture gives Miss Normand ample opportunity to be coquettish, to look alluring and to have a good time generally."

"Head Hunters" Has Second Broadway Showing

The Associated Exhibitors' attraction, Martin Johnson's production of "Head Hunters of the South Seas," was the feature at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York, last Sunday, and drew large audiences, afternoon and evening. "Head Hunters" ran for a week at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre recently, and since he secured possession of the Cohan Theatre for Sundays, Mr. Moss has been repeating in that Broadway house the features which had scored the biggest triumphs during the longer runs.

In his farewill article in the New York Times, J. O. Spearing, long photoplay editor of that paper, who has left to accept an appointment with a picture company, listed the twelve attractions which he considers "the most worthwhile of the longer films seen by him in and around the Broadway district between January 1 and March 15, 1923," and included "Head Hunters of the South Seas" in the catalogue. "Martin Johnson and his wife," he said, "go among the southern savages again and take you interestingly with them."

Picture Viewed by Naval Officers

"Masters of Men," the picturization by C. Graham Baker of Morgan Robertson's great sea story, was recently viewed by Lieutenant-Commander Foster of the Naval Recruiting Bureau, New York City, who highly praised it.

The picture will be shown on board every ship in the United States Navy.

"The Gun Fighter" Finished

"The Gun Fighter," starring William Farnum, has been finished at the William Fox West Coast Studios. This is the picture in which Doris May acts the beautiful heroine.

Patrons Say Carewe Film Best Ever Seen

Edwin Carewe, who is producing and directing the great American classic, "The Girl of the Golden West," for First National distribution, recently won the friendship of the inhabitants of Sonora, Calif., and the surrounding territory when he used that portion of California for exteriors.

In return for their many kindnesses while he was on location in their district, Carewe ordered a print of his "Mighty Lak a Rose" to be shown to the residents of Sonora.

A. G. Clapp, manager of the Sonora Theatre, has sent the following telegram to the First National film exchange in Los Angeles:

"Through the kindness of Edwin Carewe I had the pleasure of showing his latest picture, 'Mighty Lak a Rose,' to the people of Sonora last Tuesday. I have had more good comments on this picture than any I have ever shown. Most people say it is the best I have ever had, while many say it is the best they have ever seen. All agree that it is a wonderful picture and magnificent entertainment.

"My personal opinion is that here is a picture that will make every exhibitor more friends than any other picture he has shown in a long time, for it is real entertainment in every sense of the word. I want you to give me a date on it as soon as possible after its release, as every one here is talking about it and wants to see it again."

Well-known Actors in Paramount Film

Well-known names grace the cast of "The Woman With Four Faces," Herbert Brenon's Paramount production, in which Betty Compson is the star, playing the role of Elizabeth West, girl crook, with a facility for disguise which enables her to successfully impersonate three types aside from her natural self in the course of the story.

In the cast are Richard Dix, famous for his portrayal of John Storm in "The Christian" and now a permanent member of the Paramount organization; Charles A. Stevenson, who appeared also in "The Rustle of Silk," "Her Gilded Cage" and is now doing a part in "The Cheat"—all Paramount Pictures; Theodore Von Eltz, a talented young actor who recently completed an important role in "The Common Law," and Joseph Kilgour, whose stage career brought him fame as an actor and then he entered pictures to duplicate his success.

Mack Sennett Films Establish Records

The two latest Mack Sennett releases — "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand, and "The Shriek of Araby," featuring Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire—have set new records on the West Coast where they were recently given their world premieres, according to Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

In two Los Angeles long-run houses, the Mission and the Symphony, these two pictures established high water marks in the matter of attendance. "Suzanna" ran for eight weeks at the Mission. "The Shriek of Araby" is in its fifth week at the Symphony and seemingly is good for several more weeks, it is stated.

In San Francisco "Suzanna" played three weeks at the Strand theatre. "The Shriek of Araby" was booked as an added feature to another film at the New Portola and was continued for two weeks.

Ben Turpin Picture Praised by Critics

"Bring on more just like this," says Guy Price in his review in the Los Angeles Evening Express of Mack Sennett's new feature length comedy, "The Shriek of Araby," starring Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire, while this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release was playing to capacity business in an extended run at the Symphony theatre.

"All the favorable things that many moviemaniacs told me tbout this picture before I saw it are true. It is a perfect picture of its kind."

"If you want to laugh and forget your troubles, see this shriek," said the reviewer for the Times. "It is a shriek of mirth" said the Examiner's critic.

"It's a shriek, yes, in both description and appellation," said the writer for the Herald.

Reviewers Acclaim Mae Murray Picture

Jazz-loving Americans have completely capitulated to the charm of Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Jazzmania," her latest and most gorgeous photoplay, says Metro Pictures Corporation. The results are attested by the extracts from newspaper criticisms quoted below.

When the film was shown at the Capitol, New York City, the Globe wrote: "Mae did some of the stuff we thought nobody but Mrs. Mary Pickford Fairbanks was capable of." "The very last word in gorgeous and tasteful clothes," said the Post. "Will be a hit," prophesied the Telegraph.

Not a whit less emphatic were the reviews of other sections of the country. "Mae Murray proves an adorable queen, captivates audience," said the Dallas News. The Los Angeles Times declared the photoplay "the most spectacular, if not altogether the dizziest excursion of the star." The San Francisco Call-Post calls "Jazzmania" "Mae Murray's newest gilt edged, Tiffany-set luxury drama." "The best settings wherein she has ever been featured are presented in 'Jazzmania,'" is the opinion of the Cleveland News. "Beautiful production and novel story make it a certain hit," is the judgment of the Bellefontaine (O.) Index.

The photoplay is a product of Tiffany Productions, Inc.

Clara Bow Makes Personal Appearance

An added attraction at the Alhambra Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., last Wednesday night was the personal appearance of Miss Clara Bow, ingenue of the Hodkinson super-special, "Down to the Sea in Ships." Although her appearance was not in conjunction with the Hodkinson picture, Miss Bow is a resident of Brooklyn, and has achieved great popularity since her success in the whaling film.

Hence her appearance made an attractive addition to the program. Miss Bow first came to prominence as the winner of a beauty contest held by the Brewster publications when she was but sixteen years of age. Immediately thereafter she was engaged by Elmer Clifton as the ingenue, playing the role of a hoyden in his spectacular production, "Down to the Sea in Ships."

"Snowdrift" Listed for April

"Snowdrift," the latest William Fox production, starring Charles Jones, is scheduled for release late next month. This story, which deals with the gold fields of the Yukon, gives the popular Fox star an unusual opportunity for some lively, interesting action.

The picture was directed by Scott Dunlap from the story by James B. Hendryx, who is well known for his tales of the land beyond the Mackenzie River, including "The Promise," "The Gold Girl," and "Connie Morgan in Alaska."

The story concerns a renegade mining engineer from the States who falls in love with a waif, known only as "Snowdrift," and believed to be a half-breed. His love for the beautiful daughter of the North changes the life of the engineer, who successfully battles with Indian bands, the crew of a whaler and the northern blizzards for the love of the girl. Subsequently it is shown that the girl is the daughter of white parents who lost their lives in the far North, and she was then left in the care of an Indian squaw.

The supporting cast includes Irene Rich, Dorothy Manners, G. Raymond Nye, Colin Chase, Evelyn Selbie, Lolo Encinos and Lee Shumway.

Vitagraph is preparing unusual exploitation and exhibitor's helps for "Masters of Men" which is now receiving final editing at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. "Masters of Men" is considered the best of all Morgan Robertson's novels of life at sea. It relates the adventures of a young American both in the United States Navy and on board a sailing ship. Special exploitation stunts are being arranged and a special drive being made in the daily newspapers.

Those who have seen the picture say that the cast is one of the best ticket sellers ever offered to the exhibitor. It is headed by Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, and Wanda Hawley.

The sea stuff is magnificently managed and includes action centering around the Battle of Santiago when Cervera's fleet was destroyed.

The United States Navy Department at Washington gave to Vitagraph every cooperation in presenting the life of a bluejacket on board a man-of-war faithfully.

In contrast to this is shown life in the forecastle of a sailing ship commanded by an old-fashioned, brutal type of captain.

Starts Picture

Patricia Palmer and "Ranger Bill" Miller have been selected to head an all-star cast for the Max Miller Productions in a super special feature to be made in and around San Francisco from the original story by J. Stewart Woodhouse. the author is also responsible for Dick Hatton's latest starring vehicle "Playing Double" and the originator of Wallace Reid's best feature "Double Speed."

Loses False Teeth Laughing at Film

The Bangor, Me., Commercial is authority for the following story concerning the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, "Grandma's Boy," and the effect which a showing at the Bangor Opera House had on one woman in the audience:

"When the employes were cleaning the Opera House Tuesday forenoon, they found a plate of false teeth, and a little later a Bangor woman called at the box office and received her property, stating that she laughed so heartily at Harold Lloyd's fun-making in 'Grandma's Boy' that she ejected her teeth and did not miss them until she reached home. This sounds a bit like press agent stuff, but Manager Greely vouches for its truth and tells the Commercial that he can produce evidence."

Big Baltimore Houses Book Clifton Picture

Following upon the heels of the successful run of Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ship," released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, at the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., at which time this romance of old whaling days played to 33,500 admissions in six days, announcement is made to the effect that many of Baltimore's best community theatres have signed subsequent runs for this production.

The theatres booking this production are considered to be the most representative regional theatres in Baltimore and the very fact that so many have signed, following the run at the Century, proves, in the estimation of the Hodkinson Officials, the value of "Down to the Sea in Ships" as a money-making neighborhood attraction.

Among the most prominent theatres in Baltimore that have booked this screen special are the McHenry Theatre, Bridge, Idle Hour, Victory, Red Wing, Grand, Blue Bell, Horn, Rialto, Crystal, Belnord, Broadway and York, all located in the city of Baltimore.

It is estimated that this series of contracts means that Baltimore will, in one part or another, see "Down to the Sea in Ships" for many months to come.

The 35,000 admissions in the first six days which this produciton played to, broke all attendance and box office records for the Century in Baltimore, according to the theatre's report. This proves the exceptional box office drawing power of this production, inasmuch as Century has played some of the greatest and most popular photoplays of the season.

Two Hodkinson Films Released March 25

Two productions are scheduled for release on the Hodkinson program for March 25. They are "The Man From Glengarry" and "The Lion's Mouse." This makes four feature releases for the month of March.

"The Man From Glengarry" is a filmization of the picturesque and virile novel by Ralph Connor. It was produced by Ernest Shipment and the Dominion Films, Inc., and made upon the exact location as called for by the book. It is a strong story dealing with the exciting life of the lumberjacks on the upper Ottawa River.

It contains thrills in abundance, showing some real excitement surrounding a fight scene in a log jam, a sensational rescue of a girl from the rapids and is said to be full of action throughout.

The production was directed by Henry McRae with Warner Richmond, Anders Randolph, Marion Swayne, Pauline Garon, and E. L. Hernandez in the cast.

"The Lion's Mouse" is a mystery melodrama produced by the Hollandia Film Corporation, presented by the Producers Security Corporation and distributed by Hodkinson. This production was directed by Oscar Apfel and features Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh in the cast.

"The Lion's Mouse" is the story of a young girl who shows her ability as an amateur detective by rounding up a band of blackmailers and incidentally solves the mystery surrounding some stolen pearls.

It is considered to be one of the best productions directed by Oscar Apfel. In the opinion of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation it is felt that "The Lion's Mouse" will supply exhibitors with something unusual in film entertainment.

Making "Snowblind"

Paul Panzer, who once flickered as the deep-dyed villain with Pearl White in "The Perils of Pauline," and who recently returned to the screen after a long absence in "Enemies of Women," has been engaged for a part in "Snowblind," a picturization of an Arthur Stringer story which E. H. Griffith is now making for the Cosmopolitan Corporation. Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen are featured in the production.

'Bucking the Barrier' April 1 Release

Dustin Farnum's next production, "Bucking the Barrier," will be released April 1st, Fox Film Corporation announces. This story, a new version of love reaching from across the seas to the far North of America, replete with suspense, action, and romance, shows Dustin Farnum in the kind of role that has made him such a popular interpreter of romance and adventure. In addition to the star, the cast includes Arline Pretty, as the lead, and Leon Barry, heavy. Colin Campbell directed.

This story was especially written for Mr. Farnum by George Goodchild and adapted by Jack Strumwasser.

To Write Continuity For Stahl's Next

Paul Bern has joined the John M. Stahl unit at the Louis B. Mayer studio to prepare the continuity for Stahl's next First National attraction, and supply an original story for future production by the director.

This announcement follows closely upon the news of Mr. Bern's resignation from Universal City, where he held the post of supervising editor under Irving G. Thalberg's administration. Previous to this connection he was for several years editor-in-chief at the Goldwyn studio.

Bern gave up executive editorial work in favor of the wider scope of the free lance field, but primarily he wanted a vacation. This latter ambition was short-lived, for he was persuaded by Stahl to start on the adaptation of a story on the very day that his resignation at Universal took effect.

Storm to Direct "Children of Jazz"

Jerome Storm, who directed most of Charles Ray's immensely successful pictures for Thomas H. Ince, has been engaged to direct "Children of Jazz" for Paramount. The production will be made at the Lasky studio and among those who will have leading roles are Theodore Kosloff, Estelle Taylor, Eileen Percy, Ricardo Cortez and Robert Cain.

The Paramount Production department also announces that Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore will appear in a special production directed by Charles Maigne, adapted by Sada M. Cowen from Maximilian Foster's story, "The Silent Partner."

Goldwyn Promises Unusual Picture

Promise of an unusual motion picture, both in weirdness and novelty of setting, and in eerie dramatic quality, is contained in the announcement from Goldwyn of the purchase of the screen rights to Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, "Wild Oranges." It is one of the earliest of the books by the author of "Cytherea," "The Bright Shawl," "Tol'able David," and other popular stories.

Miss Dupont in "Broken Wing"

Miss Dupont has replaced Betty Francisco in the cast of "The Broken Wing," the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard which Tom Forman began this week for B. P. Schulberg. The altered cast now reads Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Walter Long, Miss Dupont, Richard Tucker, Evelyn Selbis, Edwin J. Brady and Ferdinand Munier.

Tom Forman and his company entrained this week for Albuquerque, New Mexico, where the exteriors are to be filmed. The first scenes to be taken there will be those of the battle episode which will be photographed on the banks of the Rio Grande with three thousand Mexicans working as extras.

Joy and Moore in Paramount Special

A special Paramount production in which Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore will appear is to be started at the Lasky studio March 29, under the direction of Charles Maigne. This is a screen version of Sada Cowan of Maximilian Foster's story "The Silent Partner.' This ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and is regarded as a very powerful drama.

Miss Joy has recently completed work in "You Can't Fool Your Wife," George Melford's production. Miss Joy will have the opportunity of wearing some handsome gowns and there is a large amount of emotional acting in her role, while the part to be given Owen Moore will also possess splendid dramatic opportunuties.

Back in California

James Cruze, his assistant, Vernon Keays, and his cameraman, Karl Brown, who came to New York for the premiere of "The Covered Wagon," have returned to California where they will complete the Paramount production, "Hollywood," at the Lasky studio. It was Mr. Cruze's first trip to the metropolis in eight years and he said that he was so overwhelmed with kindness that he walked around in a daze most of the time.

"The Covered Wagon" Sets Up New Attendance Records

At the end of the first full week of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," at the Criterion Theatre, the picture had set up a new record of attendance per performance, with every indication that it would break all records for total receipts, average and total attendance and length of run for the theatre, according to an announcement from the Paramount office.

The Criterion has only 608 seats, but with this limited capacity "The Covered Wagon" drew during the first full week of its run $10,873.50, an astonishing record when it is taken into consideration that only two performances a day were given. On the week days, exclusive of Saturdays, the daily receipts showed a fluctuation of only $11, the lowest day being $1,448 and the highest $1,459.

On the first Saturday, March 17, the receipts were $1,790, and on the second, $1,789. On Sunday, March 18, the figures were $1,799, and a week later they were $1,812. The difference between the Saturday and Sunday and the week day figures is accounted for by the fact that on the former days evening prices prevail at the matinee performances.

Every performance has played to standing room, the attendance each day being far in excess of the seating capacity. This is the more remarkable in view of the fact that purchasers of standing room do so with the knowledge that the performance runs for more than two hours. The seats, all of which are reserved, are now selling far in advance.

Metro Films in Four First-run Theatres

Four feature attractions released by Metro were presented in first-run theatres of Washington during the week of March 5, each engagement being for a full week. Only one first-run theatre, the Metropolitan, showed a motion picture not a Metro attraction.

At the Columbia was "The Toll of the Sea." Reginald Barker's production, "Hearts Aflame," was presented at the Rialto; Viola Dana in "Crinoline and Romance" was the feature at the Palace, and "The Forgotten Law," a Max Graf production, was shown at the Strand.

The extraordinary achievement in Washington is closely seconded in other cities in the same territory for the same week. In Baltimore, Metro pictures were presented at three of the largest first-run houses. Rex Ingram's production, "Trifling Women," was at the New, and "June Madness" was seen at both the Wizard and Parkway.

In Norfolk, the Metro-SL special, "Quincy Adams Sawyer," was exhibited for a first run at the Granby, and in Richmond it was seen at the Bijou.

"The Bright Shawl" Gets Pre-release

"The Bright Shawl," starring Richard Barthelmess, an Inspiration production for First National distribution, was given its first pre-release showing last Monday evening at the Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Conn., of which A. M. Hamilton is manager.

With the theatre filled to capacity, "The Bright Shawl" went over big, it is stated.

Edward Roskam Now a Free Lance

Edward M. Roskam, who has been actively engaged in the film industry since 1905, has many plans for the coming season. For the past year "Eddie," as he is familiarly known, has been doing the re-editing and recutting of Robertson-Cole and F. B. O. pictures. This company has discontinued its editing department at this end and Roskam is now a free lance editor and cutter.

The hand coloring effects in "The Third Alarm" were due to Roskam and were one of the sensations of this successful picture. Roskam is making his temporary home at the Craftsman Film Laboratories, 251 West 19th.

Fox Releases for March 31 Week

Fox Film Corporation announces two releases for the week of March 31—a Dustin Farnum production and a Sunshine Comedy.

"Bucking the Barrier," the Farnum feature, was written by the well-known short-story writer, George Goodchild, and adapted to the screen by Jack Strumwasser. Colin Campbell directed. The charming Arline Pretty is the star's leading woman in a story of the Far North and the gold mines. The schedule places April 1 as release day.

The Sunshine Comedy is "The Mummy," a two-reel funmaker of unusual quality. It will be ready for distribution on the first also.

Fox News is issued bi-weekly, and offers many interesting features in its current publications.

Two on Broadway

"The Nth Commandment," a Fannie Hurst story, directed by Frank Borzage from the scenario of Frances Marion, featuring Colleen Moore and James Morrison, and "The Go Getter," directed by E. H. Griffith from a Peter B. Kyne story, featuring T. Roy Barnes and Seena Owen, both Cosmopolitan productions, will be presented simultaneously on Broadway on April 8. "The Nth Commandment" opens at the Rivoli and "The Go Getter" will be seen at the Rialto.

"The Spoilers" Under Way

Photography is well under way on "The Spoilers," the Rex Beach story of the Klondike gold rush, generally considered the greatest novel of that period ever written. The production is being made for Goldwyn by arrangement with Jesse D. Hampton.

Lambert Hillyer, who is directing the screen version, is assembling an all-star cast: Milton Sills, as Glenister; Anna Q. Nilsson, as Cherry Malotte; Wallace McDonald, as Bronco Kid; Robert McKim, as Struve; Robert Edeson, as Dextry; Barbara Bedford, as Helen Chester; Noah Beery, as McNamara, and Mitchell Lewis, as Marshall Vorhees.

Issuing Special Press Books

First National is issuing special press books on three coming releases, Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle of Lost Ships"; "The Bright Shawl," starring Richard Barthelmess, and "Within the Law," starring Norma Talmadge. These press books will be delivered to First National exchanges and to exhibitors this week.

Goldwyn Borrows S-L Production Staff

Under a special working arrangement made between Arthur H. Sawyer, supervising director of Associated Pictures Corporation, and Goldwyn, the entire production staff of the former has been lent to the latter named company for "Red Lights," a Goldwyn special release. The direction is in the hands of Clarence G. Badger, director of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and "Your Friend and Mine," recent S-L specials, assisted by Charles Hunt.

Desberg Praises "Robinhood"

Here is what Fred Desberg, general representative of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., had to say about the engagement of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, in a letter to nited Artists Corporation:

"Never in the history of the Stillman Theatre have we ever approached the business done by 'Robin Hood.' The first week's business at somewhat increased prices broke all records both for attendance and money. The second week's business was practically as good as the first. We are now in the third week and the end of the run is nowhere in sight."

Gets His Wish

Jack Richardson, who for the past ten years or more has been playing villains before the motion picture camera, and dreaming of the time when he might play a nice, likable character, is essaying the part of an honest sheriff in Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture, "Fog Bound," which Irvin Willat is producing at the Long Island studio.

Hodkinson Special Continues to Break Records

One of the outstanding surprises of Broadway is the record being made by the Hodkinson super-special, "Down to the Sea in Ships," at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre, New York. It is now completing its sixth week, and it is reported that it will remain there for several weeks to come. Eight performances a day are being held in order to accommodate the crowds. The first show begins at 10:00 in the morning and the last at 10:25 at night.

The price schedule is 85 cents for evenings and 55 cents for morning and matinee, exclusive of Saturday, Sunday and holidays, when the evening prices prevail for all performances.

This picture is being shown simultaneously in other large cities throughout the country, and it is reported as having smashed house records against the stiffest kind of competition. In the the estimation of the Hodkinson officials, "Down to the Sea in Ships" has a box office pull equal to any super-production now being exhibited, and it is believed to be of such intrinsic merit as to gain momentum and increase in prestige and popularity as it goes along.

Hodkinson Picture Slated for April 15

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," an eight-reel special production, is announced as the scheduled release of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for April 15. This announcement, according to Mr. Hodkinson, proves that another step forward has been made by this organization in presenting the exhibitors with unusual box office attractions.

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" taps the well of historical love stories surrounding the colorful career of Lord Nelson, popular English naval hero. This romance reveals one of the many secrets of prominent men in the past, showing the power of a woman behind one of the greatest achievements recorded in history, namely, the career of Admiral Nelson.

The production is the work of Richard Oswald for the Sterling Film Corporation and released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The production features Liane Haid in the role of Lady Hamilton. Miss Haid has achieved fame throughout Europe for her beauty, it is stated. Conrad Veidt plays the role of Lord Nelson. Randolph Bartlett edited the titles.

Big Universal Film Arrives from Coast

Stuart Paton's weird Universal-Jewel production of Earl Carroll's Russian melodrama has been received in New York and reviewed by Universal executives. It is pronounced as one of the most exotic pictures ever produced, and one which will cause more talk than any picture made in recent years.

Characterized as without par in the realm of screen melodrama, "Bavu" will reach the exhibitor at an early date with one of the most intriguing exploitation campaigns behind it ever staged for a film production.

During its production at Universal City, "Bavu" was the talk of the film colony, because of its unusual aspect and because of the atmosphere of mystery and melodrama Paton built up around his sets. It is recorded that to make the actors feel the weirdness of the story, he would not allow them to speak above a whisper during the filming of many of the scenes.

"Bavu" is a story of the Soviet, of an illiterate peasant raised to great power and of his attempts to exploit the people for his own gain. The picture shows vivid flashes of "Red" Russia, and the revolutionary risings of the proletariat.

The picture was made with an all-star cast, with Wallace Beery playing the title role. The other players are Estelle Taylor, Forrest Stanley, Sylvia Breamer, Mickolai de Ruiz, Martha Mattox, Joseph Swickard, Harry Carter, Jack Rollens and others.

Although formerly scheduled for release in June, Universal will place "Bavu" in the hands of exhibitors long before that date. It probably will be released within the next fornight. The Universal factory at Fort Lee, N. J., is busy making prints of the Jewel so that each exchange center may get its early prints without delay.

De Mille Starts on "Only 38"

William de Millle began work last week on his Paramount production, "Only 38," in his usual quiet manner. Half the time no one knows that William de Mille is working, but he accomplishes amazing results just the same. In this picture a big interior and exterior set combined shows the unlovely aspect of a home that is not really a home. Lois Wilson is playing what might be called the title role and is featured together with Elliott Dexter, May McAvoy and George Fawcett, all of whom have splendid roles.

Clara Beranger adapted the A. E. Thomas play which was suggested by a story of Walter Prichard Eaton's. Miss Wilson's make-up, it may be said, is astonishingly perfect and even her friends at the studio almost failed to recognize her in the rather stooped and slightly grey-haired woman of the story.

Metro Film Goes Big in Moline

The biggest theatrical event in the history of Moline, Ill., was a special showing of the Rex Ingram production of "Where the Pavement Ends," which has not yet received general release. The Moline Daily Dispatch made a big spread with the news that the Le Claire Theatre would hold a public preview of Metro's version of the famous John Russell story. "A scoop for Moline," it was called.

An effective tie-up was made by Richard R. Doerling, Metro exploitation representative, with Moline's best bookshop, displaying copies of "Where the Pavement Ends," with attractive placards announcing the run of the picture at the Le Claire Theatre.

"Where the Pavement Ends" is a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation. John F. Seitz did the photography.

Church Combines Pictures with Art Exhibit

A unique method of enhancing the attractiveness of an art exhibition was recently employed by the First Methodist Church of Rolla, Mo., by the use of motion pictures. Each evening a series of paintings were exhibited, the feature of which was the reproduction of the work of some famous master. Inasmuch as the Triart productions, "The Beggar Maid," "The Bashful Suitor," "The Young Painter," and "Hope," distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, are adapted from the featured paintings, the church committee were able to arrange an interesting tie-up.

The feature of the first evening's program was a reproduction of the original painting, "The Beggar Maid." Following this was a showing of the Hodkinson picture giving a film version of the celebrated painting. This same plan was followed with the other exhibits and met with such success that the entire series of exhibitions were repeated on four consecutive Monday nights.

Universal Announces 8 Big Chapter Plays; Reorganize and Enlarge Serial Department

Carl Laemmle Engages New Stars, Writers and Directors

The Universal serial department has just undergone the biggest reorganization in its history, and, as a result, Universal now has in work its entire program of 1923-1924 chapter pictures. With the acquisition of a group of new serial stars, new serial writers and a greatly enlarged studio force, Universal now asserts it is prepared to make a series of chapter pictures far better than anything they have done before. Eight are scheduled during the coming year.

The new Universal serial schedule will usher in a new brand of photoplay — the Super Serial. When Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, went to Los Angeles several months ago, his first efforts were directed toward the reorganization of the serial department. Fred McConnell, serial manager for Universal, had preceded his chief to the coast, and had laid the preliminary plans for bigger serials. Since Laemmle reached the coast, hardly a week passed without some striking improvement in serial production at Universal City.

The new schedule contemplates the production of eight superserials for the coming twelve months. All of them now are in work, some in actual studio production and others in the hands of the scenario staff. They include two historical serials, of the same high standard and box office drawing power as "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" and "The Oregon Trail," Universal's two wonder serials.

There also will be two stunt serials, three western serials and one South Sea Island serial of novel treatment.

Universal's new serial stars are outstanding in their reputation and popularity. Laemmle announced he would gather together the "pick" of the industry. The result is the following group of film celebrities:

William Duncan, popular serial hero, and Edith Johnson, his wife, who is his leading woman.

Fred Thomson, the "Fighting Parson," who also is famous for his record as a world's champion all-around athlete.

Ann Little, long a serial and feature favorite, and one of the leading dare-devils of the screen.

Jack Mower, popular leading man, star and circus stuntster.

Eileen Sedgwick, the daring heroine of a score of popular Universal serials.

Al Wilson, the champion aeroplane stuntster in the U. S.

Four of the forthcoming serials will be in fifteen chapters of two reels each, and the other four will be in twelve chapters each.

The Universal Serial Department, in order to plan and work up the year's serial output, has been greatly increased. There now are ten scenario experts busy.

The latest acquisition to the scenario staff, as announced last week, is Bertram Millhauser.

It is likely that Fred McConnell, the serial manager for the company, will remain permanently at the west coast studios, to maintain actual supervision of the working out of the new schedule, in the absence of the Universal chief, who can only devote a part of his time to the studio end of the business.

The first chapter picture to be ready under the new plan is fast approaching the screen. Actual shooting has been going on for several weeks, and the first chapter is expected in New York within ten days. The picture is scheduled for release April 30. It is called "The Eagle's Talons" and is an adventure and stunt serial of a superior type.

Fred Thomson and Ann Little are the co-stars, supported by a strong cast, the most important of which is Al Wilson, champion stunt flyer. It is being directed by Duke Worne.

"The Eagle's Talons," which was written by Theodore Wharton, concerns a struggle for the control of the wheat market between two financial powers, one determined to keep down the price of flour on behalf of the world's poor, and the other greedily attempting to run up the price for personal gain.

The cast includes Joseph Girard, Edward Cecil, Edith Stayart, Al J. Smith, George Magrill and Joe Bonomo. The last named player is the winner of New York City's 1922 Adonis contest, being the nearest physically perfect man the judges could find.

The second serial on the schedule is a historical serial based on the romantic and adventuresome life of Daniel Boone, the great American pioneer. The working title of this picture is "Daniel Boone." It is promised to be even greater screen entertainment than "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" or "The Oregon Trail." Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick will co-star in it. The role of Daniel Boone has not yet been filled. Mower plays that of one of Boone's proteges. Miss Sedgwick has the role of Boone's daughter.

Among others in the cast of this serial will be Duke Lee, remembered for his work as "Buffalo Bill" and as "Marcus Whitman" in Universal's former historical serials. Ruth Royce also will play a prominent role. Jack Mower, the lead, is a new serial star for Universal, although he has been seen in several Universal features and as leading man for many screen heroines.

"Daniel Boone" will be in 15 chapters and will be released June 4.

Jay Marchant and Frank Messenger will direct this serial together. These two men have been associated with Universal's leading serial directors for several years. In elevating them to actual directorship, Mr. Laemmle is following his policy of training and reward.

William Duncan, who is now completing his contract with Vitagraph, will be ready to start on his first Universal chapter picture in a few weeks. His first picture will be "The Steel Rail," a western type of serial, based, however, on the construction of a railroad in the west. Duncan will direct his own pictures.

This serial will be in twelve chapters. It is to be released August 6, and Universal believes that the exhibitor wants the shorter type of serial for the mid-summer release.

The fourth serial release will be "The Last Submarine," a twelve chapter serial co-starring Fred Thomson and Ann Little. It will be placed in the hands of exhibitors September 10.

The fifth chapter picture scheduled for production which now is being adapted for the screen is "By Right of Conquest," from G. A. Henty's world-read novel of the conquest of Central America. G. A. Henty was one of the best known writers of historical novels for young people, and there is hardly a boy or girl in America who has not read "By Right of Conquest."

Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick will be co-starred in this picture, which probably will be directed by Eddie Laemmle.

Next on Universal's serial schedule will be "The Fast Express," a second vehicle for William Duncan. It is projected for release November 26, and is the strange story of a famous railroad engineer, shell-shock, who turns up in the railroad construction camps of the west and lives a new life. This serial will be in fifteen chapters.

A third Fred Thomson-Ann Little serial is next on the Universal schedule. It is called "Beasts of Paradise," and will be laid in the South Seas. It is an adventure story of the first water, and is said to be particularly fitted to Thomson's prowess as an athlete. The story was written by Ewart Adamson.

This serial will be in twelve chapters and will be released January 28, 1924.

The eighth serial scheduled is a western type serial of hard-riding, thrill-a-minute action, in which Jack Mower will be starred, probably with Miss Sedgwick. The working title of this serial is "Hidden Gold." It will be released March 3, 1924.

With an entire year's output planned in advance and under way, Universal executives assert the serial department is in a position to concentrate upon the actual work of production to an extent heretofore unattainable.

"Blood and Sand" Breaks Records in Japan

Cables from Tokyo received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, report the sensational success scored by "Blood and Sand," which has broken Japanese box office records by a wide margin at all of the Paramount first-run houses. Theatres in Tokyo, Yokohama, Osaka, Kobe and other large cities were swamped with demands for seats and the bookings being received from other theatres are of a record-breaking nature.

The Paramount special was shown for the first time at a pre-release showing at the Hotel Imperial auditorium in Tokyo to a selected audience of Japanese and foreigners on February 24 and received the greatest volume of favorable criticism ever given a motion picture in Tokyo.

Reports from all parts of the world received by Mr. Shauer indicate that "Blood and Sand" will more than duplicate the long series of records established in the leading capitals.

In Sydney the picture has just completed a seven-weeks run at the Globe Theatre to tremendous crowds and will be shown for another three weeks in leading downtown theatres. Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr., reported that the Paramount special could have been continued at the Globe to capacity business indefinitely, but prior booking contracts made it necessary for the picture to be moved elsewhere.

Curran Visits

Thomas A. Curran, Special Representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, who has been in New York for the last few days, conferring with W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, left for an extended trip on which he will visit the leading exchange centers in the interests of the new Arrow product. Mr. Curran's first stopping point will be Louisville, Ky., from whence he will go to St. Louis, Mo.

JETTA GOUDAL

who plays an unusual and extremely interesting characterization in "The Bright Shawl," the latest picture starring Richard Barthelmess to be distributed by First National.

Has Title Role in "Salomy Jane"

On March 26 George Melford started his new Paramount production, "Salomy Jane," which, it will be remembered, was Paul Armstrong's play adapted from the Bret Harte story. Waldemar Young wrote the film version and Jacqueline Logan will be seen in the title role. Two other important players will be Maurice Flynn and William Davidson, the latter a well known Eastern actor, and the former already known for some excellent work in Paramount pictures.

"Salomy Jane" will represent upon the screen another of those classics which are virtually immortal and are distinctly American, ranking beside "Rip Van Winkle," "The Old Homestead," "Shore Acres" and others of that type. Mr. Melford plans some unusually strong features, especially some beautiful and typical scenery for backgrounds.

Big Business

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' opened tonight to the most enthusiastic audience this theatre ever played to," telegraphed the management of the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, when this United Artists release recently began its run.

"Could have played to double capacity," the telegram went on, "as hundreds and hundreds were turned away. Everybody is unanimous in saying 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' is the greatest film drama ever produced."

"Souls For Sale" Has World Premiere

The world premiere of Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale," was held at the Capitol Theatre, New York, on Tuesday morning of this week before an invited audience of between 3,000 and 4 000 enthusiastic persons. Many of these were important exhibitors from New York City and from the territory served by the branch exchanges here, in Boston, New Haven, Albany, Philadelphia and Buffalo. Representatives of the New York daily press, of the motion picture trade journals, of the fan magazines, and officials of various film producing organizations attended.

Goldwyn officials were so convinced of the great and unusual quality of this picture that immediately following its first showing in the home office projection room the premiere at the Capitol was arranged for. The picture is booked at the Capitol for the week starting Sunday, April 8.

S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol Theatre arranged the presentation in keeping with the ideals which have prevailed so long at the Capitol and have been so popular.

The exhibitors in attendance were all greatly impressed by the photoplay which Rupert Hughes has made from his novel of life among the colony of motion picture folk at Hollywood.

"The film is going to do pictures a world of good," was the consensus of various exhibitors and producers. "It will show the public that motion picture players are hard-working, conscientious persons who want to do their task well and earn the commendation of picture patrons. They have the same aspirations as well as the same weaknesses that do persons in ordinary walks of life. It's got great audience appeal."

Goldwyn officials were showered with congratulations on "Souls for Sale." The general opinion was that it has more than lived up to the promises made for it and that it reflects credit of the highest kind upon the producing corporation, upon Author-Director Hughes and his aides and upon the remarkably capable cast. The reception accorded the film upholds the belief of the producers that it is the biggest picture it has yet made and one of the finest ever produced by any concern.

Amusing Incidents in Airplane Scenes

The amusing moments of "Going Up," adapted from the musical comedy hit of the same name, gather about the scenes in which Douglas MacLean boasts about the airplane flights he never made, takes a lesson in flying from the summit of a table and chair, and finally, emboldened by dreams of love, is led to a hangar and sent up to race with a real airman. Before the hero actually sails in the air he goes through every stage of anguish, each of which is said to be a great mirth-producer. It is an Associated Exhibitors' picture.

In his first starring feature Mr. MacLean is supported by a notable cast, including Majorie Daw, Arthur Hull, Hallam Cooley, Edna Murphy, Hughie Mack, Wade Boteler, John Steppling, Lillian Langdon, Francis McDonald and Mervyn Leroy.

"Enemies of Women" Opens at Central

Described as a photodramatic masterpiece which, in beauty of settings, lavishness of production and perfection of detail, vies with any film ever made, "Enemies of Women," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the celebrated Spanish author of "The Four Horsemen" and "Blood and Sand," will be presented by the Cosmopolitan Corporation at the Central Theatre, New York, beginning next Sunday, April 1, for four weeks only.

In bringing this romantic novel to the screen, Cosmopolitan is said to have embellished it with a wealth of beauty. The company making the film spent six weeks on location in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris, where a number of gorgeous scenes were filmed, including some of the Casino at Monte Carlo and the Palace of the Prince of Monaco.

Vieing in their splendor with those scenes of natural beauty are the settings furnished by Joseph Urban, who tomorrow (Monday) will begin the work of redecorating the Central Theatre for the presentation of the film. The house will be remodelled to accommodate an augmented orchestra. William Frederick Peters has composed an original score to accompany the film and will personally conduct the orchestra at the premiere.

"Enemies of Women" is said to be not only a thing of beauty but a fast moving drama, traveling from Russia in pre-war days to Monte Carlo, Paris and back to Russia during the war. Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens head a brilliant cast which includes Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, W. H. Thompson, Gladys Hulette, William Collier, Jr., Paul Panzer, Mario Majeroni and Betty Bouton. Alan Crosland directed.

NORMA TALMADGE

who will have one of the greatest roles of her career in the famous drama, "Within the Law," produced by Joseph M. Schenck for First National.

Select Cast for "Law Bringers"

All the important roles in "The Law-Bringers," the next Reginald Barker production which Louis B. Mayer will present through Metro, have been cast, according to advices received from the Coast studios of Mr. Mayer. Actual work on the production has already begun, and it will follow "Hearts Aflame" as the second Barker photoplay to be released through Metro.

Many of the players selected for "The Law-Bringers" are celebrated film personalities. Barbara La Marr will enact an important role. Earle Williams is likewise prominently cast. Others of the players selected are Wallace Beery, Joseph Swickard, Renee Adoree, Pat O'Malley, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa.

The photoplay is based on G. B. Lancaster's famous novel, "The Law-Bringers," but this title is considered tentative. New titles are being considered, and announcement of the final selection should be forthcoming soon.

A Vitagraph Western

William Duncan and Edith Johnson are at work on a Western at the Vitagraph studios in Hollywood. The picture is near completion.

Obregon May Act

The castle of President Obregon of Mexico at Chapultepec will be filmed by Marshall Neilan for some of the important scenes in his own film story, "The Eternal Three," the photography of which is now nearing completion. There is a possibility that President Obregon himself may be an actor in some of these Mexican scenes.

DUSTIN FARNUM
As he appears in "Bucking the Barrier," a Fox production.

Artistic Sets for First National Film

Thomas Little, director of the settings and furniture for the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, purchased more than $20,000 worth of Sixteenth Century furniture during his week's visit to New York, for use in Norma Talmadge's next First National production, "Ashes of Vengeance," to be directed by Frank Lloyd, and for the furniture department at the United Studios. There will be thirty-seven interiors in "Ashes of Vengeance" requiring Louis XV and Louis XVI furnishings.

Mr. Little has made arrangements to have four Louis XV coaches built, which will be exact reproductions of the magnificent court coaches of the period.

Walter Israel, director of the costume department of the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, spent $60,000 for costumes, armor and labor, when in New York two weeks ago, also for "Ashes of Vengeance."

Norma Talmadge is surrounded by the highest salaried cast she has ever had—Conway Tearle, Jack Mulhall, Wallace Beery and others to be announced later.

MAURICE CANONGE
France's greatest comedian of the stage and screen, who has been signed by Richard Walton Tully to play the comedy role of "Zouzou," in "Trilby," du Maurier's famous French classic, which Mr. Tully is to produce for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Scenes of Vitagraph Film Finished

Victor Schertzinger has finished the scenes of "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," at Palo Verdi ranch near Victorville, Calif., and is now working in the Vitagraph studios at Hollywood.

The director staged a roundup scene and used 5,000 head of cattle. The Palo Verdi ranch is one of the largest in Southern California and covers 3,800 acres.

Clubwomen Endorse Leah Baird Picture

Following a special preview in the educational department of the Crandall theatres in Washington, a few days ago, club women, representing a large number of organizations, gave hearty endorsement to the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird 1923 specials.

The women invited to the screening are enthusiastic advocates of Senator Arthur Capper's bill for national marriage and divorce laws, and it was with the picture's possible influence on the proposed legislation in mind that the special showing was arranged.

"Is Divorce a Failure?" has been described as a photoplay with a very certain entertainment appeal by reason of four wallops which it carries—a realistic shipwreck scene, a tropical hurricane, a life-and-death encounter between the hero and a man-eating shark, and a smoking volcano in action. Wallace Worsley directed the picture, which is in six parts.

"Robin Hood" Makes Hit

"'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' starts out as the biggest motion picture success ever exhibited in the Argentine," says a cable despatch to United Artists Corporation from the South American offices. "Four big houses were completely sold out the first night," the despatch added.

Nine Successful Releases

With the release of "Your Friend and Mine," through Metro Pictures Corporation, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, producing S-L special films for Associated Pictures Corporation, have completed nine successful feature releases, all of which have been marketed by Metro. Among them is one of the outstanding feature successes of the past year, namely, "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

"Trifling Women" Runs Second Week

"Trifling Women," Rex Ingram's production for Metro Pictures Corporation, was held over for a second week at the big New Theatre in Baltimore by public demand. Its success was due in a considerable extent to the far-reaching exploitation and advertising campaign carried on in connection with it. Street stunts, throwaways, thousands of posters, photographs, a prologue—these suggest the thoroughness with which the publicity drive was carried out, under the supervision of Leon Victor, of the Metro exploitation forces.

John W. Vandercook, critic of the Daily Post, wrote in part: "'Trifling Women' is bang-up entertainment. An absorbing film. Excellent cast and direction." In the Evening Sun, Q. E. D. said: "Barbara La Marr is excellent as Zareda. Ramon Novarro is Valentinish Ivan. Rex Ingram is at his best."

Starts New Play

Alan Crosland, who directed "Enemies of Women" for the Cosmopolitan Corporation, started work this week on the making of "Under the Red Robe," which Cosmopolitan will picturize from the famous story by Stanley Weyman. John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens are featured.

Stockholm Likes It

Cable advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indicate that "Blood and Sand" has carried all of Stockholm by storm and is, as a result, one of the most talked-about pictures ever shown in Sweden. The Paramount special has completed the third week of its run at the Olympia with two new Swedish box office records to its credit.

One of these is the longest consecutive showing for a first run house and the other is that every seat for every performance has been sold out in advance.

Producing Activities of Goldwyn Company

Marshall Neilan has wired the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif., that he and his company making a sequence of scenes for his "The Eternal Three" in Mexico City have been officially received by representatives of the government and that the coming of the company has aroused a great deal of interest.

Erich von Stroheim started photography on "Greed," his own adaptation of Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," in San Francisco last Wednesday.

June Mathis, editorial director for Goldwyn, has elected to write the continuity for Emmett J. Flynn's first Goldwyn picture, "In the Palace of the King," from F. Marion Crawford's novel.

William Haines has joined the company producing "Three Wise Fools" under the direction of King Vidor. He is playing the juvenile lead.

Lambert Hillyer and the company producing Jesse D. Hampton's refilming of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," have returned to the Goldwyn studios from location at Balboa Beach.

First Runs for Lichtman

The Al Lichtman Corporation reports the following first runs for Preferred Pictures recently contracted for:

Loew has booked "The Hero" and "Poor Men's Wives" at the State in Stockton, California. Turner and Dahnken will show "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero" in their houses in Oakland, California, and Stockton, California.

"Poor Men's Wives" has been booked for a week at the Liberty, Kansas City; the Palace, Hartford, Conn.; the Palace, Lawrence, Mass., and the Poli's, Bridgeport, Conn. Poli's has also signed for "The Hero."

Beaudine Starts Work on "Penrod and Sam"

William Beaudine has started camera work on "Penrod and Sam," a screen version of the much-admired Booth Tarkington stories of typical American boy life in any average-sized town. The picture is for First National and is being "shot" at the Hollywood studios.

This production is said to offer even better opportunities for sympathetic translation to the screen than did the popular hit, "Penrod," which was directed by Marshall Neilan for First National distribution.

Beaudine has selected a remarkable cast for the screen interpretation of this story. The players include Benny Alexander, Irene Rich, William V. Mong, Rockliffe Fellows, Mary Philbin, Gareth Hughes, Buddy and Gertie Messinger, and the famous colored "twins," Herman and Verman.

The company is under the management of J. K. McDonald, who headed the companies which produced the Buddy Messinger and the Little Johnny Jones series of pictures founded on American child-life.

Working Fast on First National Film

Another ten days will see the completion of "The Girl of the Golden West," which Edwin Carewe is producing for First Nation release.

At present the cameras are grinding away both day and night on the interiors of the Polka saloon, the set in which most of the action of the story takes place. As in the days of '49, weatherbeaten prospectors come in to cash their "pay dirt," the faro tables hum with business and roulette wheels spin at a merry gait.

Director Carewe is speeding along production to have the picture ready for spring release. The success of "Mighty Lak a Rose," his first independent production for First National, is creating a demand for Edwin Carewe productions.

Those who have seen the "rushes" of the exterior scenes made in the mountains at Sonora, Calif, believe "The Girl of the Golden West" will be one of the most picturesque as well as dramatic efforts of the year.

Interpreting the roles in the all featured cast are J. Warren Kerrigan in the role of Ramerrez, a romantic character of California in the early days; Sylvia Breamer in the title role, Russell Simpson as Sheriff Jack Rance, and Rosemary Theby as Nina the Spanish vamp. Wilfred Lucas, Hector Sarno, Nelson McDowell, Charles McHugh and Cecil Holland have prominent parts.

Sol Polito is handling the cameras, with the co-operation of Thomas Storey. Wallace Fox is assistant director.

"Alice Adams" Gets Many Booking Dates

Many important first-run contracts already have been signed for the big Associated Exhibitors' feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams." The release date is April 8. Rarely, declare Associated officials, has a picture started on its career with more points of appeal, such as authorship, star, fidelity to original story, and many others, to its credit.

According to Doubleday, Page & Comany, publishers, "Alice Adams," which won for Booth Tarkington the Pulitzer prize for the best American novel appearing in 1922, has broken all the Tarkington records for sales. This means it has won greater popular favor than "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Gentleman From Indiana," "Penrod," "Seventeen," or any other of this great novelist's previous "best-sellers."

Every preview which has been held of Miss Vidor's picturization of "Alice Adams" has brought enthusiastic praise, it is stated.

"Souls for Sale" Given Premiere

"The Self-made Wife," the Elizabeth Alexander novel published first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and recently purchased by the Universal Pictures Corporation, will be the material for the next all star production which Jack Conway will direct.

Conway just completed "What Wives Want," an all star feature from an original story written by Perry Vekroff, with Ramsey Wallace, Ethel Grey Terry, Niles Welch, Vernon Steele and others in the cast. Before that he did "Trimmed in Scarlet," an all star five reel version of the William Hurlburt play, soon to be released.

"The Self-made Wife" is an analysis of the mental attitude of a woman who fails to please either herself or her husband, until dramatic events point out to her the way of her readjustment.

Production Work on "The Fog" Is Begun

Actual production work is now well under way on "The Fog," the newest Graf production for Metro, which is being made under the supervision of Max Graf. The picture is expected to be one of the most important releases of this year of important pictures. Players who will have principal roles are Mildred Harris, Cullen Landis, Louise Fazenda, David Butler, Ann May, Ralph Lewis, Marjorie Prevost, Edward Phillips, Ethel Wales and Frank Currier. Paul Powell is directing and John Arnold is the cameraman. The story was adapted for the screen by Winifred Dunn.

The appearance in this picture of Miss Harris marks her return to the screen after an absence of more than a year, during which she has been featured in her own vaudeville act. The last production in which she played was "Fool's Paradise."

Hodkinson Pictures Making Big Success

Both short subjects and feature productions of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are coming in for their share of success, according to reports received from the various branches throughout the United States. Poli's Theatre, Scranton, Pa., has contracted to play "The Headless Horseman," "Bull Dog Drummond," "Second Fiddle," "The Kingdom Within," "While Paris Sleeps," and "Dollar Devils."

Other theatres which have booked Hodkinson product are the Bijou Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J., Proctor's Theatre, Troy, N. Y., the Strand Theatre, Easton, Pa., the State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Wellmont Theatre, Montclair, N. J.

Critics and Public Praise "The Hero"

"The Hero," the Preferred Picture released by the Al Lichtman Corporation, has closed a highly successful run at Miller's Theatre in Los Angeles, where it had its Western premier. Box-office receipts reached a proportion that persuaded the management to hold over the attraction a second week.

Not only did "The Hero" prove its success as a drawing card for patrons, but it received high praise from the Los Angeles press.

Grace Kingsley, in the Los Angeles Times, speaking of "The Hero," said: "It is a whale of a picture . . . A man of ideals, Gasnier is not afraid to deal with human nature as it is . . . And then the climax. Griffith himself never did anything finer."

The Los Angeles Examiner classified it as follows: "Louis Gasnier has gone and done it. He has directed a picture that tells a story, tells it well and clearly, tells it dramatically and gets it over without recourse to extraneous hokum. Gasnier has given himself something to live up to in 'The Hero.'"

"Bell Boy 13" Scores Success at Strand

"Bell Boy 13," a Thos. H. Ince Production with Douglas MacLean as the star, which is being released through First National, scored a big success at the Strand Theatre, New York, when it was shown there during the week of March 25. Motion picture critics of the New York dailies were unstinted in their praise. Following is what some of them had to say:

Tribune—"Bell Boy 13" is one of Douglas MacLean's funniest pictures." E. V. Durling in the Globe—"Douglas MacLean, who this writer insists is Mr. Fairbanks' only logical successor, performs in his usual breezy and highly capable fashion."

Evening Telegram—"It is one of the most humorous of films in which Mr. MacLean dons a bell hop's uniform. The situations are very funny."

Baby Peggy to Make Five-reeler

The announcement comes from Julius and Abe Stern, heads of Century Film Corporation, that their little star, Baby Peggy, is to make her first five-reel—full length—production. It will be made at Universal City and to insure its success the Stern brothers have chosen as her director one of the cleverest women directors in the motion picture industry, Elsie Jane Wilson, in private life the wife of Rupert Julian, the Universal director of "Merry Go Round."

In "Peg o' the Movies" and "Carmen Junior," the two most recent pictures Peggy has made, she surprised even her director by her ability. The big first-run exhibitors who have booked her recently released bloc of six two-reel pictures were unanimous in saying that they could easily book five-reelers of this wonderful little girl.

Fox Announces a Big List of Specials

Reports from the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation indicate that the coming season's list of photoplays from that company will read like a combination of all the past year's "best sellers" and the majority of the current Broadway stage success.

First came the announcement that William Fox had purchased the motion picture rights for Channing Pollock's play, "The Fool," which has scored an unprecedented triumph during its long New York engagement. For these rights, it is announced, the Fox organization paid the largest amount on record for the photoplay privileges of a legitimate stage success.

Coming immediately on the heels of this news William Fox has just announced the purchase of the screen rights for such successful plays as "It Is the Law," which has proved popular during its long metropolitan engagement; "Loyalties," the John Galsworthy stage triumph produced by Dillingham, which also has enjoyed a triumphant run on Broadway; "The Governor's Lady," the Belasco stage play; "The Warrens of Virginia," another Belasco triumph, and others of importance.

Numerous other stage plays are listed among the coming season's William Fox photoplays, including the favorite comedy drama, "Six Cylinder Love," "The Shepherd King," "Monna Vanna," "Cameo Kirby," "The Net," and "Does It Pay."

The list of "best sellers" scheduled for release to the motion picture theatres through the Fox organization is headed by the "best seller" of them all, "If Winter Comes," A. S. M. Hutchinson's celebrated novel, which also is a stage triumph.

"The Shadow of the East," which has had a wide distribution in book form, gives promise of being one of the biggest of next season's Fox specials. It was written by E. M. Hull, author of "The Sheik."

Other popular books which the Fox producing units now are turning into screen plays include Gentle Julia," from the pen of Booth Tarkington; "St. Elmo," Augusta Evans' novel, and numerous other successes.

"The Fool," Mr. Pollock's play, however, will not be included in the coming season's list of attractions inasmuch as William Fox intends to spend at least a year in the making of it, according to word from the Fox offices.

PRINCESS THAIS VALKONSKY

Who was born in Russia, lived as an exile in Siberia, danced for a livelihood in Japan, served as a Red Cross nurse in the Russian army and who will make her debut in pictures in an important role in "Wandering Daughters," being produced by James Young for First National release.

Unusual Climax in "The Rendezvous"

Goldwyn production officials at the Culver City studios are very enthusiastic about a new story the screen rights to which that producing concern has just purchased. It is called "The Rendezvous" and is from the pen of Madeliene Ruthven, a young writer just coming into national prominence. There is, it is said, a big, out of the ordinary climax to the story.

Signs Sedgwick for Gibson

Edward Sedgwick, director and scenario writer, has signed a long term contract with Universal to direct Hoot Gibson in feature attractions.

The productions will entail every type of picture from drawing room drama to "westerns.' No definite schedule relative to the number of pictures to be made during the life of the contract has been announced.

Three pictures have already been made by the Sedgwick-Gibson combination, "The Gentleman from America," "Dead Game" and "Shooting for Love," and production has begun on "Pure Grit," from a magazine story by Gene Markey, which was adapted to the screen by Sedgwick. Most of the stories to be filmed under Sedgwick's direction will be original stories written by him.

The reports from threatres have indicated that the pictures made by Sedgwick and Gibson together have been very successful.

TWO "TANK HAM-ANDS"

Neely Edwards and Bert Roach, Universal comedy team in "Oh Mummy," their current one-reeler now ready for the screen, in the first film debut of a now popular recluse

"Drifting," Noted Play Filmed by Universal

"Drifting," Priscilla Dean's new big Universal-Jewel production, has been completed at Universal City and soon will be shipped to New York. It is said to exceed in interest and artistic qualities even such Dean successes as "Outside the Law," "Conflict," "Under Two Flags," and "White Tiger," her latest production.

"Drifting" is a screen adaptation of a Broadway stage success by John Colton, popular magazine writer and playwright. It was produced on the stage by William A. Brady a year ago with Alice Brady in the starring role. It is a tale of the Orient and of the back-wash of civilization that drifts to the China shores from America and elsewhere.

Wallace Beery, who has played the leading "heavy" in many Dean Jewels, also plays such a role in "Drifting." Matt Moore, another popular player, who was in Miss Dean's latest picture, "White Tiger," is leading man in "Drifting." Among the other well-known players in the cast are Tully Marshall, William V. Mong, J. Farrell McDonald, Madame Rose Dione and Anna May Wong, a talented young Chinese screen actress.

Tod Browning directed. He has made many Priscilla Dean Jewels. "Drifting" is scheduled as Miss Dean's first big 1923-1924 picture.

Mayo in "Six Days"

Frank Mayo's first role under his long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will be the leading male part in Elinor Glyn's "Six Days," opposite Corinne Griffith. Mr. Mayo but recently completed the part of Tom Holby, screen star, in Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale."

Quick Work Done by Universal

Less than seven hours after the announcement of the death of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt reached New York, the International News Reel Corporation had prepared a 200-foot Sarah Bernhardt Memorial, of varied and exclusive shots, showing the famous actress in many striking poses. These memorial subjects were used by the Capitol, the Rialto, the Rivoli and the Strand Theatres in New York City.

This marks a new departure in news reel service. It was possible only by a system closely approximating that of a big metropolitan newspaper, which prepares in advance stories and photographs of all kinds concerning an important personage on the verge of death.

International's film obituary of Mme. Bernhardt was ready in negative form, awaiting word of her death. As soon as that was received, it was rushed to the factory where prints were made.

The Bernhardt Memorial is being included in International News No. 27, which was shipped to all Universal exchanges Tuesday.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

No Summer Let-up at Christie, Both Plant and Force Enlarged

Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, who has just returned to Los Angeles from New York, where he conferred with Educational Film Exchanges releasing their output, advises there will be no let-up in the company's activities with the approach of warm weather. On the contrary, several new comedy people have been engaged.

In line with this policy, during the last two months, the Christie forces have been augmented by the addition of three new leading women, Hazel Deane, Duane Thompson and Kathleen Clifford. The studios have been enlarged and many improvements added. A two-story brick building recently completed will house some of the mechanical departments. The foundation has been laid and building is in progress for a new studio and office building, which will contain a stage 100 by 175 feet. This, it is said, will be the largest electrically lighted enclosed space devoted exclusively to comedy making.

In addition to these evidences of enlargement and "full speed ahead," Christie is sparing no expense in turning out high-class comedies produced on the same scale as the better class of features. For instance, to secure proper backgrounds for "A Hula Honeymoon," the entire company was taken on a 4,500-mile journey to the Hawaiian Islands.

At the present time Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns and the new Christie star, Jimmie Adams, are hard at work, and will continue through the summer. Vernon is playing the lead in "Take Your Choice," Burns having completed "Hot Water," is working on a new picture not yet titled, while Adams has also completed "Green as Grass" and is at work on a new production. Dorothy Devore is at Truckee with Al Christie and a company of twenty filming "Winter Has Came."

The directors, Al Christie, William Beaudine and Scott Sidney, are all engaged on new productions. Among the feminine players Duane Thompson is working with Neal Burns, Charlotte Stevens with Bobby Vernon and Kathleen Clifford will be starred in an untitled production which is now under way.

The Christie company has been consistently producing high-class comedies for eleven years, using the best talent procurable, and have developed a style distinctly their own. As a result, they are playing a high percentage of representative first run theatres and their efforts have met with commendation from showmen as well as the public. Christie points with pride to the fact that these comedies have been recommended by organizations throughout the country as suitable for entire families and it is claimed that one of the most prominent of these organizations, "The Motion Picture League of America," has recommended more Christie than any other brand.

More Kiser Film

Pathe announces release of two more Kiser Art Films in the Oregon Trail series. They are "The Crystal Ascension, picturing a journey through the snows and mists to the summit of Mt. Hood, and "Weeping Waters," which is based on a Pacific Coast Indian legend. Interest in these beautifully photographed stories of the Northwest is said to have gained steadily since release of the first three, "The Price of Progress," showing the timber industry; "Fleeced for Gold," dealing with raising sheep, and "The Royal Chinook," the story of salmon fishing.

Herman Working Hard

Al Herman has just finished "Fare Enough," a Century comedy starring Jack Cooper. It is a story of a jitney bus concession versus a street car franchise in a rural community. The cast also includes Marjorie Marcel, Jenne Hope, Joe Bonner and Ford West.

Herman is now working on "Sky High," which is said to jazz the real estate operators in Hollywood. The story is by Herman and Edward I. Luddy. Jack Cooper and the same cast that appeared in "Fare Enough" will be used in this one.

Sarg With Tri-Stone

Tony Sarg has been added to the staff engaged in preparing the famous pictures of famous stars to be released by Oscar Price and Harry Aitken. Mr. Sarg will devote his time to the preparation of some artistic lobby displays. He has already made a most effective poster for use with the Keystone Comedies on the Price-Aitken revival program. His next work will be a series of studies of Douglas Fairbanks, the first of which will be of the actor in his favorite part, "The Americano."

Three Reelers?

Joe Rock Productions announce that on account of the insistent demands from Sam Grand, J. L. Friedman, Bobby North and several other buyers, Joe Rock will probably make three-reel comedies following completion of his present series of two-reelers.

White's Latest

Jack White is working on the Educational - Mermaid comedy, "This Way Out." Supporting Lige Conley is Mack Swain, Ruth Hiatt, Billy Armstrong and Sunshine Hart.

Our Gang in "Boys to Board" Heads Pathe List for April 8

Mickey Daniels, Jackie Condon, Jackie Davis, Sunshine Sammy, Little Farina and the "Our Gang" bulldog, in "Boys to Board," head Pathe's list of nine releases for April 8. This two-reeler shows what happens when "Our Gang" mutinies in avaricious "Mother" Malone's boarding school.

"Plunder" reaches its 11th episode called "Spunk," in which Pearl White thrills as the fearless heroine in a sailors' lodging house fight.

Paul Parrott is the hero of the Hal Roach book agent single reeler, "Keep Smiling."

The Aesop's Film Fable, "Day by Day in Every Way," Henry Cat tries it on all the animals with success—and presently there is improvement throughout the entire universe.

In Pathe Review No. 14 there is a novel section showing the process of presenting to ordinary view the strange things "seen" by "The Camera Eye." In the new Pathecolor series with the process applied to American scenics, the Missions of California are screened. "Adventures in Dreamland" are pictured in the form of "Silhouettes," and "Wood-Workers of Syria" shows remarkable things achieved where machines are unknown.

Screen Snapshots No. 23 shows these favorites in varied scenes: Director Hugo Ballin and George Walsh in military action; Claire Windsor, Patsy Ruth Miller, Helen Ferguson and Eleanor Boardman spend a quiet evening at home; Theodore Roberts brings a pet home to his wife; Lew Cody and Bert Lytell are interrupted at a duel, and Gaston Glass and Marion Mack introduce a new game.

Big Gain in Sales Shown in "Fun from the Press" Drive

Much satisfaction is expressed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation over the results of their recent drive on The Literary Digest's "Fun from the Press." Some remarkable records were hung up, and tabulations of the returns, which have just been completed, indicate that the high score for the period went to the Denver office, in charge of Mr. H. O. Bartels. Mr. R. E. Nehls, branch sales manager of the Cincinnati office, ran a close second. The quota assigned to each office was based upon the amount of sales of "Fun from the Press" made by each office during the preceding six months.

During the first week, Mr. L. J. Hacking, branch sales manager of Boston, sold 135 per cent. of his quota; Mr. H. C. Bartels, branch sales manager of Denver, sold 283 per cent., and Mr. R. E. Nehls, branch sales manager of Cincinnati, 142 per cent. During the second week, Cincinnati achieved 130 per cent, while Cleveland, C. L. Peavey, branch sales manager, subsequently turned in 160 per cent., and New Orleans, Mrs. A. H. Sessions, branch sales manager, 128 per cent.

Reports are said to indicate that exhibitors throughout the country are strongly appreciative of the nation-wide advertising and exploitation given "Fun from the Press," by the Literary Digest.

Bull's Sixth Film

Bull Montana's latest comedy is "Snowed Under," and the company went to the snowbound mountain peaks of the Tahoe National Forest at Truckee, Cal., to accumulate atmosphere. This is the sixth Bull Montana comedy for Metro. It was directed by Mr. Stromberg himself.

The action takes place at a winter resort sanitarium. Dr. Jekyl is played by Chuck Reisner. The inevitable girl is Florence Gilbert.

Mickey a Star

Screen talent plus freckles is said to be responsible for Pathe signing seven-year-old Mickey Daniels for five years. Mickey has made a decided hit in the Our Gang comedies, and also in "Dr. Jack." It is said that this contract definitely places him in the star class.

Traffic Warning In New Two-Reeler

"Why Are We Careless?" is the new two-reel film (1800 feet) to be released April 1 for use in connection with safety campaigns and educational interests generally. The film was made by the City of Boston "Conservation Bureau," whose function is educational activities along health, welfare and civic lines.

"Why Are We Careless?" was filmed in the streets of Boston and aims to show actual everyday conditions with pedestrians and vehicles contending for the use of the same areas.

Dinner Conference Opens Drive

Preparatory to the opening of its spring production drive—and the filming of serials for summer and fall releases, the serial department at Universal City held an important dinner-conference last week in the Assembly Tea Rooms, Hollywood—with Carl Laemmle, Universal president, as guest of honor.

Stars, directors, cameramen, publicists, scenarioists and film editors were on hand, to listen to the discussions, which were confined solely to the past and future serial activities of the company. Fred J. McConnell, manager of the serial department, was toastmaster.

Eddie Laemmle, on behalf of the members of the department presented Mr. Laemmle with a handsome silver loving cup, as a token of appreciation of Mr. Laemmle's efforts to better the industry.

Shows Roland Serial

On Wednesday, March 28, Pathe held a trade showing of the first three episodes of Ruth Roland's newest serial, "Haunted Valley," in the large Pathe projection room. The story is by Frank Leon Smith and direction by George Marshall. It is a mystery story and involves the fight of the heroine against a great irrigation enterprise over an apparently worthless piece of property which contains a great treasure that she does not expect. It will be released in May following "Plunder."

New Bray Film

"The Romance of Life" is the title of the fourth Bray Romance to be released through Hodkinson. It presents the creation of life from the very beginning, passing through the stages of plant and animal life until the development of man. According to Hodkinson, it is not only instructive but interesting and should find a ready acceptance among exhibitors.

Short Subjects Continue to Receive Newspaper Praise

From all over the country newspaper editors and critics continue to reply to the Pathe questionnaire as to the value of short subjects, their appeal to the public and the advisability of short programs, and we herewith print an additional lot of these replies in connection with those which have appeared in previous issues.

Billy Leyser, Sunday News-Leader, Cleveland, Ohio—"I honestly believe that no theatre can be properly conducted unless its appeal to the public is general. That, for an exhibitor of motion pictures who neglects to show a goodly number of carefully selected short subjects, seems to me to be paralleled with a case where an exhibitor tries to conduct a performance without a projector. There is no doubt that the value of short subjects is on the increase."

R. W. Mason, Spokane Valley Herald, Spokane, Wash.—"My opinion is that the value of short subjects is increasing."

Earl C. Brownlee, Oregon Journal, Portland, Ore.—"Unquestionably the value of short subjects is increasing as their merits increase and their pulling power is felt, even when programmed with unusual features. Especially do audiences here appreciate the shorts, since so many notable ones are made here."

Harold H. Jensen, Salt Lake Telegram, Salt Lake City, Utah—"The value of short subjects is increasing. Today, from my observations, it is the short, snappy film with a 'kick' in every foot of reel that counts, and holds the interest. Too often a splendid film masterpiece is spoiled because it is dragged out so."

L. L. Clemans, Tacoma Daily Ledger, Tacoma, Wash.—"Movie patrons in this section are universal in their demand for screen entertainment that tells the story in rapid action. . . . The greatest fault is found with feature pictures that drag the action in order to cover a certain amount of footage. One of the most enjoyable features on any program is the Pathe Review, which is universally appreciated."

Homer Mooney, Nevada State Journal, Reno, Nevada—"I think the general public wants one 'leader' film developing a complete plot, and besides that it wants at least one short comedy and a news feature — current events, travel, fashions or joke stuff."

Herbert M. Peet, Great Falls Tribune, Great Falls, Mont.—"In my opinion, one and two-reel features hold a definite place on any motion picture program."

Art Meyer, Motion Picture Bulletin, Los Angeles, Calif.—"In my opinion, the short subject is no longer a filler, but a vital part of the program."

G. B. Foster, Spokane Daily Chronicle, Spokane, Wash.—"I believe the short subjects are most certainly increasing in value to the photoplay program."

Sennett and Turpin Busy on Two-Reelers for Pathe

Evidence is forthcoming that there is nothing in the nature of a "scrap of paper" about the Pathe-Mack Sennett two-reel comedy contract. Following its announcement of the closing of that deal, Pathe quotes the following wire forwarded to General Manager Pearson by E. M. Asher, Sennett's Eastern representative:

"Tell Pathe we are going full steam ahead making the greatest comedies ever turned out. The first two are setting the pace, and we will have to go some to beat them. The first Turpin looks like a knock-out. The temporary title is 'Pitfalls of a Great City.' This is a burlesque of the old-fashioned sob drama.

"The title of the first Sennett is, 'Domestic Economy,' which looks like corking, real old-fashioned comedy, not the slapstick kind, but the kind I told you we should and would make. It will be a scream."

The Pathe-Sennett arrangement calls for six or eight Turpins and thirteen Mack Sennett comedies during the year, which will make Pathe's two-reeler list foot up sixty per year.

Newsy Notes On Short Subjects

Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation are filming a series of twelve two-reel comedies based on Peter B. Kyne's "Tiberius Tinker" stories. Oral Humphrey has the title role.

Eddie Barry, seven kids and a flivver have the leading roles in "Family Troubles," a forthcoming Educational-Cameo Comedy.

C. C. Burr announces that the seventh and eighth of his series of All Star comedies, which Hodkinson distributes, are nearing completion. They are "The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly."

In a recent issue of International News were several pictures of Baby Peggy. This diminutive Century Comedy star also occupied a place of prominence in a recent issue of Screen Snapshots.

The Parent-Teacher's Association of Kansas City has placed the Larry Semon comedy, "The Counter Jumper" on its list of worthwhile films.

Harry Edwards, who has been directing Buddy Messinger for Century, is now directing Baby Peggy in her first 1923 production, which is as yet untitled. William Friedle wrote the story.

Brownie, the Century Comedy dog, will be starred in "The Leather Slingers," a parody on Universal's successful "Leather Pusher" stories. Raymaker is directing. Billy Engle, Edith Lee Grant and Blanche Bayson are in the cast.

Kinema Holds Over Coue Film

"The Message of Emile Coue," Educational Pictures Special, has been held over for a second week's showing at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles. Never in the history of the Kinema Theatre have so many inquiries poured into the box office concerning a film production as were received during the first week's run of this picture, according to a story in the Los Angeles Examiner.

"It is simply astonishing," stated James Q. Clemmer, manager of the Kinema, "how a film that is a lecture in celluloid can capture an audience as does 'The Message of Emile Coue.' I have seen all of filmdom's greatest achievements, yet for genuine enthusiastic reception by an audience, I believe the Coue lecture easily leads the field."

Six Big Circuits Book "Plunder"

The Pearl White Pathe serial, "Plunder," which, at release date, was reported to have done more business at the same stage than even those successive record-breakers, "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," has been booked by six of the biggest circuits in the country, Pathe announces.

The circuits which have thus far booked "Plunder," as announced by Pathe, are: The Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans; Skouras Brothers, St. Louis; the Gray Circuit, Maine and New Hampshire; Wilmer and Vincent, Pennsylvania; Lubliner and Trinz, and Ascher Brothers, both of Illinois.

Brownie Featured

"Why Dogs Leave Home," the final title for the picture heretofore known as "Try to Get It," has arrived at the New York office of Century. It gives a bigger part to Brownie, the Century dog, than he has had heretofore in his pictures and permits him to show many new gags which he has practiced.

"Peggy" First Runs

Among first run houses booking the Baby Peggy series are the Ascher Circuit, the Newman, Kansas City; the Garrick, Winnipeg; the Kinema, Salt Lake; the Paramount, Seattle; the Grand, Atlanta; the Troy, Troy; the Plaza, Buffalo; the Capitol, Montreal; the new Forum, New York City; and the Rialto, Denver.

"Oh Nursie!" Cooper's Next Release

"Oh Nursie!" is to be Jack Coopers next Century release. In it the comedian has the most difficult proposition of his life, choosing among a bevy of pretty nurses which rival a Ziegfeld chorus. His companions in misfortune are Joe Bonner, Jack Earle and Marjorie Marcel.

Jack Cooper plays a nervy insurance agent who tries to sell everyone he meets

Exhibitors Show All Short Subject Bill

With "The Message of Emile Coue" forming the nucleus, exhibitors are successfully showing all short subject programs. The Curran Theatre, Boulder, Col., and the Wray Theatre, Wray, Col., report very satisfactory business on two such programs.

The program at the Curran Theatre consisted of "The Mesage of Emile Coue;" the Educational African Hunt Special, "Man Versus Beast;" a Hamilton Comedy; and the Lyman H. Howe picture, "A Ride on a Runaway Train." The program at the Wray Theatre consisted of "The Message of Emile Coue;" the Special, "Man Versus Beast;" a Hamilton Comedy, "Extra! Extra!" and the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge, "Garden of Geysers."

Pathe News Events Aid Reports

That events pictured in Pathe News admirably supplement newspaper reports, in fact complete news service to the public, is recognized by most of the leading newspaper editors. This is shown, says Pathe, by their eagerness to secure film enlargements to illustrate their own printed reports. But it has remained for the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer to start a still closer tie-up with the leading picture-news medium.

Twice a week the Pathe News releases are announced in the Observer's theatre columns under the headline: "Today's Pathe News Events," under which is printed the essential facts of each item in the reel copied from the title sheets. This makes an interesting third or a half column summary of the important current news events and reminds readers that they are fully covered in motion pictures at the leading theatres.

Vitagraph Schedule

Vitagraph announces the next Jimmy Aubrey comedy will be "Forward March," to be followed by "The Detective." The newest Seamon comedy is "A Midnight Cabaret" with Kathlyn Meyers in the leading feminine role. "Bobbie's Ark" and "Bare Facts Concerning Bears" are current Urban Popular Classics.

New Christie Finished

"Green As Grass," the first Educational-Christie Comedy in which Jimmie Adams will appear, has been finished, and the Christie studios are now working on two other comedies. Bobby Vernon, under the direction of Scott Sidney, is making "Take Your Choice," while Al Christie is directing Dorothy Devore at Truckee in "Winter Has Came."

Fay With Hamilton

Lloyd Hamilton has engaged Hugh Fay to direct the sixth Educational-Hamilton comedy of the present series for Educational release. Fay is responsible for the production of two of Hamilton's previous successes of the present series, "The Speeder," and "No Luck."

"Pathe Review No. 14"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Of particular interest to amateur photographers is this issue of Pathe Review which shows the different processes of "taking pictures" from the choosing of the location through the focusing, developing, etc., to the completed print. There is also a section of photographic gems showing beautiful exterior scenes in panel form. The Pathecolor section shows missions in California. Another section shows the woodworkers of Syria while an installment of Herbert M. Dawley's "Sillietes" is a fantastic creation picturing a weird dream of a man who had too much lobster and welsh rabbit. It is cleverly executed and highly imaginative. The entire reel is up to the usual high standard of the Pathe Reviews.—C. S. S.

"Day by Day in Every Way"

(Pathe—Cartoon—2/3 Reel)

As implied by the title, this is a satire on Dr. Coue's now famous theory. Cartoonist Paul Terry has handled this in his usual clever manner injecting a number of laughs. As usual, the cast plays a leading part. This precocious animal starts out by causing a hen to lay an extra amount of eggs, then he tries the theory on other animals with startling results, but finds in the farmer a hard customer. Reminiscent of several of Terry's more recent cartoons, the farmer takes a trip through space, visiting other planets. Altogether it is a highly satisfactory number of the Aesop's Fable series.—C. S. S.

"Green as Grass"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A good comedy stunt used in getting an old nag to speed and thrilling racing scenes afford fine entertainment for the majority. Chilblains, the horse, moves only at one signal—the opening of an umbrella. Discovering the miraculous effect of this act, his owner, played by Jimmie Adams, enters him in a race for which he prepares by taking along a cargo of umbrellas. The scheme works splendidly. The number is amusing, original and full of action.

M. K.

"The Ghost Breaker"

(Winkler—Cartoon—One Reel)

Felix the cat, Pat Sullivan's cartoon creation, is the hero of this single reel comedy distributed by M. J. Winkler. Felix, unawed by ghostly manifestations, succeeds in disclosing that the supposed ghost is a real estate shark who wishes to buy the farmer's land at a sacrifice figure. Mr. Sullivan has created considerable merriment with the clever stunts in this picture which gives considerable rein to the imagination; however, a weak point is the fact that the supposed ghost does many things that would be impossible for him to do, such as disappearing through walls.—C. S. S.

'Dough and Dynamite'

(Tri-Stone Comedy—Two Reels)

One of the earlier Chaplin comedies, revelling in broad slapstick, of a sort that is popular any time, has been retitled with a lot of "jazz" lines and reissued by Tri-Stone. Charlie's adventures in a bake-shop provide the fun. The strikers' plot to blow up the shop provides the dynamite. It is rough, and sticky, with plenty of bread dough in unusual places. It is much more obvious than Chaplin's up-to-date productions, but will be highly amusing to slapstick fans.—M. K.

"Pop Tuttle's Lost Control"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels.)

Pop's trip to the city and the resultant purchase of a flivver to serve as the village bus is the source of comedy in this. Tillie, as usual, is good for many laughs as played by Wilna Hervey. There seems to be somewhat of a shortage of comedy incident in the first part, most of the fun lying in characterization. The last scenes showing Pop's failure to control the roving bus have much more action and more effective comedy.—M. K.

The Movie Dare Devil

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

Bobby Bumps is the diminutive cartoon hero in a movie thriller this time. He applies for a job with a new film company, bringing along a sample film demonstrating his ability. The picture shows him doing dare-devil stunts all over the world. The action is amusing and the point is well put over. Almost any type of audience will like it.

Review of "Hunted Valley," Pathe Serial starring Ruth Roland, is published on page 656 of this issue.

"The Smile Wins"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Director George Jeske has employed an oft-used theme in this single reel comedy starring Paul Parrott. A persistent book-agent attempts to sell a particularly hard customer. Considerable ingenuity has been shown in working out the theme, however, and it will afford average enjoyment for motion picture audiences, particularly those who are Paul Parrott fans.—C. S. S

"Boys to Board"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Another highly enjoyable number of the "Our Gang" series of two reel comedies distributed by Pathe. It is astonishing how well the high standard of entertainment value is maintained in this series. Each one is at least as good, if not better, than the preceding one and the series started off with a bang. Not only is the gang of kids in this series unusually clever, but they have been provided with excellent comedy material and well directed, doing the stunts that real urchins would do. In this one the gang are in a boarding school. They run away, taking with them the principal's henpecked husband. Chance brings them to a house which appears to be haunted but after exciting adventures the "spirit" turns out to be a moonshiner and they capture him. Then they return and the husband asserts himself and all the kids receive much better treatment.—C. S. S.

"Sunny Gym"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Brownie, the Century company's remarkable dog, is both nominally and actually the star of this two reel Universal comedy, and adds much to its enjoyment. He has some new stunts in which he shows almost human intelligence. Especially good are the scenes where he walks under a frame and gets a lot of boxing gloves on his back and where he shows the new pupils how to punch a bag. Aside from the work of Brownie there is the average amount of comedy hokum, the story dealing with the experiences of two mashers who land in a gymnasium and after going through strenuous training disguise themselves as girls and get into the female section only to be found out and so "mussed up" by Brownie that they go home using a box in lieu of outside clothing.—C. S. S.

'Under Secret Orders'

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

This is the second of Universal's series of two reelers, "The Further Adventures of Yorke Norroy," with Roy Stewart as the celebrated member of the government secret service. In this one he shows his skill by recovering valuable papers that have been stolen by a notorious woman crook from another member of the service. There is plenty of punch and action in these two reels and the story holds the interest well throughout. It should prove popular with the majority of spectators.—C. S. S.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Grinding Compounds

G. W. Bennewitz, Projectionist "The Strand," Sioux Falls, South Dakota, writes as follows:

Have not written anything for our department for quite a while, so will submit a few ideas on the use of grinding compounds in connection with projection equipment.

Every projectionist should have at least two grades of grinding compound in his tool kit. One compound I have found to have especial value is the clover compound. This compound is non magnetic, hence will be drawn into the pores of cast iron, with disastrous after effects. A specially made petroleum hard oil is used as a binder, and keeps the abrasive suspended in the mixture under a temperature as high as 250 Fahr. This insures it remaining uniform on the surface throughout the operation of grinding and lapping.

The Clover compound is made in eight grades, from microscopicly fine to extra coarse. Duplex cans, containing grades A and C, which will serve all purposes of the projectionist, may be had from any hardware store or garage.

Grinding Friction Discs

A great deal of take-up trouble is caused by high spots on the friction discs. If these spots are ground off and the surfaces kept perfectly flat, one will get better results with less tension. There will be less wear on both the projector parts and film.

To do this, dissemble the take-up and apply a thin, evenly distributed coating of grinding compound to the face of the disc. Reassemble and, holding the take-up spindle stationary, start the projector. Use but very light tension between the discs while grinding.

For the truing up of tension shoes, aperture plate film tracks, etc., get a piece of plate glass and, by cutting it to desired size you can make a better wetstone than you can buy. Apply a thin, uniform coating of compound and work it around on the surface until the polished surface of the glass disappears and is replaced by a uniform ground glass surface. The flat surface of an old condenser is good for small work. You are now ready to true the surface of the tension shoe, film track or whatever it may be you wish to surface.

Apply a thin, even coating to the glass, and, with the fingers on its back in such way as to get even pressure all over the work, work it around with a rotating movement, until the entire surface is ground perfectly flat and true. When done, remove sharp edges, if any, with a platinum point file.

If this is done once every month it will keep the surface true and you will be able to produce better screen results; also you may run with less gate tension and the projector parts will last longer.

Perfect Electrical Contact

To insure perfect electrical contact of the blades of a switch with the contact points, apply a thin coating of compound to both sides of the blades where they contact with the clips (first having carefully trued the clips with the blades) close the switch and work the blades back and forth. Inspect the work and see if the blade is grinding on both sides. If not, then true the clip. Of course all contacts may be ground at the same time.

The Carbon Jaw

To insure perfect contact between the carbon and jaw. The old and still generally used method is to file the jaws. This is not a good method, for the reason that the contact cannot be filed perfectly true. A better, though not the best way, is to wrap emery cloth around a carbon or a piece of round wood or iron. The projectionist who has thorough knowledge carefully selects the carbon combination best suited to his work, and uses is continually.

The drawing shows a tool for grinding or lapping the carbon jaws to produce perfect electrical contact. Take a dozen of your carbons, both upper and lower, to a machine shop and have them measured with a micrometer. Select the largest of each and have a tool such as is shown turned up from cold rolled steel. Have it made 10/1000 larger than the diameter of the largest carbon. Have a hole drilled and a piece of round stock pressed in for a handle, as shown.

CARBON JAW GRINDING TOOL
Submitted by G. W. Bennewitz, Strand, Sioux Falls.

You are now ready to grind the jaws. If they be badly burned it is best to remove and clamp them in a vise. Apply thin coating of compound to tool, insert same and tighten clamping screw just enough to produce slight pressure between tool and metal of jaw. Rotate tool until a good surface is obtained, after which it is but the work of a moment to insert the tool and clean contacts.

If a job will require much grinding, start with grade C and finish with grade A. When job is complete always wash with gasoline or kerosine to remove compound.

Really I had to smile as I read the foregoing. I can imagine the gasp some will give as they try to imagine themselves grinding in a switch contact. I venture the assertion that not many will at least, at first glance, see the benefit in or reason for grinding tension shoes and aperture plate tracks, yet brother Bennewitz is perfectly right.

Such surfaces and the surfaces of friction discs should be PERFECTLY flat. and if we examine one projector with another I venture the assertion that such surfaces will NOT be found perfectly flat in one projector out of one hundred. As to the carbon jaws, he also is right. A true ground joint will give decidedly better results, especially if the carbon be working close to capacity, as it must work to give 100 per cent. results, and once a perfect contact is made, it requires but just a moment of work each day to keep it perfect—provided it be done each day. With such a contact the carbon will heat less and carry more current, the metal of the jaw will heat less and results will be better in every way.

This, I believe, is the very first time this department has ever received a letter suggesting 100 per cent. work along these lines. Some of you may laugh and sneer—some of you doubtless will, but after all would not YOU be proud to have PERFECT things in YOUR projection room—things which YOU YOURSELF HAD MADE PERFECT? Think that over, brothers.

NOTICE

NEW LENS CHART

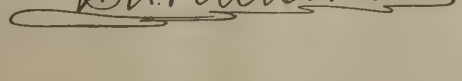
This company is bringing out a new lens chart by John Griffiths.

The supply of the old lens chart is completely exhausted.

Watch for a complete announcement of the new lens chart in Moving Picture World next week.

Important Notice

All owners of the Bluebook of Projection (Fourth Edition of Handbook) are requested to immediately advise me of any errors they may have found in same. To date a few comparatively unimportant errors have come to light, mostly the result of misprint. I desire to have a record of all errors, and ask your help in this respect. In reporting errors please give page and line.



In Bad Hole

Horace P. Priddy, Projectionist, Electra, Texas, writes:

Am projectionist at the Grand Theatre here and am in a bad hole. Will thank you cordially for your advice.

The projectionists in our local are pretty evenly divided on the following question: Provided the conditions as to screen, condenser and projection lens diameter remain the same, does distance of projection affect the brightness of the picture? If it does, then why?

Also one more point: Does the light cross between the front and back factors of the projection lens? If not, then where does it cross?

Yes and No

As to the crossing point of the light rays, why they cross everywhere from the surface of the film to a point more or less distant from the front factor of the projection lens. This is very well illustrated, photographically, in figure 46 of the Blue Book of Propection (Fourth Edition of Handbook), and in figure 61 of the Third Edition of the handbook. However, the point where the rays all have what we may call their crossing point, if we can view it as any single point, is at the aerial image of the condenser. It is impossible to explain this in the space at our command in the department.

As to your main question, yes and no. It depends upon too many things. Such questions cannot be answered in the way you wish. First of all, there is amperage to be considered, which involves the distance of light source from face of collector lens and distance face of converging lens to aperture. This has an immediate effect on results, because it effects the diameter of the light beam at the point the projection lens must "pick it up."

Always Provided

Always provided the condition be such that the projection lens which will "pick up" the entire beam at the shorter projection distance will also pick up the entire beam at the longer projection distances (which is possible only under a very limited range, unless a lens of very large diameter be used for the short distance—a bad condition in itself, then projection distance would have no effect on pictures illumination, except such slight loss as is due to dust particles or smoke in the air. I am in this of course assuming a picture of what we may term normal size.

To go into this matter exhaustively enough to make you understand it all would take at least all the space in a dozen issues of this department, which is impossible. Study the Blue Book and you should understand it.

Condenser Breakage

E. A. Blaind, who signs himself "Operator, Regent Theatre," Belleville, Ont., from which I gather that he operates the Regent Theatre, has trouble which he describes as follows:

Will you kindly advise me, by return mail, how I can overcome condenser breakage, with which I have had considerable trouble lately. They break as soon as a new one is put in. Have tried everything I could think of, but to no purpose.

There is sufficient room for lens expansion in mounts. No direct draught strikes the lamphouse. Lamphouse is clean and well ventilated. The trouble seemed to start about two weeks ago. The projector (he called it a machine.—Ed.) is a Powers 6-A. Can you recommend any mount which will eliminate the trouble?

Something Was Changed

If the trouble started two weeks ago and there was none of it before, then it is evident that at that time something was changed. You have not supplied me with some very necessary data.

If your lamphouse is well ventilated, and nothing in connection with its ventilation was changed, then we may eliminate that factor from our calculations. You say the projector is a 6-A, but that does NOT tell me what type of lamphouse you have, hence I do not know what type of condenser mount it is.

When answering such questions it is essential that I know the focal length of your condenser lenses and the diameter of the carbon crater.

It is best to not send crater measurement, but an impression made by laying a piece of writing paper on an ordinary blotter and pressing a crater down on it with a rolling motion, so as to impress the edge or rim of the crater on the paper.

You may be using rheostats, and have installed a new one which is of presumably the same capacity. But a new rheostat of the same capacity as the old one would probably give considerable increase in amperage.

If you are operating the theatre, then ask your projectionist whether there has been any noticeable change (increase) in amperage. I have even known a case where the power company installed new street mains, with result that there was a heavy increase in amperage, which seemed very mysterious until the secret of the old, overloaded street mains was discovered, and increased amperage means increased heat, you know.

You see, friend Blaind, there are so many things which may happen which would influence condenser breakage trouble that I can best reply to you by telling you to find out what happened two weeks ago.

Examine Lenses

Perhaps the lenses you now have are of shorter focal length. If either the collector or converging lens focal length be shortened, the E. F. of the combination is shortened and the arc is automatically located nearer the face of the collector lens, and greater heat is therefore its portion, amperage remaining the same.

Find out what was changed about the time the trouble started. That is the secret, and your projectionist should be able to find out what it is if he examines things closely enough.

If he is unable to do so, then how do you suppose I can, who have but a small part of the necessary information and am quite some distance away. I want to help you, but you should remember when asking questions of this sort, that too much information won't do any harm, while too little is not enough.

Swindler—Beware!

J. W. Schmock, projectionist, Kozy Theatre, Ludington, Michigan, writes:

Recently I picked up a copy of the Moving Picture World for the first time, and purely by cacident opened it at your department. Since then I have literally turned the place inside out looking for back numbers.

Inclosed find stamps for lens charts. Ordered the Bluebook the very first day I discovered the department. Up to then I did not know there really was such a thing. Had heard about it some time ago, but the following will tell you why I thought it a fake.

A man visited me and set forth a tale to the effect that the World was making a special effort to get projectionist subscribers, and as an inducement would give a copy of Richardson's handbook with a year subscription. The "Try anything once" bug got the best of me and I fell.

Was Fooled

Of course in return for my hard earned coin I got just exactly nothing at all. The check I gave was made out to the Moving Picture World, but was changed to "Cash" and—cashed. It was indorsed by a woman in Chicago. I wonder how many other suckers fell for the same thing.

I started work in a projection room two and a half years ago and have managed to improve myself until I can at least more than hold my own against some "operators" around here who "know it all."

We just got a 50-50 Hallberg AC to DC motor generator set and are expecting new projectors to arrive very soon now. Will have a list of questions to ask you before long.

Alright, Brother Schmock, I'll do my best to answer them.

As for the handbook-with-a-subscription, why, the World is not, never has and I think never will give any special "prizes" with subscriptions.

Certainly not a six dollar book. THE "PRIZE" WE TRY TO GIVE WITH EACH SUBSCRIPTION CONSISTS OF PAGES FILLED WITH REAL, HONEST-TO-GOSH INFORMATION WHICH IS RELIABLE AND OF STERLING VALUE. That is the best prize any paper can give.

Lincoln on Strikes

We all, of course, deplore strikes. They represent industrial war and have no excuse. By having no excuse I mean that if the employer and employee get together with no chip on either shoulder, and substitute common sense, reason and fairness for bluff and brute force, there would be no strikes.

It is interesting, however, to know what Abraham Lincoln thought of the right to strike, which same I ran across in a book this morning. Lincoln once said, in a public address:

"I thank God that we have a system of labor where there can be a strike. Whatever the pressure, there is a point where the workman can stop."

In the motion picture industry there should never be a strike of projectionists. I say this for the reason that exhibitors are men of brains and reasoning powers, and the projectionist, who is worthy of the name, is the same. Such strikes as have occurred have been brought about mostly by one or both sides assuming an up-stage attitude and refusing to meet the "other feller" half, or even a quarter of the way.

The exhibitor has very often been unreasonable in his desire to get cheapness at the expense of everything else. The projectionist has been unreasonable in that he has made no adequate effort to make himself worth real money. In many cases he has made no effort at all. Mind you, in this I speak of the men as a whole, not the individual.

When the time comes that the projectionist, as a body, is interested in delivering 100 per cent screen results, and delivering them as nearly as is possible with 100 per cent efficiency, and when the time comes that exhibitors, as a body, realize the fact that a 100 per cent photoplay put on the screen by 75 per cent projection has NOT a 100 per cent drawing power, or does not give the theatre a 100 per cent drawing power, then we shall, perhaps, see reason take the place of force and strikes end.

Not Clear

Norman Dultz, New York City, sets forth his difficulty as follows:

On Page 66 of the Blue Book of Projection—new handbook—appears a section explaining how temperature coefficient is used in electrical calculations. You explain that if the coefficient of a metal is .001, then for every degree Fahr. temperature increases above normal (75 degrees) the resistance of that metal will be increased by .001 of an ohm. per mil. foot. For example: Coefficient of a metal is .001; normal temperature, 75 degrees. Resistance of that metal at normal is 10 ohms. Question: What is its resistance per mil. foot at 175 degrees Fahr.?

Increase is 100 degrees Fahr. For each added degree there is an added resistance of .001 degree Fahr., hence 100 X .001 equaling .1, the added resistance is one-tenth (.1) of a degree, and the total 10.1 ohms.

All this is clear enough, but it is not plain why we must multiply the increase (.1) by 10 and add the result to the original 10, which would make .01 instead of 10.1, unless you mean that the increase per mil. foot, as expressed by the coefficient, is .001 of an ohm per degree per ohm. I will feel obliged if you will send me a personal reply to this problem.

Of Interest to Readers

A personal reply does not seem necessary, friend Dultz, and the matter wil doubtless interest many readers of the department, hence I am using it therein.

The information in the book is correct, though perhaps not put as clearly as it might be. In order to be absolutely certain that no error has been made I sent your letter to the Driver Harris people, who are as good an authority on such matters as I know of. They say:

We would explain that the proper way to express this is that the temperature coefficient in this particular case would be .001 ohm per degree per ohm. This would make the total resistance 11 ohms, rather than 10 1-10 ohms, since you would multiply the rise in resistance, or unit rise, by the total ohms.

Service Plus

E. K. Shirley, projectionist, Woodbine Theatre, Homer, Louisiana, has the following remarks to make concerning service:

Dear Mr. Richardson: You have doubtless heard many talk of "service." Well, I also have something I want to say on that subject.

Just six days ago I was having trouble with one of my projectors. I wrote you, asking advice concerning it. This morning I received a loan mechanism from the Nicholas Power Company, New York, requesting that I send in my old one for adjustment. This afternoon I received your letter advising me that you would refer the matter to the Power Company. Brothers, there is SERVICE for you, with a great big S.

Well, friend Shirley, we try to give the best service we know how, but don't think for a minute we can always do as well as that. Also you should and doubtless do credit the Nicholas Power Company with the larger half of it. I merely sent them your letter and asked them to get busy—which they very evidently did, with a big D.

How McKeown, Chief of Service of McVickers, Makes Politeness Pay

LAST week we gave a slant at the increased usefulness of a uniformed usher.

Here is an illustration of how Jones, Linick & Schaefer make politeness pay the ushers of the new McVickers Theatre of Chicago, which has a service department just like an automobile company. This department comprises all employes who come in direct contact with the patrons.

Joseph J. McKeown, chief of service, puts it thusly in the last issue of the Service Sheet, published for the theatre employes:

A "Thank You" Contest

Just to be different from the rest, we are going to inaugurate a "Thank You" contest. We want more applause in the form of "Thank You" than W. Remington Welch receives for his organ solo.

Welch is giving us great odds; he is to consume in equally divided periods approximately thirty minutes a day against our possible twelve or thirteen hours.

Every one of us must do our "all" every second we're on the floor to round up every possible "Thank You" we can. Get a "Thank You" out of everyone, even if they are lead dimes. They'll bend if they're squeezed. Whether they say "Thank You" in Polish, Yiddish, Bohunk or Scandinavian, don't lose them till you get it. If it's necessary to open every door in this castle, or turn down every seat, or help with their thirty-pound sealskins, or run down from the kino-booth level to check a few trunks, or dash backstage ninety-one times to ascertain the name of some musical selection, or, or, or, or, etc. —anyway, don't lost that "Thank You" or give it to the other fellow.

Every day, in every way, the total "Thank Yous" will be posted on the Bulletin Board. The greatest totals at the top, and if it isn't your name prepare for the paddling machine. BE A MAN AND A REAL YANKEE SPORTSMAN—that is, don't lie. My boy, here's your start—"Thank You."

JOSEPH J. McKEOWN,
Chief of Service.

The Reward

The winner of the contest, he who pulls down the most "Thank Yous," is given an entire Sunday's leave of absence, so that he may go fishing, visit his best girl, or break the speed regulations in his motor car.

As an illustration of how the scheme pans out, we append a score achieved by the ushering body of the house.

Lawrence, 979; Wirth, 853; Ball, 851; Magilner, 834: McNamara, 745; Hoffman, 635; Clifford, 558; Morphen, 428; Berner, 378; Grissappe, 317; Van Shaich, 292; Simmons, 238; Bonell, 205; Brazee, 197; Mills, 185; Johnson, 131; Smith, 28, and Gill, 12.

All floor men and ushers are under rigid military discipline, but are given their rest hours and provided with a cozy library and reading room adjoining their locker room. Maybe these are a few of the reasons why patrons are pleased with the policy of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's gorgeous new McVickers Theatre.

The plan, with modifications to suit local conditions, is one which could be adopted to advantage very generally.

Making the S. R. O. Sign Read "Come In and Be Comfortable"

THE picture's the thing and it requires a good program, selected with taste and screened with skill to fill the house and keep 'em coming back for more.

But it's a wise exhibitor who hangs out the S. R. O. sign with the cheerful consciousness that the waiting patrons, instead of being standees, have been provided with comfortable quarters in which to luxuriously await their turn at viewing the picture.

The well furnished rest room and foyer take the curse off waiting to the extent of making it a real pleasure and the meeting of one's friends therein a part of the patron's enjoyment of the show.

Last week, we told how the Twin Capitol of Union Hill, N. J., and the Fox Theatre of Aurora, Ill., catered to their overflow. This week, we illustrate the lobby and promenade of Loew's Palace, of Washington, D. C.

A Japanese Room for the Women

A Japanese room for women and a club room for men patrons, with a forty-foot promenade between them, have been provided for their comfort at the Palace Theatre and these several rooms are among the most attractive of any like accommodations in their territory.

The promenade is fitted with comfortable chairs and settees, also desks supplied with stationery for the convenience of those desiring to write. The floor is covered with a red velvet carpet in harmony with the upholstering of the furniture. In the center is a white mantlepiece, a replica of one in the White House, above which is a framed picture, and on the shelf are small ornaments. The space is illuminated by concealed lights and it is further decorated by vases constantly filled with choice cut flowers, potted plants, and cages of singing canaries.

This space is daily used by many patrons. At the left is the ladies' retiring room, capable of accommodating a dozen or fifteen women, attended by a matron, who is a trained nurse and constantly on duty, also a number of the girl ushers have been trained in Red Cross work.

Maximum Service

Lawrence Beatus, manager of the Loew interests in Washington, takes a great interest in the features of the theatre provided for the comfort of patrons and has ordered that every effort be made to bring this service up to the maximum.

The walls of the ladies' retiring room are covered with Japanese wallpaper, with large pictures depicting various Japanese scenes. Illumination is obtained from drop lights in Japanese-type fixtures, and mirrors and pictures in Japanese frames.

The doors contain pier glass on both sides and a private telephone booth has also been provided. The toilets are kept immaculate and by reason of an efficient ventilating system no disinfectants are required. Both the GeorgeKleineBecomes President of U. T. E.

At a meeting of directors of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, held at the executive offices,, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York, on March 22, H. T. Edwards tendered his resignation from the presidency of the corporation, which he has held since its organization in 1917.

Mr. Edwards' action was due to his continued ill health and a feeling on his part that someone in better physical condition should assume the burden which he had borne during the past six years.

Finding that this decision was irrevocable, his associates reluctantly accepted the resignation and elected the following officers:

President, George Kleine; vice-president, treasurer and general manager, Joseph Coufal; assistant treasurer, J. R. Riker; secretary, Conrad Eckhardt.

The following directors were also elected: George Kleine, Joseph F. Coufal, J. H. Hallberg, Conrad Eckhardt, C. A. Calehuff, Frederick L. Kerr and J. Robert Rubin.

The furniture and fittings are all in mahogany. The ceiling is paneled in gold and there are pictures in black and gold frames on the walls. As in the ladies' room there is a fireplace built into the wall in the center of the mantlepiece, with gas logs, which gives a charming effect in winter. Globe Ticket Company Has West Coast Branch

On January 1st, 1923, the Globe Ticket Company of Philadelphia opened a branch factory in Los Angeles in the Westinghouse Building, 420 South San Pedro Street. During the last year or two the business of this company has increased to such an extent that it seemed advisable to establish a factory on the West Coast.

This factory is a complete unit, prepared to turn out all classes of tickets on short notice. C. M. MacAllister, who was in the Philadelphia office for several years, has charge of the Los Angeles factory. The same brand of service that has been the standard of the Globe Ticket Company in Philadelphia for over forty years will be the aim of Mr. MacAllister in operating the Los Angeles plant.

For some time previous to the San Francisco earthquake and fire, the Globe Ticket Company had a factory in that city, but the plant was destroyed at the time of the earthquake, and never rebuilt. John A. Beck, who was manager of the San Francisco factory until it was destroyed, is still the local representative there. Being a native son, Mr. Beck is well known among the trade on the West Coast, and will be glad to serve his old friends in every possible way.

Fire Stops Box Office Receipts

A bad fire in your theatre means closing up. Even if your loss is covered by insurance you can't reopen at once. Box office receipts stop. THE ARCADE THEATRE

BIG TIMBER MONTANA

March 19th, 1923.

Nicholas Power Co.,
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

In the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of March 3rd, note you have a back page Ad, regarding the staying quality, of the Power's Machines. Now I can show a much better record than the Gentleman from Virginia.

The latter part of 1912 I purchased a Six a head No. 20039 same has run two shows a day and an occasional matinee, ever since. Have replaced on an average of one aperture plate a year or as they show wear. In 1918 we turned the intermittent sprocket around, and the first of this month I replaced it with a new sprocket. Outside of a few broken top roller springs, we have expended to date on this machine in eleven years, about $15.00.

In 1916 I bought a Power's Six B No. 21385 which has had the same use as the above. In 1921 we turned the Intermittent sprocket around, and the same sprocket that came with the machine is in good shape and still working. Outside of replacing aperture plates, have expended nothing on same for repairs.

I forgot to state that in 1916 I replaced the tension shoes, not because they were worn but because they (the newer ones) were longer and do not wear the aperture plates as the shorter ones do, including these we have expended something like $20.00 in eleven years.

Yours truly,

ARCADE THEATRE.

Chicago Patrons Roll In Seats At Turpin Comedy

"The Shriek of Araby" is a delightfully funny farce comedy and Ben Turpin is just as amusing as ever," says Exhibitors Herald. "At Balaban's Loop theatre, Chicago, patrons rolled around in their seats.

"Will prove satisfactory entertainment with audiences.

"There are bathing girls and swimming pools and everything a Mack Sennett comedy usually has, and the action is fast and furious."

"Mack Sennett again, with Ben Turpin soaring out of sight," says Exceptional Photoplays under the head "Worth Watching For." "A great team.

A Star and a Picture For All Audiences!

The inimitable Charles Ray in the kind of role that made him a great star and a wonderfully popular favorite with all kinds of audiences.

"The Girl I Loved" is that sure-fire type of film that combines romantic drama, tear-compelling heart appeal and thrilling melodrama. It wins!

"Ray's Stock Ought To Climb Several Points"

"Charles Ray's remarkable acting makes 'The Girl I Loved' one of his very best pictures," says M. P. World. "Charles Ray stock ought to climb several points as a result.

"It is a success from a production viewpoint and ought to prove a financial success for exhibitors.

"For fine suppressed acting one hardly can expect a better style than that exhibited by Ray; and for melodrama one must give him due credit in the scenes where he is in the runaway, and afterward. The settings are beautiful."

March 15, 1923.

Mr. Harry Rapf,
Warner Brothers Studio,
5842 Sunset Boulevard,
Los Angeles, Calif.

My dear Mr. Rapf:-

I reached New York on Tuesday and the first thing I did was to go and see "BRASS." I confess I went with some trepidation; I had no idea how I should like my "child" in other clothes. But I confess I was pleasantly surprised. The spirit of the book, - its raison d'etre - is all there, and what more has an author a right to ask?

The conscientious effort that has been exerted to make the screen version of the story a first class film, is all too obvious, and for this my thanks and due appreciation. In places it is a beautiful picture, in spots it has moments of bigness, - never is it bad. Let me say here that I am a harsh critic, particularly where my own work has been altered or edited, and so what I have said of the photoplay you have made of "BRASS" is high praise from me.

I am sure that you will appreciate it when I say that for an author to see his puppets that have originated in his mind and lived there, strutting about on the screen, is a hard, tough and - may I say - at best an unpalatable experience. I came to the Strand, therefore, prepared to curse; I came away pleased and marvelling a bit. In many ways you have accomplished the impossible: you have transferred the spirit, the lesson, the purpose of the book onto the screen, and, - still more difficult, - you have put Mrs. G. in the picture! That is a real achievement.

Miss Irene Rich does as fine an impersonation of a character as I have ever seen on the screen. She is great. I think much of the picture's success is due to her splendid work. Please congratulate her for me. There is much evidence, too, of fine directing in the picture. I admired particularly some of the quick transitions and the fine judgement displayed in the omissions. On the whole, I think you have made "BRASS" a big picture and I congratulate you.

With all good wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Charles G Norris

Two Human Incidents—That Count

In two orchestra seats in one of New York's musical comedy successes, one night last week sat two tired business men,—who had probably paid some speculator seven dollars apiece to be there.

They were getting their money's worth out of the antics of a particularly funny comedian.

"Lord," said one, "that fellow's funny!"

"Regular Keystone Stuff," said the other.

In a moving picture house in Harlem they flashed a title on the screen.

It was late. A good many people were on their way out.

There was a round of applause.

"Wow," yelled a small boy,—overcome with excitement.

Other small boys whistled. The people that were going out looked at that title and came back.

Then the house settled down to enjoy itself—and for the next twenty minutes it tittered or chuckled or laughed outright according to its sex and upbringing.

This was the title:—

HARRISON'S REPORTS March 31, 1923

"The Lion's "Mouse"—Marguerite Marsh, Wyndham Standing

(Hodkinson, March 25, 5,200 ft.; 60 to 74 min.)

A first-rate melodrama; the mixture of suspense, good direction and acting, and fast action may always be depended on to result in a picture that will thoroughly satisfy the majority of fans. "The Lion's Mouse" is no exception. Mary Odette, an English player, whose name occasionally appears with American artists, gives a clean-cut impersonation of the mouse's role.

Any picture in which a young and attractive wife temporarily jeopardizes her marital happiness for the sake of either an unfortunate or erring brother is sure to win the audience's wholehearted sympathy. The heroine in this case, in her zeal to extricate her brother from the toils of international blackmailers, and to maintain secrecy about the matter, is suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness. But in the end, everything comes out as it should.

Picture-goers who love strong melodrama and the majority do should be well pleased with this one.

WORLD

The Editor's Views

THE pendulum has swung again, and the fortress walls that surrounded the bigger distributing machines seem to be crumbling. The independent with a big picture now, or a big one next Fall, will be able to pick and choose among distributing machines.

This is interesting.

It means a livelier market, a healthier competition—and such conditions seem always to have moved hand in hand with a prosperous industry.

Three-year terms seem to complete motion picture cycles. At one end of the period we find distributing machines starving for pictures and clamoring for anything and everything in the way of product. At the other extreme we see them handcuffed and bound with their own production plans, with contracts, commitments and what-nots that leave even the capable independent producer begging for an outlet.

And in the center—the healthy condition, a compromise of the two extremes, that finds distributors of all sizes of impressiveness willing and able to give the ambitious creator a fair chance to bring his wares to market.

IT seems probable that even Famous Players will find room on its list next year for productions sponsored by independently operating producers. Some contracts have already been signed.

Goldwyn, in addition to its own gigantic production operations, has achieved the necessary "balance" through alliances with Distinctive and Cosmopolitan.

Universal's trend may be seen by its acquisition of "Driven" in the season just passed and its current presentation of the remarkably successful African hunt pictures.

Not the least of the reasons for Metro's sustained performance during the season just closing may be found in that same balance between judicious fostering of independents and its own production work.

First National, after being at the extreme of a "no-production" policy for many years, is now aiming at that same "balance."

WHAT lesson there is in this continually repeated cycle may be summed up in this conclusion:

Production cannot be successfully and permanently reduced to factory terms.

The most capable of producing staffs, the most complete of resources, the most sincere and ambitious of intentions, when under single-headed distributor-control do not prove sufficient to hold up year in and year out.

The factory is perennially inclined to play "the sure thing." And, despite its own best intentions, to reduce creation to machine terms.

For progress, for daring, for "the new" that keeps us abreast of the great public's demands—we fall back on the independent.

THERE is a thought for the exhibitor in this. If picture history proves that it is impossible for any one organization, no matter how strongly fortified, to perpetually hold production supremacy then——

Picture history warns the exhibitor against booking laziness, travelling in a rut, disregarding new alignments, new developments.

Keep your eyes open and—as far as practical—your books open. Watch the market with the same vigilance that you would watch the tape if your bread and butter hung on the pranks of bulls and bears.

This year, above all, these words apply. A cycle has been completed. And you want to look towards next Fall, and at next Fall's promises, with open eyes, clear eyes, sharp eyes.

Judge Going to London

To Manage Advertising and Publicity for First National

Horace C. Judge, for the past three years the assistant to C. L. Yearsley in the advertising and publicity department of First National, sails for London on the Homeric, April 21, to assume the management of the London and British advertising and publicity department.

On returning to his native land, he will be associated with Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of the English branch of First National. His broad experience in motion picture and theatrical activities in this country, combined with a thorough knowledge of English business methods, makes him an ideal man to publicize pictures in England.

He has been an active member of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, of which body he is a director. He resigned the treasurership to take up his present appointment.

Mr. Judge has sold his home in Portchester, N. Y., and will be accompanied by Mrs. Judge when he sails on the Homeric.

Lichtman Returns Soon

Has Made Arrangements for Handling Product Abroad

Al Lichtman reports progress by cable in establishing agencies for the distribution of Preferred Pictures in Europe where he has been traveling for the past six weeks. After a brief stay in London which he made his first stop he continued to the Continent where he has visited all the important capitals arranging for the opening of foreign offices of the Al Lichtman Corporation. A wireless received recently at the home office advises that he sailed March 31 on the Aquitania arriving in New York April 7.

Plans Discussed for Financing National Exhibitor Organization

IN order to discuss a plan for the adequate financing of the national organization a number of exhibitors of the United States from Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, New York, Nebraska, Illinois and Michigan, responding to an invitation from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, gathered at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on Wednesday, March 28.

The meeting, a most harmonious one, lasted for several hours during which time the situation was thoroughly discussed and those present unanimously decided that their personal convictions were that the plan as presented by Michigan should be followed out and recommended that it receive the consideration of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at its coming meeting previous to the National Convention.

Those present were: A. R. Pramer, of Omaha, Neb.; W. A. Steffes, Theo. L. Hays and Clyde Hitchcock, of Minnesota; Gus Schmidt, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Howard Smith, of Buffalo, N. Y.; W. W. Watts, of Springfield, Ill.; Leo Frank and J. J. Reubens, of Chicago, Ill.; Fred Seigert and Joseph Rhode, of Wisconsin, and from Michigan, W. S. McLaren, president; H. M. Richey, general manager; J. R. Denniston, Monroe; J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Claude E. Cady, Lansing; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac, directors; Glenn Cross and Harvey Lipp, of Battle Creek; E. S. Brewer, Owosso. Invitations were extended to other representative exhibitors in other States who found it impossible to be present.

The meeting was opened by W. S. McLaren, president of the Michigan organization, who was also elected permanent chairman. He outlined in a few words the purpose of the meeting. He said that Michigan realized the vital necessity of national organization and that the lack of finances had been a serious handicap. Further, he stated that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss just one thing, and that finances and the devising of ways and means to provide funds for the incoming administration. He also made it plain that at no time during the meeting could personalities or policies enter into the discussion. He then introduced H. M. Richey, general manager of Michigan, who outlined the plan that was later endorsed.

Briefly, the plan as outlined is based on the contention and the realization that the financing of the national organization must be done by the exhibitors in the country who are convinced of the necessity of national organization. It is also based on the conviction that there are 1,000 exhibitors in the United States who will pay a minimum of $100 for the first year to give the national officers something to work with and a chance at least to do the many things that must be done.

It was the intention of those present that the efforts of the meeting be constructive, that they should go back to their respective States to get to Chicago representative exhibitors, who, realizing the vital necessity of national organization, would make the idea a reality.

Before the meeting closed, a resolution was adopted unanimously thanking the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan for taking the initiative for so worthy a purpose even to the extent of stepping outside of the boundaries of their own State to start the ball rolling.

Metro to Release Authentic Film of Wild Animal Life

METRO has concluded to release immediately Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "African Big Game," an authentic motion picture showing wild animals as they exist in their natural state in the jungles and on the plains of the African continent. The celebrated explorers and naturalists recently returned to the United States from British East Africa, bringing with them this unique photoplay.

For two years Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, accompanied by a large number of natives who formed the "safari" or expedition, braved the dangers of deserts and treacherous forests for the purpose of making a photoplay of big game which should be instructively entertaining, and at the same time a historical record. Many of the species caught by their watchful cameras are even now verging toward complete extinction.

Martin Johnson's efforts as a naturalist have received the commendation of Carl E. Akeley of the American Museum of Natural History and other eminent authorities, both in the United States and abroad. His contributions to the literature of wild animal life have given him a prestige which explains to a great extent the widespread interest in his photoplay. "Cannibal-Land" and "Through the South Seas With Jack London" are two of his well known books on travel and animal life.

More than 100,000 feet of film were exposed during the two years spent in British East Africa. Every known kind of wild animal and many which are familiar only to scientists and naturalists were photographed. Of this tremendous footage only six reels have been retained, and the photoplay, which is ready to be released, contains many vivid and exciting scenes of wild animal life, it is reported.

"African Big Game" is the achievement of Mr. Johnson's long-expressed ambition. Several years ago he visited Borneo and other Southern Pacific islands and became interested in native as well as animal life in the South Seas. At that time he determined to prepare data for the African expedition, and his material at last being completed, he set sail for British East Africa two years ago.

Already Mr. Johnson is making arrangements for his next African expedition, to which he will devote five years. His present plans make provision for his headquarters on Lake Paradise, the district around Lake Rudolf, near the Abyssinnian border. This region is called by Mr. Johnson the most perfect spot he has ever visited, and he intends to spend a good deal of time in its vicinity.

Double Bill Policy Menacing New England's Industry

Keen Competition Is Eliminating Margin of Profit

By ROGER FERRI

UNLESS the double bill policy that is now menacing the exhibition field in New England is eliminated during the next six months the motion picture industry there will be in a sad way. While exhibitors there generally concede the impracticability of continuing this policy and securing a substantial profit on their investments, the fact remains that the past few weeks have uncovered a situation unparalleled in this country, for competition in certain New England spots has been so decidedly keen and the productions booked on the same bill so superlative that those with less attractive product have booked three-feature bills.

A careful survey of conditions in New England has been made by Moving Picture World. Representative exhibitors have been interviewed on the situation and the clocking system resorted to in an effort to obtain a fair comparative estimate of business as attracted by the double feature policy. This survey also has been productive of data relative to overhead expenses as compared with maximum grosses and the conclusion drawn that while houses may be jammed the attendance means nothing financially, for under present conditions neither exhibitor nor exchangeman can profit at the first run house unless, of course, the theatres play to capacity every day in three of the four weeks in every month at least.

New England first run theatres constitute one group that are not complaining about high film rentals, for in comparison with what the same productions are getting in other territories, New Englanders have no kick coming. Neither has the public. The exhibitors are victims of circumstances, while the truly big losers in the long run will be the distributors, who, if present conditions are allowed to prevail, will find it next to impossible to earn their quota of production-distribution cost on any worth-while picture.

The Lenten season, indeed, has contributed nothing that suggested a solution of the problem. Under present conditions there is one indication and that is that the motion picture industry in 1923-24 will not be able to turn out enough productions to satisfy the exhibitor demand. This prediction, of course, is made with a continuation of the double bill policy in mind.

The average gross business of first run houses in key cities in New England (these include Boston, Providence, Worcester, Portland, Augusta, Manchester, Burlington, Springfield, New Haven, Hartford and Bridgeport) is about $3,500. The average house overhead is estimated at about $1,400 weekly, including salaries, but not advertising, exploitation and incidental expenses which runs the "nut" up to about $2,000. The average first run house bill includes two features, a comedy, news weekly or cartoon. The average rental of two features, a first rater and a second rater, runs about $1,300 for the week. These figures exclude orchestras, which a comparatively few houses maintain. It can be seen, therefore, that the average expense is approximately $3,200, which must be collected at the door before the exhibitor starts figuring at all on the profit. Taking $3,500 as the average gross takings against $3,200, it will be seen that the exhibitor makes an average profit of $200.

From these figures the reader need not stretch his imagination to perceive the reason why there were so many motion picture houses in New England that were forced out of business last season, for the first run house average is the gauge for the second, third and fourth run houses, though as a matter of fact the best money-makers in New England to-day are seemingly the third and fourth run houses. Two weeks of capacity average business and two poor weeks in the average month, it can be seen, would make the exhibitor a heavy loser. For every week of poor business he must have three of capacity if he is to come out from under. That's under current conditions.

Boston, New England's metropolis, is not the first run city in that territory. In fact, with the exception of Loew's State and the Park, Boston boasts of no first run houses. The Park is distinctly an exploitation house for productions in the New England distribution of which the Jake Lourie interests are concerned. The State is located in the exclusive Back Bay section of the Hub and shows two features weekly.

Drastic Censorship

The State Senate, in session at Columbus, Ohio, took action March 29 looking toward the tightening of censorship laws on moving pictures.

Distributors who deliver to exhibitors uncensored films, or films that do not bear the "leader" noting that they have been inspected, or which contain any matter that has been eliminated by the Board of Censors, would be liable to fines of from $300 to $500 for the first offense, and $500 to $1,000 for subsequent offenses, under the bill of Representative J. H. T. Gordon, the ministerial senator from Logan County, which bill passed the Senate March 30.

The Gordon measure, which has already passed the House, also would bring the violations into the class of misdemeanors, instead of felonies, to leave the case up to the court officials for decision, no provisions being made for jury trials.

Situation Unchanged

The censorship situation remains unchanged in New York State. There have been no new developments at Albany during the past week. While there was some talk that the bill might be reported out of committee adversely in the Assembly, no action was taken one way or another. The Assembly committee apparently intends to remain stubborn and permit the bill to die in committee.

It is now thought that the present session of the Legislature will conclude its efforts on or about April 28, leaving less than four weeks to go. While the censorship repeal measure has been passed in the Senate by a vote of 27 to 22, it will probably not go to a vote in the Assembly much before the closing week of the session. With the introduction of many statewide measures of importance, the censorship repeal bill has seemingly been engulfed for the present at least, and little or no talk on censorship is heard at the State Capitol these days.

Providence, the second largest municipality in New England, is really the first run city in New England. Boston theatres are controlled by circuits which dictate their own rental terms. There it is a case of take it or leave it. Big productions seeking a break must necessarily assent to percentage deals or seek a home in the Tremont Temple, which has been reaping a harvest at the expense of motion picture producers. A run in Boston, however, means nothing in the lives of the picture public in other parts of New England.

As a matter of fact, the day of the $1.50 and $2 top admissions for motion pictures in New England are gone. That fact has been substantiated time and again this season. The only big picture that played in Boston at $1.50 to a consistent profit for any length of time (14 weeks) was "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." This special has made picture history in New England. About five weeks ago it was booked at Edward Albee's Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., at 55 cents top. The picture drew amazingly large crowds, grossing about $8,000 for the week, a record for the house. The demand was so great the management held it over for a second week and grossed about $1,000 less at the augmented prices.

Previously Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" had played to a week of capacity business at the Victory Theatre. Last week the New York Albee picture booking offices in an effort to offset the stiff opposition bills arranged by other houses brought back "Robin Hood" and "Tess of the Storm Country" to the Victory Theatre on the same bill. The top admission was 35 cents, 20 cents less than the top when the pictures were first shown there. In addition to these two productions, the house also showed a two-reel comedy, the bill including something like 26 reels of film—and at 35 cents top. But one of those indescribable turns in showdom took the management by storm, for the public refused to respond to this unusual bargain, despite the fact that there seemingly was a demand for the features—and "Robin Hood" and "Tess" had to be pulled off on Wednesday, after having played two days to virtual empty houses. "Super Sex" and a Dick Talmadge picture were substituted and finished the week out. Incidently the week returned the poorest gross that house has ever recorded.

The opposition that forced Arthur G. Whyte, who books the Victory Theatre for the Albee interests, to arrange the above return engagement constituted treble bills at all the houses, excepting the Emery-Majestic, which opened Saturday afternoon with a double bill, Mae Murray in "Jazzmania" and an all-star cast in "The Famous Mrs. Fair." Insofar as Holy Week was concerned none of the houses came out winners by any worthwhile amount.

This week the situation, coming as it does at the outset of the final third of the 1923-24 season, is particularly gloomy financially insofar as the interests of the picture industry at large are concerned. In the first place the Victory Theatre is bringing back Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Modern Marriage" to the screen, the pair making personal appearances in conjunction with the showing. The prices have been raised to 55 cents top and at the current figure the house this week can do not more than $8,200 wtih capacity at every show. The Bushman-Bayne appearance and picture showing is a percentage proposition. The house has furnished a second feature. Through a good turn of luck, the Bushman-Bayne turn will profit also by the inauguration of the new organ recital, Providence being a plugger for music. With a top gross of $8,200, which would better the "Robin Hood" record by $200, the house should show a profit of about $4,000, which will be the biggest profit this house has ever had. For this showing the Albee interests and the Bushman-Bayne combination will have Harry Crull and Matt Reilley to thank, for they alone were responsible for the excellent exploitation campaign that was conducted all last week. They interested official Providence, arranged a luncheon to the stars and otherwise negotiated business-getting tieups.

The Emery-Majestic got away to a flying start on Saturday. The Emery Brothers combination, through the efforts of Bill Mahoney and Martin Tuohey, managers of the Rialto and Emery theatres, respectively, who look after the picture booking for the new house, with the splendid Saturday start (the day grossing about $1,600) the Emery-Majestic this week should run up its figures on its first week to $14,000 or $15,000, although the house even at 35 cents can do a couple of thousand dollars more than the latter figure. "Jazzmania" and "The Famous Mrs. Fair" are the offerings on a bill that also includes a comedy and organ recital that consumes about twenty-two minutes. The show runs 3 hours.

The Strand can gross between $7,000 and $8,000 on a capacity week, while the Modern can do about $2,500 less on a big week. Each shows double features. An example of the bills shown at this house can be gleamed from the attractions playing there this week. At the Strand Norma Talmadge, Providence's best drawing star, appears in "The Voice From Minaret," with "Money, Money, Money." At the Modern Theatre two first rate Paramount pictures are on the bill. The Rialto can gross about $5,000 on a turnaway week and has done that on "Lying Lips," which holds the house record. This house shows double bills too. An example of the bills shown at this house can be obtained from a recent booking which had Buster Keaton special comedy, "The Toll of the Sea" and "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Eddie Fay's theatre is a gold mine. For 35 cents top he gives his patrons six acts of good vaudeville, a feature attraction booked out of the Film Booking Offices, Vitagraph and independent exchanges in Boston, a two-reel comedy and a news weekly. The Emery Theatre shows six acts of Loew vaudeville, a feature usually an outdoor and a news weekly. And the top here, also, is 35 cents.

With the Emery-Majestic Theatre added to the first-run list, Providence first-run picture demand is seemingly greater than the supply. Here is what Providence's first-run houses will need next season:

Emery-Majestic	104
Modern	104
Strand	104
Rialto	104
Victory	104
Emery	104
Fays	52
Total needed 1923-24	676

The Emery Brothers interests will need 312 productions in their Providence houses, the Majestic, Rialto and Emery. Last week they acquired the Le Roy in Pawtucket, R. I., where 104 more pictures will be required raising the number to 416 pictures. The Modern-Strand interests will need 208. The Albee interests in Providence (Victory), Pawtucket (Bijou and Music Hall) and Woonsocket (Park) will need about 300 first-run pictures.

One evil the double feature has brought among exhibitors in New England is the elimination of the independent exhibitor. The tendency now is to circuitize the houses. The Black interests introduced the double feature policy in New England, but even with the breaking up of the Black combination the policy has remained and is today more menacing than ever to the industry at large.

I. W. Rodgers Elected President New Division Missouri M. P. T. O.

THE final step in splitting Missouri into two divisions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners was taken on March 27 at the Elks' Club, St. Louis, when the organization convention of the Eastern Missouri division elected I. W. Rodgers popular Poplar Bluff, Mo., and Cairo, Ill., showman, as its first permanent president. Prior to that time Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis exhibitor organization and a national vice-president, was acting president of the division.

The decision to sub-divide the state was reached at the last convention of the Missouri exhibitors. National President Sydney Cohen attended that gathering, as did other national officers, and it was pointed out to them that the fact that Missouri exhibitors do not all purchase their film in one city worked to the disadvantage of a joint organization for the entire state.

It was suggested that the state be divided into two sections, with Moberly, Mo., as the dividing line, the eastern half to have its headquarters in St. Louis and the western half at Kansas City. When he returned to New York Cohen granted the necessary franchise to the eastern section.

At the opening of the organization convention Joseph Mogler, who acted as temporary chairman, explained the aims and purposes of the new body and why it had come into being. The election of permanent officers was almost the first business taken up by the gathering. After that matter had been disposed of, a generous repast was enjoyed in the Elks' Club rathskeller by the sixty odd exhibitors present.

At the afternoon session several important resolutions were discussed and adopted. One placed the organization on record as absolutely opposed to the present deposit system, and the national body was urged to work for the repeal of the existing deposit rules. The music tax also came in for considerable attention, and the body voted that all its members should refuse the use of their theatres to all singers who boost songs affiliated with the Society of Authors and Composers. The tax was declared unfair, and all exhibitors were urged to work for legislation designed to eliminate this evil. A third resolution favored the repeal of the federal excise tax on all theatre admissions under 50 cents.

The other officers elected by the new body were: First vice-president, J. F. Rees, Wellsville; second vice-president, Charles Goodnight, De Soto; third vice-president, J. E. Smith, Eureka; fourth vice-president, Mrs. M. J. Moore, St. Charles; fifth vice-president, R. Stemple, St. Charles; treasurer, Fred W. Wehrenberg, Melba and Cherokee Theatres, St. Louis; secretary, L. C. Hehl, Woodland Theatre, St. Louis; sergeant-at-arms, Charles Warner, Queens Theatre, St. Louis.

Executive committee: The president, five vice-presidents, secretary and treasurer, and Spyros Skouras, Skouras Brothers' Enterprises, St. Louis; W. O. Reeves, Eighteenth Street Theatre, St. Louis; Tommy James, Comet Theatre, St. Louis; Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, Delmar, Criterion and Congress Theatres, St. Louis; W. A. Boyd, Louisiana; Jack Truitt, Moberly; Joe Mogler, Mogler and Bremen theatres, St. Louis; Oscar Lehr, Family, Peerless and New Broadway theatres, St. Louis.

The following were named as delegates to the national convention to be held in Chicago in May: Joe Mogler, Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, Oscar Lehr, F. E. Hoelzer, L. C. Hehl, Fred W. Wehrenberg, and Spyros Skouras, all of St. Louis, and President I. W. Rodgers. Alternates: Mike Nash, Mrs. William Young and W. O. Reeves, of St. Louis; A. C. Norwein, Bonne Terre; R. Stemple, St. Charles; Charles Goodnight, De Soto; J. R. Pratt, Fulton, and Jack Truitt, Moberly.

It was decided to have the body meet at least once each year for the discussion of problems confronting the exhibition of motion pictures. However, the executive committee will gather every month.

Appropriate for Easter

"The Stream of Life" Proves its Unlessened Emotional Power

During the two weeks prior to Easter, "The Stream of Life" was shown every day at the noon hour at the Colonial Theatre. The remarkable character of the picture which is in six reels proved again that its entertainment power is still great.

There was no doubt but that the inspired story has lost nothing, despite the fact that the production, obviously, is not new. In this case superficial evidences of age, such as the old fashions in women's clothes, count for nothing. The theme is superior to all that. It carries a profound appeal that is especially significant for the Lenten season.

"The Stream of Life" is a sermon without preachment. It confines itself strictly to ordinary facts, showing the life of a man—any man—in its various stages of physical, social and spiritual development. It is so real that almost any one who sees it will be reminded of his own experiences. There are moments of the bitterest tragedy and of the most sublime faith. Mother love plays an affecting part. The story is told simply, with the best of taste. Its emotional force is unquestioned, as any one would realize after seeing the Colonial audiences respond to it. James K. Shields is the author of the story and the film is in the hands of the Plymouth Film Corporation, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City.

Selznick Doubles Force

As an initial step in the promulgation of its declared policy of confining its activities to distribution only the reorganized Selznick Corporation announces that in the past few days it has doubled its selling force and is now prepared to take on any meritorious product seeking a medium of distribution.

Universal Gets Three

More Popular Stars Added to Capable List

Three popular stars have just been engaged for Universal feature productions, the Universal home office announces. They are Roy Stewart, William Desmond and Jack Hoxie. Stewart and Desmond have been playing in Universal serials and short features for several months. Hoxie, who is a Western star, is a newcomer to the Universal lot. His recent productions have been with Arrow.

This addition gives Universal a full complement of six stars for the Universal attraction schedule of five-reel features. The other three are Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson and Herbert Rawlinson, who have been making Universal features for many months.

Roy Stewart already has started work on his first Universal five-reeler, "Burning Words." Stuart Paton is directing.

Desmond's first five-reel feature will probably be "The Sky-Line of Spruce," a north woods story by Edison Marshall. Jack Hoxie's first Universal picture will probably be "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande."

To Ban Annoyances

Iowa legislators may act to protect theatre audiences from bad smelling contrivances such as were used with serious consequences during a labor war in Council Bluffs several months ago. A bill directed at such contrivances was introduced in the Iowa Senate March 31 by the Committee on Public Health, having been drafted in the office of the Attorney General at the request of Senator Baird of Council Bluffs.

The new Senate bill would fix a penalty ranging from a year in jail or $1,000 fine to three years in the penitentiary for conviction of such an offense.

Watching Legislature

O'Reilly and Berman Safeguarding M. P. T. O. Interests

Accompanied by Samuel I. Berman, secretary of the organization, Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, arrived at the State Capitol in Albany last Monday night, and will be more or less in the legislative corridors from now until the session closes, watching the bills in which the motion picture industry is interested. The two men occupied seats on the floor of the Senate Monday night, and watched with interest the proceedings being enacted by the Upper House.

Mr. O'Reilly stated that he was interested principally in two bills, the one calling for the repeal of the present censorship law in New York State, and the one which seeks to impose a 6 per cent. tax on the gross receipts of many forms of amusements, including the motion picture theatre.

L. A. DeHoff Improving

Louis A. DeHoff, booking manager for the Combined Whitehurst Interests, operating the Century, New, Parkway, Garden and Peabody Theatres, Baltimore, has been ill with the sleeping sickness for a number of days. He is now improving a little and it is thought that the crisis is passed. Mr. DeHoff is one of the best known film men in Baltimore.

Wm. A. Dickey Dead

William A. Dickey, father-in-law of Bernard Depkin, Jr., well-known moving picture exhibitor of Baltimore, who is manager of the Boulevard and entertainment director of the Metropolitan, died at his home in Guiford, Baltimore, Md., on Monday morning, April 2, from heart disease.

Ince to Direct Personally One Special a Year for First National

NEWS comes from the Thomas H. Ince studios that Mr. Ince has decided that he will direct personally one big special production each year. This announcement closely follows word of a renewal of his distribution affiliation with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the season of 1923-1924 and includes advices that the First Thomas H. Ince personally directed production will be made for release by First National.

For the coming season the Ince production schedule provides for only four or six pictures, whereas in the past the Ince organization has produced from twice to three times as many each season. This reduction of the schedule makes it possible for the producer himself to direct at least one picture a year and supervise the balance of his pictures.

"I am definitely committed to make the biggest pictures possible and I have cut my production schedule to a point where I can not only give each picture produced by my studios more of my individual attention, but where I can direct one picture a year," said Mr. Ince.

Simultaneously with the announcement that Ince would produce one personally directed picture came detailed news of the Ince production schedule. It includes four specials.

"Country Lanes and City Pavements," written by John Fleming Wilson, author of "The Man Who Came Back" and other big successes. Mr. Ince will himself direct this picture. The continuity will be by Bradley King. Madge Bellamy and an all-star cast will be seen.

"Her Reputation," by Bradley King and Talbot Mundy, featuring May MacAvoy and an all-star cast. John Griffith Wray will direct this production under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince. "Her Reputation" is a powerful story based on newspaper life.

"The Just and the Unjust," from the popular novel by Vaughan Kester. Directed by John Griffith Wray, under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince. All-star cast. This is a novelty drama, big in heart interest and gripping in action.

"Unguarded Gates," with Madge Bellamy in her first great starring picture. This is an unusually strong story of a girl of the new generation.

In explaining his decision to again appear as a working director, Mr. Ince said:

"First of all, the story of "Country Lanes and City Pavements" made a tremendous appeal to me. There is much work at Culver City—supervisory work, detail work; but I decided to become a director again just for one picture a year. So I am going to take hold of it and put everything I have into it.

"In the motion picture we have a medium which is adequate to the fullest reproduction of any story that can be conceived by the mind of man; but the medium itself is no good to anybody unless through it there is told a story which grips our interest and holds it. And the only kind of story which can do that is a story which deals with the struggles and triumphs and hopes and fears of human beings; of men and women of whom, when we see them presented on the screen, we can say: 'I know people who are like that.' Herein lies the mission of the director who aims at success; to hold the mirror of life up to the screen and to have it reflect true life back to the public."

Kansas M. P. T. O. to Hold Convention on April 16-17

PLANS for the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas to be held at the Broadview Hotel in Wichita, Kan., Monday and Tuesday, April 16 and 17, are rapidly nearing completion. It is thought that the largest crowd that ever attended a convention of the Kansas organization will be on hand.

There will be many exhibitors there who have never attended a convention before, because they did not take an interest in the organization. But now that the music tax people are bringing suit against so many small town exhibitors, a new interest in the affairs of the organization has sprung up.

Sam Handy, attorney for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, will be at the convention in order to explain the music tax situation. Other prominent men also will be there.

Among the subjects which will be discussed will be the new uniform contract, the music tax problem, new distributing organization plan, present film rentals, joint board of arbitration activities, review of recent legislative work, appointment of delegates and alternates to the National Convention, appointment of committees for the ensuing year and election of officers for the ensuing year.

Vignola Visits Tomb

Robert G. Vignola, the director, who is now homeward bound from a five months' tour of the world, has been accorded the signal privilege of inspecting Pharaoh Tutankhamen's tomb and of taking photographs of the relics, according to advices received by Arthur M. Brilant, his personal representative in New York.

In his letter Mr. Vignola declares that the knowledge he has gained from his tour of Tutankhamen's tomb will stand him in good stead in his future productions. He is expected in New York early in May.

Many Films Stolen

The stealing of film continues in Albany, N. Y., and has reached such proportions as to attract the attention of the police. A seven-reel feature, "Silas Marner," owned by the Pathe exchange in Albany, was stolen from a light delivery truck in the neighboring city of Troy last week, while the driver of the truck was spending a few minutes in a restaurant. The film had been picked up but a short time before at the Lincoln Theatre. Frank Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange in Albany, believes that the thefts are due to boys who have home machines.

Many losses of one and two-reel films have also been reported through trolley shipments made out of Albany, to theatres in neighboring villages reached by interurban service. At least one film exchange in Albany decided the past week to ship no more unaccompanied film by trolley. Of late it has been a common practice for exhibitors in nearby places to phone the exchanges in Albany, with a request that this or that film be sent out to them by trolley. Conductors have refused to sign for the film, and in many cases it has never reached the destination.

Schulberg Entertained

Friends Welcome Him Back to New York

More than one hundred friends of B. P. Schulberg, representing every branch of the film industry, gathered in the Crystal Room of the Ritz Carlton Tuesday, March 27, to welcome him back to New York. Mr. Schulberg has been away from Manhattan for more than a year.

Among those present were J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred Pictures and of the Al Lichtman Corporation; Harry Reichenbach, toastmaster; Dr. A. H. Giannini, film banker; Bobby North, Roy L. McCardell, the Morning Telegraph's humorist; S. L. Rothafel, S. Jay Kaufman, of the Globe, and Rube Goldberg, the cartoonist.

All Can Be Sued

Court Holds Those Named in Litigation Must Answer

All persons connected with the construction and operation of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Washington, D. C., the roof of which collapsed on January 29, 1922, who are named in suits for damages brought by those injured or the legal representatives of those killed in the accident, can be sued, according to a ruling of Justice Hoehling of the District Supreme Court.

The ruling of Justice Hoehling overruled motions of Reginald W. Geare, architect, John H. Ford and the Union Iron Works to dismiss the suit which has been filed, in which they are named. The court held that the declaration stated cause of action to which all the defendants must plead.

Five Candidates Likely to Compete for Presidency of the M. P. T. O. A.

THE exhibitor convention season is on in full swing and will continue until after the national convention has been held in Chicago early in May. With meetings held this week in Arkansas, Kansas City and Omaha, the month was ushered in auspiciously. During the next six weeks something like a dozen conventions will be held.

However, these conventions, according to schedule already announced, will be purely local and devoid of the pyrotechnic displays that marred the sessions last year. Nevertheless, the spotlight—as last year—will be focussed on the doings in New York State. That organization openly rebelled against the M. P. T. O. A. last year, going so far as to threaten a national confederation. That was the expressed intentions of the leaders of that movement.

New Eastern Unit?

A year, though, has brought innumerable changes even in exhibitor minds of New York, apparently, for it is now believed that when the exhibitor convention is held in Buffalo on May 8, 9 and 10 a new M. P. T. O. unit that will embrace most of those who constituted the New York confederacy will be officially recognized. This means that the Empire State, contrary to reports, will have its usual quota of representatives at the national convention in Chicago next month.

There will be at least five candidates for the presidency of the M. P. T. O. A. Bill Steffes, head of the Minnesota exhibitors, has been a candidate for two years. He was ready to be shoved into the battle as compromise candidate last year if any serious opposition developed against Cohen as a consequence of the New York resurrection. However, this move was unnecessary and Bill had to sit back and look forward to another year.

Steffes Active Candidate

This year, however, Bill Steffes is very much in the fight. He is already busy with his campaign in the Northwest and there is very little doubt that he will succeed Cohen if the latter does not run again. However, Steffes will have no easy time, for there are a number of candidates bobbing up and each will carry strong supporters. New England may have two nominees for that office. They are William A. True of Hartford, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, and Edward Fay, one of the most picturesque figures in the business and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Rhode Island.

Until this week very little had been heard concerning the plans of Mr. Fay, who has been a staunch supporter of Cohen ever since the inception of the M. P. T. O. A. This week his friends have stepped forward with his name and it is certain that, in view of the fact that Mr. True's time is largely taken up with the national exhibitor-distribution plan, the Connecticut man will bow to his fellow-Yankee in a presidential race.

Mr. Fay ranks as one of the most popular and best known exhibitors in New England. He is a self-made man and has built up a business that is the envy of no few in his respective territories, for he also operates money-making picture houses in New York City, Philadelphia and Rochester. As executive of the Little Rhody organization he has succeeded in having the Legislature there defeat every bill detrimental to show business and indications now are that as the result of the exhibitors' efforts there Rhode Island may next season enjoy Sunday movies. Under Fay's leadership, the censorship movement was defeated so decisively reformers there have not even dared mention the subject.

Joseph Mogler, of St. Louis, also has been mentioned as a candidate. One thing seems certain, in so far as the exhibitors throughout the country are concerned, and that is that the next president of the M. P. T. O. A. will not be recruited from the ranks of metropolitan exhibitors. There has been some talk about the position having been offered to several big exhibitors, but this is all rot as there is no person or representative committee in the M. P. T. O. A. empowered with the right to make any such proposition to any individual or set of individuals.

Conventions Due

The exhibitor conventions scheduled are as follows:

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota, Minneapolis, April 10, 11 and 12. At this meeting President Steffes is expected to officially announce his candidacy and platform for the presidency of the M. P. T. O. A.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, Wichita, Kans., April 16 and 17.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Illinois, Chicago, April 18 and 19.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Buffalo, May 8, 9 and 10.

A. M. P. A. Holds Meeting

Well Known Men of the Industry Make Speeches

At the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held on Thursday, March 29, a regular all-star cast was presented. Professor James Melvin Lee, director of the School of Journalism at New York University, was billed as the leading attraction of the day.

Vice-president Shapiro was in the chair and among the many who responded to his introductions were George E. Redman of London, "Danny" of the Film Daily, Jack Bachman of the Al Lichtman Corporation and Ben Schulberg of Preferred Pictures.

So glad were the boys to see Mr. Schulberg back amongst them that they elected him an honorary member of the organization. He used to be a press agent himself and was one of the founders of the A. M. P. A.

"Danny" told of the hard job ahead of exploitation men to get back the big money that is being spent in production on the coast. Mr. Schulberg said that the picture need not appear quite so dark; that the money on the average was being well spent and would come back with a profit to boot; that actors were not being paid more than they deserve.

Professor Lee spoke principally about newspapers and the way schools of journalism are helping to train newspaper men, including motion picture critics.

Officers Elected

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California held their annual election of officers at Los Angeles, April 3, and named Fred Miller, of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, president.

The voting was by acclamation, and an enthusiastic demonstration greeted the naming of each officer. Others elected were W. W. Whitson, San Diego, and James Sams, Ocean Park, vice presidents; Glenn Harper, Vermont Theatre, Los Angeles, secretary; Ben Bernstein, Savoy Theatre, Los Angeles, treasurer; C. E. Walker, Santa Ana; D. D. Vanderlip, Inglewood; H. J. Siler, Whittier, and Harry C Arthur, West Coast Theatre, directors.

The organization is in a healthy condition and promises to eclipse all previous records for beneficial accomplishments.

Jakob Karol Bringing German Made Pictures for Distribution Here

Jakob Karol, president of the Jakob Karol Film Company, of Berlin, Germany, is coming to America in April to arrange with American organizations for the distribution of several of the Karol company's productions.

Several of them feature Maciste, who, several years ago made such a vivid impression by his portrayal of the slave in the great production, "Cabiria." The new pictures to be distributed are "Maciste and the Javanese Girl," "Maciste and the Daughter of the Silver King," "Maciste and the Prisoner of No. 51," "and "Maciste and the Chinese Trunk."

Others to be put on the American market are "The Last Sensation of the Circus Farini," and "The Tiger of the Circus Farini."

Universal Acquires H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa"

UNIVERSAL has obtained the world's rights to H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera." The production will be released as a Universal picture, word comes from Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

Despite the fact that this picture is particularly suited to road showing, Laemmle announces that the production will be released unconditionally to exhibitors immediately.

Laemmle, who now is on his way East from the Coast, especially to superintend the launching of the picture, has broadcasted a call to all parts of the country for booking propositions on first runs for it.

Although this call has been out only a few days, the office of Art Schmidt, general sales manager for Universal, is swamped with queries. A number of important first runs are on the point of being closed.

The picture has just completed a run of eleven weeks in the Lyric Theatre, New York City, at $1.65 top. Its next screening will be in the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia, where it will open within a week or so for an indefinite run. The Forrest is one of the finest legitimate houses in the Quaker City, and in arranging for its run there Universal has assured adequate exploitation of the picture for the exhibitors of the Philadelphia territory, including Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania.

Laemmle's decision to release the African picture through the regular Universal exchange channels followed an extended conference of the Universal sales cabinet.

The entire publicity, advertising and exploitation departments of the Universal organization have concentrated on "Hunting Big Game in African." The Universal Laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J., is working twenty-four hours a day on the prints, and it is expected that the picture will be on its way to every Universal exchange within the next week.

Emergency press sheets, paper and other accessories are now coming off the press for immediate use. These will be followed shortly by more extensive material. The emergency publicity, advertising and exploitation material went to press less than forty-eight hours after the purchase contract had been signed.

The African film is a thrilling and an amusing narrative of the thrilling adventures undertaken by white men.

Wants Sunday Closing

Efforts are being made by churches in Washington, D. C., to have moving picture theatres closed on Sunday, the first step in this regard having been taken at a conference between the board of directors of the Chevy Chase Theatre and leading church members of that community, a suburb of Washington. It was urged by the church members that the theatre close on Sunday, and an attempt was made to show that it would make more money in six days than in seven, since, if open on Sunday, it would have the opposition of all members of the churches. It is claimed the opposition numbers between 1,600 and 1,700 persons, and while it is asserted that no boycott is contemplated, it was intimated that attendance at the theatre would be reduced materially if it was kept open on Sunday. The theatre as yet has not announced its decision.

Hayes Leaves M. P. P. & D.

Arthur Kroch Takes Charge of Public Relations Work

Ralph Hayes, who has been prominently connected with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., handling principally the organization's affairs in connection with public relations, has resigned to go into the banking business in Cleveland, Ohio. Before taking up his banking duties Mr. Hayes will spend some time abroad.

Arthur Kroch, formerly managing editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, will succeed Mr. Hayes. Mr. Kroch arrived at the organization's headquarters Wednesday.

A farewell reception was tendered Mr. Hayes Saturday, March 31, by the force of the M. P. P. and D. and he was presented with several valuable tokens of esteem. He has made many friends during his term of service with Will H. Hays, and they regret his departure.

Favors Censorship

The Rev. O. R. Miller, one of the so-called reformers of New York State, who has led the fight for motion picture censorship in times past, is fully as active at Albany these days in an attempt to defeat the censorship repeal bill.

Mr. Miller is carrying his campaign to the newspapers, seeking their support.

"An evil story in a film is a hundred times more dangerous than in a newspaper," says the Rev. O. R. Miller. "Why should editors be fooled and frightened by the absurd movie argument that if the movies are regulated by an effective law, newspapers will soon be censored? The press is protected from censorship by the Federal and State constitutions; the movies are not."

Luncheon to Hugo

Will Include Announcement of Plans for All Schools

Plans for putting educational pictures into every school-house in the country are announced by Francis M. Hugo, recently elected director-general of the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc.

Mr. Hugo stated that the organization which he represents has decided to furnish projectors to the schools on a basis within reach. Also films of a historical, religious, biographical and scientific character can be supplied at a nominal expense.

A luncheon will introduce Mr. Hugo and his plans on Wednesday, April 11, at the Biltmore to representatives of organizations interested. This will be held at one o'clock, the reception to be at 12:30, under the auspices of the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc.

Solve This Puzzle

The Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., established a house record for two weeks with "Robin Hood" at 55 cents top, 20 cents more than the usual top admission. Previously "Tess of the Storm Country" did splendid business at that house, hundreds being turned away nightly.

So last week, Holy Week, the management decided to bring both pictures back to the Victory—and on the same bill at regular prices! This double engagement of these remarkable productions surprised showmen in the town, but for some reason or other the pictures failed to draw and they were pulled out, "Super Sex" and a Richard Talmadge picture being substituted.

was splendidly arranged by Harry Crull, Rhode Island director general of the Edward F. Albee theatrical enterprises, and Matt Reilley, manager of the Victory Theatre, included the following: Mayor Joseph H. Gainer of Providence; Edward M. Fay, owner of Fay's Theatre and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Rhode Island; Senator Hartford, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Francis X. Bushman; Timothy J. Dwyer, publisher of the Providence Evening Tribune; Martin J. Flaherty, city editor of the Providence Evening Tribune; Miss Alice Higgins of Providence; Miss Mary Higgins of Providence; Miss Zita Moulton and Roland Bottomley of the Bushman-Bayne company; Roger Ferri, Moving Picture World; Fred Lovett of the Royal Theatre, Olneyville, R. I.; Manager Reardon of the Boston exchange of American Releasing Corporation; the popular Fred Mack, better known as "The Lookout" of the Providence News, and Mrs. Dyer, owner of the Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I.

There is some talk hereabouts to the effect that Walter Lederer, Providence's wealthiest real estate owner and proprietor of the Arcadia, a dancing pavilion, will build a theatre to house legitimate attractions in Providence, R. I.

Manager Isaaco of La Sirena Theatre, Providence, R. I., catering to an Italian clientele, is featuring foreign-made productions twice weekly and reaping a harvest from his efforts.

One of the most popular and successful exhibitors in New England is Martin Tuohey of the Emery Theatre. He has literally grown up with show business in Providence, having made his bow as comedian for the old Homan Stock Company at the Scenic Theatre, now the Rialto.

Sol Braunig of the Modern Theatre and Ed Reid of the Strand Theatre this past week bought page advertisements in the local newspapers advertising future attractions at those houses.

Take no other. Your publication is all we want.—Athens Show Shop, New Bern, No. Car.

Connecticut

Peter W. Murphy has resigned as manager of the Strand Theatre in Waterbury. He has been engaged in various capacities in the Poli theatres for 15 years. Morris Rosenthal succeeds Mr. Murphy.

Abe Davidson of Norwich has purchased land in Main Street, Willimantic, on which he will erect a picture theatre. Construction work will be started soon. The structure will be of brick with a frontage of 92 feet. The theatre will seat 1,200. Most of the seats will be on the main floor. There will be four stores in the front and the lobby probabily will be in the center.

A. J. Collins, manager of the Empress Theatre in Danbury, has recovered from his recent serious illness, caused by a disorder of the stomach.

Parsons' Theatre, Hartford, was 27 years old April 1 and in a newspaper story concerning the anniversary mention was made of one of the oldtime picture programs, which should prove of interest to exhibitors. Parsons' was opened April 1, 1896. During the week of May 25 in that year an Edison Vitascope program was presented. The pictures were short reels showing Herald Square, New York City; a dance by Cissie Fitzgerald, a vaudeville star, famed for her wink; "The Rescue," showing a burning building with horse-drawn apparatus and firemen responding to an alarm. Of the films the Hartford Times' review said: "The Vitascope pictures are thrown upon a screen, the figures being life-size. The motion is true to life and the change of color natural. The photographs move before the eye at the rate of forty in each second, giving the sense of continual motion to the figures."

The bill which allows minors to attend picture shows when accompanied by an adult person has passed the House. The measure differs from the present law, in that it does not require that the adult person shall have the authorization of the parent or guardian and relieves the theatre manager of trying to find out in each instance the status of the adult accompanying the child. The bill follows:

Section 1—Any person owning, keeping or managing, wholly or in part, any moving picture theatre, who shall allow, at any time, any child under the age of 14 years, or after 6 o'clock in the afternoon of any day, any girl under the age of 14 years, to be admitted or to remain in such place, unless such child is accompanied by its parent or guardian or some adult person, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars.

Section 2—So much of section 6435 of the general statutes as is inconsistent herewith is repealed.

In connection with this bill the House also has passed House bill No. 686, providing that owners or managers of picture theatres who shall admit children under the age of 14 years or girls under the age of 16 years, unless accompanied by parent or guardian or some adult person, shall be fined not more than $50.

Harry Browning, manager of the Grand Theatre in Middletown, was given a handsome Elk's watch charm by employes and a few personal friends on March 31. William Lippus, director of the Grand orchestra, made the presentation. The gift came as a complete surprise to Manager Browning.

Moulton's Toy

George W. Moulton, manager of the Dreamland Theatre, Livermore Falls, Me., is the owner of a curious toy—if it can be called a toy. It is an ivory hand exquisitely carved, and was given to him by a professional magician who acquired it in India. When placed on a table and a question is asked it will rap—once, signifying "no"; twice, "yes"; three raps, "don't know" or "doubtful."

The ivory hand predicted in advance the acquittal of a woman who was on trial on a charge of murder.

Maine

Daniel D. Leader, formerly of Lewiston, a pioneer in the picture business in Maine, died March 28 in his home in Waterville after an illness of only three days. He was 50 years old. In 1905 he became manager of the Empire Theatre in Lewiston. Subsequently he became the first president of Maine Theatrical Managers Producing Association and at the time of his death he was vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Maine.

In 1906 Mr. Leader established the first picture theatre in Rumford. He went to Portland in 1913 and there supervised the building of the Empire Theatre and became manager. He also was manager of the Old Portland and Greeley theatres in Portland. At one time Mr. Leader was manager of the Star Theatre in Westbrook.

About five years ago he was manager of the Empire Theatre in Salem, Mass. At his death he was manager of Waterville Opera House. Mr. Leader is survived by his wife, two sons and two daughters. The funeral was held March 31.

The Church Federation of Portland is highly pleased with the success of the Holy Week services conducted daily in Keith's Theatre. Manager Hamilton received much praise for his care in arranging incidental details.

Tremont Amusement Company of Bangor, Me., has incorporated for $10,000; all common; directors, Samuel Sulz, president; M. L. Abbot, treasurer; Howard M. Cook.

Films in State Library

Two motion picture films have been placed in the archives of the Connecticut State Library that will not be shown again until 1968. When shown six years ago they attracted great attention throughout the State. The films are war pictures and prohibition propaganda motion pictures.

Guy Hedlund was the director in charge of the filming of both screen subjects, the first being a private venture which represents a value of $10,000, while $3,000 is the actual sum expended in its production. The prohibition film was financed by the prohibition State committee.

The war film illustrates Connecticut war activities and also contains statements then regarded as prophetic. The evils of intoxicating liquor are shown in the prohibition film and are vividly portrayed.

Mr. Hedlund, maker of both pictures, appeared in motion pictures in 1909, working with Mary Pickford and Owen Moore. He now is head of the Hartford Company, cinematographers.

Paramounts for Chicago Likes Schoenstadt; Guest Matinees

H. Schoenstadt & Sons, operating a large chain of theatres in Chicago, have just signed a contract with Paramount to use their program in all of their theatres. A cable from Arthur Schoenstadt advises that he will return to the U. S. in about six weeks. While in Europe he has already visited exchanges and theatres in Berlin, Venice, Naples, Rome, Monte Carlo, Paris and various cities in England. Schoenstadt & Sons report a splendid business in all of their theatres, despite the Lenten season.

George Aylesworth, manager of the Portage Park Theatre, every few days has a guest matinee, when women are privileged to bring a friend for the price of one admission. The plan has had the effect of filling the house for the matinees and bringing in many patrons from other parts of the city who might otherwise not come.

The managers of the Ascher Brothers' theatres held their monthly meeting at the general offices of the company, on South Wabash avenue, and luncheon was served, after which a general get-together was held. The boys listened to good talks by L. P. Newhafer, general manager of the circuit, and others. Nathan Ascher told the men about the new pictures booked for the circuit. These meetings help to get the managers acquainted with each other and to interchange ideas for the benefit of all.

Charlie Lamb, of the Palm Theatre, at Rockford, had a full house on Wednesday with "The Third Alarm," and then for Thursday and Friday he gave the folks a real fashion show in co-operation with a leading department store of the city. The style revue used eight models from the store, and, of course, the people were standing in line for admission to the house.

The safe blowers seem to have it in for the Majestic Theatre, at Springfield. For the third time they blew her open last Sunday night, and this time they got away with $575, part of the Sunday receipts, and left some badly battered furniture for a souvenir. The next time the management had better leave the safe open and save the furniture.

The Broadway Strand Theatre, on West Roosevelt road, is now playing five acts of vaudeville with its feature picture program. A ragtime revue also helped to pack the house last week.

A battle royal is on Tuesday for Sunday movies in Oak Park, and when the battle is over, whoever wins will know they have had a real fight.

Maury Rubens, movie manager at Joliet, is back on the job after a battle with the flu.

Herman Yates, assistant manager of the Crown Theatre, at 1607 West Division street, was brutally assaulted by two unidentified men in the basement of the house one night last week. Two men who posed as health inspectors lured him to the basement of the theatre on a pretext they wanted to look over the house and slugged him and made their getaway. Yates was taken to the hospital.

Abe Wallerstein, Michigan City manager, never misses a bet to put over worth-while exploitations, and the boys from the film row here like to work with him for that reason.

The many friends of Abe Gumbiner, movie manager here, hope he will be out in a few days after an attack of the flu and other winter ailments.

W. L. Busby, O. J. Johnson and W. M. Sauvige, prominent theatre and movie men in Central Illinois, have formed the Pox Advertising Company at Alton, with offices at 224 Front street. W. L. Busby is manager of the Empire Theatre at Quincy.

Morris G. Leonard, I. R. Erickson and Barnett Hodges have formed the Rockford Theatres Company, with offices at 105 West State street, Rockford, to operate movie theatres and others. The new company has a capital of $24,000.

The Crystal Theatre had to get along without Frank Schaefer this week. Frank was doing duty on the jury.

The Stanley Theatre, at Scotville, will have a new front installed this spring. The house will be fixed up in modern style before the summer months.

The theatre at 1650 Roosevelt road, owned by Mark Goodman, had a fire in the basement that was put out with small loss and without stopping the show.

The Eau Claire Theatre Company has purchased land for a new house to seat 1,500, and M. Hons, of the company, says that work will begin as soon as the plans are ready.

Raising That Music Tax

Bennie Cohn, able assistant of Harry Ascher at the Ascher Englewood Theatre, Sixty-third street and Marshall avenue, Chicago, has hit upon a novel method of capitalizing the composers and authors in exchange for the music tax the theatre pays.

On April 25, 26 and 27, during the showing of "Adam's Rib," Mr. Cohn has arranged an added feature entitled "The Hickville Follies." The Englewood Orchestra, Cecil I. Davidson's Syncopators, will be dressed in "rube" attire. The Stars of Songland will appear in songs and dances all dressed as village characters.

In addition, Van Alstyne, the composer, will accompany Clem Dacy in his latest compositions. "The Boy Wonder," a female impersonator who is a protege of Van Alstyne, also will appear. He impersonates Karl Norman, well-known as the Creole fashion plate.

Mort Livingstone of Remick's will sing their latest songs. Joe Mamme and Fred Rose, staff writers of Watterson, Snyder and Berlin, and Ned Miller, the composer, will also take part in the program. Nubsie Allen, Chicago's tiny girl, who has become a favorite with audiences throughout the Middle West, will represent the Leo Feist Music Company.

As Bennie Cohn says: "If the publishers want to soak us with the tax, let us make them furnish us talent to swell our box-office receipts so we can pay it."

J. W. Thanlin has leased the Lyric Theatre, at Greenfield, from E. E. Cashman, and will make some improvements in the house.

T. E. Barley has leased the Colonial Theatre, at Troy, and is now in active charge of the house. The house is owned by the Holmes Brothers.

H. H. Dewey is now in charge of the Strand Theatre, at Chariton, taking the house over from Arries and Dickson. Ralph Percifield will manage the house for the new owner.

The Bluebird Theatre, at East Peoria, is now under the direction of Paul P. Rorig, who formerly was in charge of the Orpheum Theatre, at Elgin. H. P. Rorig will look after the Orpheum Theatre in the future, while his son is in charge of the East Peoria house.

G. E. Miner has purchased the Majestic Theatre, at Rhinelander, and placed M. C. Martin in charge as manager. Miner also owns the Majestic and Rialto, at Rice Lake, and has made Lawrence Barrett manager of the Majestic.

Harry Ascher, of the West Englewood Theatre, is some memory hound. After he meets a patron of the house once he has the dope on him and can usually call him by name the next time he comes to a show. Harry also has a hearty smile for the patrons, and has made a success of the house after a hard fight to overcome local conditions.

Howard Donaldson, formerly manager of the Calo Theatre, now is manager for Mahendra the Seer, and Howard says his attraction fills the houses wherever he books it in.

The Ideal Amusement Company, at Canton, has surrendered its charter to the State and retired from the business.

The retail merchants at Memphis made a deal with Harley S. It is reported that A. H. Woods offered Paramount $10,000 to give up the lease to the Woods Theatre into which they have booked "The Covered Wagon," beginning the week of April 22. "Light Wines and Beer" is going well at the house now and Woods wanted to extend the run.

Marcus Loew Quits Montreal, Selling Both His Theatres

As a result of the completion of negotiations between the Loew Theatre interests of Montreal, Quebec, and the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, the one large Loew Theatre on St. Catherine street, Montreal, has passed into the control of Famous Players, it has been officially announced at Montreal. The transaction means the evacuation of Canada's largest city by Marcus Loew, the other local Loew house, the Court, having been acquired by the Sparrow Amusement Enterprises recently.

With the erection of various picture theatres in the vicinity of the Montreal Loew house, competition became very keen and it is admitted that local Loew activities during the past two years had caused some concern. Negotiations were opened with Famous Players with the result that the house is changing hands. Famous Players also have the large Capitol Theatre on St. Catherine street only a few doors away. The shareholders of the Montreal Loew house will be protected, it is stated, and they are now being asked to ratify the agreement.

Famous Players now control three of the largest theatres in Montreal, the Capitol, Loew's Theatre and the St. Denis, the latter catering to the many French-Canadians of the city. N. L. Nathanson, Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, holds the Pantages franchise for Montreal and it is believed by some that Pantages vaudeville will replace Loew bookings in the Montreal Loew house. Incidentally, it is stated that Famous Players is the only one of the large theatre companies in Canada which has been able to pay dividend earnings in full on preferred holdings continuously.

With these changes, announcement has been made of the appointment of Harry Dahn, formerly in charge of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, as manager of the Montreal Capitol. Mr. Dahn recently was transferred from the Capitol Theatre, Regina.

Only three Loew theatres are now being operated under original control in Canada, these being the Loew houses at Toronto, London and Ottawa. The Loew Theatre at Hamilton, Ontario, was acquired last fall by the interests represented by Mr. Nathanson, and its name was changed to "Capitol."

In connection with the recent appointment of Charles G. Branham, of Toronto, as director of all theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, announcement has been made by Mr. Nathanson that the corporation now owns and operates forty-three theatres from Coast to Coast in the Dominion. This makes easily the largest Canadian circuit. When the assets of Allen Theatres, Ltd., controlled by Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto, were put up for sale a few days ago, G. T. Clarkson, Toronto, the trustee, listed thirty-six properties, so that Famous Players stands seven theatres ahead of the next largest Canadian chain.

A serious crisis has been reached in the financial affairs of the Winnipeg Allen Theatre Company, according to a statement which has been sent out by a committee of the shareholders of the company to more than 250 shareholders.

Not only have the holders of the first mortgage of $141,000 intimated their intention to foreclose because of arrears of $26,500 in principal, together with a half year's interest of approximately $5,000 on April 1, but the balance sheets show current liabilities amounting to $89,513.25 with current assets of only $552.05 available. A deficit as shown by the auditors' report is $672,240.63. Net assets, comprising the building and contents, are shown at $886,-253.09. Liabilities listed include business profits and war taxes for 1920, income tax for 1921, municipal taxes of $31,776, sundry expenses of $22,000, etc.

The shareholders' committee, in its statement, intimates that if the shareholders do not take steps to protect their interests the result would be, if the property were put up for sale to satisfy the mortgage holders, that the security of the shareholders "would be entirely jeopardized" and that "unless the sale price exceeded greatly the first mortgage there would be nothing left for the preferred shareholders."

They get
The World ALONE

¶ I find "The World" covers everything of any importance. I have been a subscriber to most all the other papers, but it is foolishness to take the others when ¶ "The World" covers it all. I have arrived at this conclusion after 17 years as an exhibitor.—Sebe Goodlitt, Monarch Theatre, Georgetown, Texas.
¶ "The World" is the only paper I need. It fills the bill.—Jesse S. West, Princess Theatre, Yamhill, Oregon.

Montana Shows Keen Interest in the National Convention

Merle Davis, who is the general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, with his general office at the Broadway Theatre, Butte, and operating Ansonia and Orpheum theatres in this city, also the following theatres: Marlow Theatre, Helena; Grand Theatre, Great Falls; Wilma Theatre, Missoula; Rialto Theatre, Bozeman, and Babcock Theatre, Billings, is busy in his official capacity as the president of the Montana unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, urging the members to attend the national convention in Chicago on May 15.

Mr. Davis says letters from the members indicate strong interest in the association and its safeguarding the theatre owners and the future of the theatre business generally. During the legislative session the Montana unit kept a representative at Helena to especially watch all legislation. There were no developments in the music tax but the organization stands ready to back the Motion Picture Owners of America in any steps they see fit to take in the adjustment of the tax. Important questions will arise at the convention in Chicago so that every member in so far as possible should attend.

The exhibitors all over the state have been playing to a good run of business and all indications point to improved conditions. Mr. Davis says that the programs put on by the various exhibitors have been of a high class nature and the result has been increased box receipts. The legitimate stage has been doing splendid business with exceptionally big attractions playing to capacity houses, and this has in no wise detracted from the movies. In fact, the various houses are like magnets, drawing their own attractions peculiar to the class.

The "Style Show" gave a three nights' exhibit at the Broadway this week with the local stores exhibiting a dazzling array of elegant sartorial creations on living models, both sexes displaying all that is new in the fashion world. In conjunction with the local display Mr. Davis, general manager, put on "Slim Shoulders." This picture was the magnet that drew a capacity house each night.

W. J. Sullivan, general manager of the Rialto and the American theatres, is the busy man these days, swinging like a pendulum between the two theatres. C. C. Pratt, the former manager of the American, by reason of ill health has gone to the Coast to recuperate, and for the present Mr. Sullivan is the live wire who efficiently manages both houses.

Powell and Burche are the new exhibitors who have opened a theatre at Broadview, Montana.

Edward Head is the noted pipe organist who has lately come to Butte to play the big organ at the Rialto Theatre. Mr. Head was at one time an exhibitor at Miles City, Montana. He has played the organ at Sheridan, Wyo., at Greybull, Wyo., also at Roundup, Montana. Butte is to be congratulated in securing his services.

Seattle Suburban Theatres Now Enjoying Good Business

Seattle suburban houses are enjoying good business these days. On a recent evening automobile jaunt, lineups were noted before many of the outlying houses, which is a pretty good indication that neighborhood patronage is strong.

The Rose Theatre in downtown Everett, recently remodeled and enlarged to 500 seats, has announced a change in policy, through Joe St. Peter, manager. In place of vaudeville and stock, the house will now operate on a one-a-week first run picture basis, providing competition for Pilz & Swanson, who own the four other houses.

E. A. Pricket, who some time ago sold his Olympia Theatre, Sequim, Wash., to Mr. Monigold, has again taken over the house.

Winners of the Blue Mouse Singers' Popularity Contest, which ran for ten weeks with twenty contestants and proved a big success, were awarded the $1,000 gold in prizes as follows: Jack Barbour of the Moose Lodge, $500; Adele Walker of the University of Washington, $250; Floyd Murphy of Broadway High School, $150, and Mabel Grace Roberson of Frederick & Nelson's, $100.

W. D. Gross, of the Alaska Film Exchange, and himself a Juneau exhibitor, is in Seattle for about three weeks looking over the new product.

J. K. Green has just returned to Hyder, Alaska, after purchasing projection equipment and films for his house there. Mr. Green, who is a newspaper man, is also a progressive exhibitor who believes in capitalizing his assets. Everything possible about his house follows out the "Green" idea. Green tickets are used. He sells 'em the Green way.

Jean O'Keefe is in again from Billings, Mont. He owns the Regent and Babcock theatres there. After about a year's residence in Seattle, Jean will move his family on to Billings, where his interests demand all of his time.

H. B. Wright is getting to be "Hustler and Hustler" every day. H. B. answers to the name of "Rasty" and is the popular manager of the Strand Theatre. It is a poor week when Rasty doesn't step out with something new. This week it was a special program at the Ad Club's weekly luncheon meeting in the Masonic Club rooms, consisting of five numbers, winding up with a snappy film comedy. And an evening entertainment at Chanticleer, Seattle's newest dinner dance acquisition, in which he outdid himself, arranging a program that was received with enthusiasm by a large crowd.

Also, he is running a Seattle made golf scenic, just brief enough to give you the proper feeling, at the Strand this week. Between the picture and the wonderful weather, patrons rush from the theatre and grab their golf bags. Numerous local celebrities are shown on the film, among them several "movie men."

Already the Coliseum is preparing for "Lighty Lak' a Rose," which is due to open April 7. In co-operation with Exploitation Manager Johnston of First National, many interesting tieups have been arranged, special music will be a feature, and a tieup with the Rose Society is expected to have many advantages.

W. A. Graeper of the Union Avenue Theatre, Portland, was in this week. Said he was lonesome for Charlie Feldman, who moved from Portland First National to Seattle a couple of weeks ago. Bill had to admit that something good had come to Seattle!

Don Geddes, who operates the Majestic and Empire in Seattle's suburbs, has never been without a serial for three years. He has educated his patrons to the serial idea, and can count on them practically 100 per cent. from week to week. Just at present he is enthusiastically preparing his campaign to put over Universal's "Social Buccaneer."

Julius Hollenback of the Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash., keeps his eye on Bellingham pretty closely and "does likewise," which is flattering to the latter and works up good business for the former.

"Dad" Sutherland of the Bellingham Theatre Company is on his way to California for a vacation. He was given the glad hand here.

Harry David, Sennett's manager of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, is here with his wife on a little pleasure trip.

Oliver G. Wallace, recently here with "Robin Hood" as guest organist at the Liberty, has been announced by the management as returning to fill an indefinite engagement, at the Liberty. It is in the nature of a triumph, and Wallace's regular Sunday concerts are promised as a regular feature. He will prove a big drawing card. Ernest P. Russell, regular organist, who has won himself and the house many friends, will be retained.

Paden Sentenced

Mayo W. Paden, president of the Omaha unit of projectionists, who was found guilty of conspiracy in connection with the alleged throwing of odor bombs in the Liberty Theatre, Council Bluffs, Iowa, has been sentenced to a term of three years in the state penitentiary at Fort Madison. A motion for a new trial was overruled by the judge, who fixed Paden's bond of appeal at $3,000.

Paden got the maximum penalty. He is expected to appeal to the state supreme court. The judge scored him in passing sentence.

Los Angeles

T. L. Tally booked "The Birth of a Nation" into his Broadway Theatre for an extended run. There were no protests whatever from negro residents. One negro minister announced he would make no protest whatever as the protests were merely utilized to advertise the show. All in all, the picture has run fifty-three weeks in Los Angeles and is getting over tremendously on the revival engagement.

Sid Grauman announces that "Robin Hood" will play only two weeks longer at his Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, making the record-breaking continuous run in Los Angeles of twenty-five weeks. Grauman adds that his Hollywood Theatre will remain dark for three weeks when it will reopen with "The Covered Wagon."

Mike Gore is featuring an all-omedy program at the Kinema with "The Pilgrim" as the feature and "Peg of the Movies."

Daylight Saving Controversy Continues in San Francisco

Representatives of picture theatres, the Musicians' Union and various labor organizations appeared before the Public Welfare Committee of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors recently to voice active opposition to the proposal of Supervisor John A. McGregor that San Francisco adopt a daylight saving plan for the summer months.

Irving C. Ackerman, of the amusement firm of Ackerman & Harris, appeared as the representative of the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California and declared that if clocks were set ahead one hour, as planned, local theatres would lose at least 30 per cent of their patronage. He further declared that theatres are having a hard time to make expenses as it is and that the proposed change would be ruinous.

His stand was supported by Louis R. Greenfield, of the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, by representatives of the Musicians' Union and by members of the Labor Council. In view of the controversy action was postponed until after a public hearing on the matter.

John Cluxton, personal representative of Alexander Pantages, and formerly stationed permanently at San Francisco, has returned to this city from a long tour of the United States and Canada.

Samuel H. Levin, Inc., is the name of a new concern incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000 to carry on the theatrical activities of Samuel H. Levin, well known through his success in building and operating suburban district theatres. The subscribers are Joseph H. Levin, Sadie L. Levin and E. Solomon.

No better time could have been selected for showing "Head Hunters of the South Seas" than that chosen by Joseph F. Enos, manager of the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco. Warm weather was experienced throughout the engagement, making the tropical lobby setting all the more alluring, and a very satisfactory business was done. Patrons were requested to fill out cards giving their impressions of the show and some very flattering expressions were handed in.

The Regent Theatre on Fillmore street, San Francisco, has again changed hands and is now being conducted under the ownership of John Vasconcullos, formerly a resident of the Hawaiian Islands.

Jules Mastbaum, head of the Stanley Company of America, Philadelphia, which controls a large chain of playhouses, was a recent visitor at San Francisco to confer with local theatrical men.

Gus Johnson, of the Star Theatre, Newman, Cal., was a visitor on San Francisco's Film Row late in March and says that rain is badly needed in the interior. This exhibitor comes to town once a month and spends several days arranging his bookings and looking over local shows.

Patrons of Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, are loud in their praise of the novelties offered by this house in the form of presentation. During the recent showing of "Crinoline and Romance" the ushers were all in crinoline and the prologue in which Dorothy Jardon appeared was staged with old Southern furnishings.

Levy Bros. are behind a project to erect a large picture theatre at Fresno, Cal.

Ackerman & Harris have transferred the Will King show from the Hippodrome to the Casino Theatre, San Francisco, and the Casino shows will be housed at the Hippodrome in the future. Extensive use is made of pictures at both theatres.

The H. A. Snow animal picture, "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," has been brought back to San Francisco, where it received its world premiere, and is being offered at the New Portola Theatre for an indefinite run.

Thieves recently made away with the safe of the Tulare Theatre, Tulare, Cal., but while several arrests have been made no convictions have been secured.

Earl Snell, formerly manager of a leading picture house at Reno, Nev., and now executive secretary for the Pony Express Memorial Association, was a recent visitor at San Francisco, coming to confer on plans for the pony express race to be held in the fall from St. Joseph, Mo., to this city.

L. Kalisky, who has several theatres at Alameda, Cal., is erecting a large apartment house in the San Francisco suburb and is arranging to dispose of his theatre properties.

The New Lyceum Theatre of Sol Lesser on Mission street, San Francisco, has been redecorated throughout.

Mrs. Lewis Dies in Georgia; Lem Stewart Leaves Atlanta

The death of Mrs. Floribel Lewis, pioneer woman exhibitor of the Dixie Theatre, Eatonton, Ga., was heard with extreme regret by the entire film and theatrical fraternity of the state. Mrs. Lewis has personally directed the destinies of the Dixie for many years, and the recent opening of her new theatre was the fulfillment of an ambition which she had striven for for many years.

Lem Stewart, the South's foremost exploiteer, who as chief of exploitation for the houses of the Southern Enterprises throughout the Southeast gained national recognition, has been transferred to the head office of Famous Players and will install an exploitation system on a national scale similar to the methods he has pursued with such flattering success in the South.

Mr. Stewart, though still young in years, is one of the veteran exploitation men of the South, and when the southern theatrical circuit was taken over by Famous Players-Lasky, one of the first things that Harold B. Franklin discussed with Mr. Stewart was this transfer to New York. It was some time before he decided to accept the promotion, since Atlanta has so long been his home and his friends among the theatre owners of the South are legion. His new position, to handle exploitation systems for all Famous Players theatres, is considered one of the foremost exploitation jobs in the country.

With the departure of Lem Stewart from Atlanta, Clyde Watson, one of his main aides, also deserts the fold and will re-enter the engineering and construction game for which he received schooling at Georgia Tech.

Mrs. Willard C. Patterson has been appointed by Governor Hardwick of Georgia as a delegate to the Southern States Conference on Illiteracy to be held in Little Rock, Ark., on April 10 and 11, a well deserved recognition of Mrs. Patterson's acquaintance with the motion picture industry and its potent influence on the educational progress of the country.

The theatres in Albany, Alabama, have discontinued the use of vaudeville and in future will adhere to a strict picture policy.

Among the exhibitors seen on Atlanta's film row the past week were the following: W. H. Odum, Sandersville, Ga.; L. Balafas, Milledgeville, Ga.; Louis Risembloom, Sheffield, Alabama; F. H. Williamson, Winter Haven, Florida.

Henry Hury, well known theatrical manager of Birmingham, Ala., was an interesting visitor in Atlanta for several days last week and renewed acquaintance with many friends.

The Carolinas

Claude Lee, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, addressed the local Civitan Club at the weekly luncheon last week on production, distribution and exhibition. Practical demonstration of the method of photographing and projecting film, a process that was a mystery to many of the members of the club, was given by Mr. Lee together with a history of the industry's progress during the past twenty years.

Secretary Henry B. Varner, of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., has announced that the regular annual convention of the North Carolina association will not be held prior to the national convention in Chicago. The last convention designated Wrightsville Beach as the convention place, and the season at this resort does not open until June. The convention date has not yet been definitely named but will take place during the first half of June. The state executive committee, it is also announced, will name delegates to the Chicago national convention in May.

Charlotte's Strand Theatre reopened on April 2, playing a combination vaudeville-picture program. The house since being leased by Laurence T. Lester, of Columbia, S. C., has undergone a thorough renovation and many improvements have been installed. Mr. Lester announces the appointment of L. F. House of Charlotte as house manager and Miss Nan Gordon as musical director. A special feature will be made of excellent and high class musical features.

Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, N. C., has added another side-line to his elaborate schedule of activities, that of prize fight promoter, having announced that he will stage bouts at regular intervals in his Victoria Theatre, following the legalizing of boxing exhibitions in the city of Wilmington by the last session of the General Assembly.

Harry S. Allen, general manager of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, has returned from a motor business trip to the western part of North Carolina.

Daylight Saving for Albany; Linton Sells the Hippodrome

Without any protest having been made by the exhibitors of the city, Albany N. Y., will adopt daylight saving the latter part of the month. In some of the nearby places, the proposition is being stubbornly fought by exhibitors who claim that it has already cost them thousands of dollars. R. V. Erk, of Ilion, who owns all three theatres in that place, was in Albany the past week booking at several of the film exchanges. According to Mr. Erk, daylight saving in Ilion, if adopted, will mean a distinct loss during the next few months, and one which may not be overcome at the box office for many months. In Ilion, according to Mr. Erk, a twilight baseball league, playing five nights a week, without admission other than passing the hat, brought him a heavy loss last season. It is understood that Watertown has decided against daylight saving. The matter is still in abeyance in Utica, and whatever decision is made by that city will probably be followed by Ilion.

One of the most important real estate deals involving picture theatres in New York State, was consummated during the past week when W. H. Linton of Utica, treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the New York State, and known to thousands as "Pop" Linton, dipsosed of the Hippodrome, a 900-seat house, and the Lintonian, a 1,200-seat house, both located in Little Falls, to Bob Wagner, a salesman employed by Hodkinson. It is rumored, however, that C. H. Moyer, of Herkimer, is the real purchaser of the two houses.

Meyer Schine, of Gloversville, announces the opening of the Maxey in Oneonta, which has been operated by William Smalley.

The Strand in Albany has booked "Safety Last" for an indefinite run, starting April 16, the same picture opening at the Troy on April 15, at the State in Schenectady on April 28 and in Syracuse on May 5.

Sol Slotnick of Syracuse, who lost the Rialto in the fire which destroyed the Bastable block some weeks ago, has taken over the Bates Opera House in Mohawk.

Green Island, a short distance out of Albany, is to have a picture theatre. M. L. Conery has leased the Odd Fellows hall for two nights a week and will open on April 10 with "O'Malley of the Mounted," using a portable projection machine.

Samuel Goldstein, with headquarters in Springfield, Mass., and with sixteen houses ranking as the biggest operator in the New England states, was in Albany the past week, stopping at several places along Film Row and booking for the Park Theatre, which he owns in Utica.

Mrs. Harry Hellman of the Royal, Albany, N. Y., has the sympathy of her many friends through the loss of her mother last week. Mrs. Thompson, wife of the owner of the Star in Hudson, also died during the last few days.

"The Flame of Life," playing at the new Troy, Troy, N. Y., proved a record breaker the past week, last Sunday being the second largest Sunday in the history of the theatre and only equaled by the first Sunday's business when the house was opened. The picture, despite the fact that it was being shown during the Lenten season, stood 'em up for at least a block from the lobby.

Abe Dwore is constructing a theatre which will seat about 800 and be located about a block from the Cozy in Schenectady. Mr. Dwore also operates the Capitol in the same city.

George Roberts, who might well be termed a managing director of the Berinstein chain of houses, as he travels back and forth over the state, was in Little Falls last week making preparations for breaking ground for the new $150,000 house which W. W. Berinstein will construct there this summer.

There was one exhibitor who hit town last week absolutely broke. His name is Green and he hails from Castleton, N. Y. The fact that Mr. Green reached Film Row in Albany without his booking book or his pocketbook was entirely due to a bit of forgetfulness. Finding that he had neither one of the two big esseentials in the film business, he deecided to return at once to Castleton and do his booking at some later date.

According to R. V. Erk of Ilion, he did the biggest business of the winter on "The Third Alarm" for the reason that he figured out that fully 75 per cent of the men in the smaller places had belonged to the village fire department at one time or another, and are naturally enough interested in a picture of that type.

Among the New York State exhibitors in Albany visiting the exchanges the past week were: L. L. Conners, of the Victory in Cambridge; William Smalley, who runs houses in Fort Plain, Sidney, Cooperstown, Stamford and Worcester, and who has just acquired the Rex in St. Johnsville; George W. Loomis, of Frankford; Mrs. G. Harry Brown, of Old Forge; E. L. Griffin, of Kinderhook, and Lew Fischer, who has the Bradley in Fort Edward, the Empire in Port Henry and the Playhouse at Ticonderoga.

T. J. McCarthy has secured possession of the Opera House at Fair Haven, Vt., and will furnish a program of high class pictures to the residents of that village. Mr. McCarthy also operates the Liberty at Port Henry.

Indiana Man Sells Theatre He Operated for a Decade

"It certainly isn't an easy job to leave a business after having been associated with it closely for almost a decade," said Arthur Bennett, proprietor of the Strand and Liberty theatres at Muncie, who, a few days ago, sold the Strand, one of the pioneer picture theatres of the state, to Leonard Sowwar, a resident of Muncie.

Mr. Bennett for years has been one of the most active workers in the Indiana Exhibitors Association. When the movie business was in its infancy he had charge of the Crystal Theatre in Anderson, at which vaudeville was featured. Later he went to Marion as manager of the Indiana Theatre, a vaudeville house. Business was good but he was not entirely satisfied away from Muncie, his home town.

On returning to Muncie he pursuaded the owner of the building in which the Strand is now located to lease him the structure, the lower floor of which was occupied by a tin shop. His plans for remodeling the place were so extensive and the undertaking at that time appeared so great that not only the owner of the building but Bennett's personal friends sought in many ways to discourage him.

"Bennett's crazy," they said. "The motion picture is only a passing fad and within a year or two will pass away and be forgotten."

At that time no picture theatre in the state, except possibly those in Indianapolis, was charging an admission fee of more than 5 cents. The theatres were in storerooms that had been fitted up with chairs for the audience and an operating room for the one projection machine, which the operator turned with a crank. When it was learned that Bennett was not only going to fit the place up like a real theatre, but that he actually was going to charge an admission fee of 10 cents, his friends were certain he not only had lost his mind but was soon to lose his money also.

Mr. Bennett, however, had a vision of the future of the picture business and the Strand, when completed and opened for business, was one of the largest and best equipped theatres in the state. The Strand was a success from the very first time its doors were opened to the public and it was not long until others patterned after the Bennett way of doing things.

Mr. Bennett attributes much of his success as an exhibitor to the kiddies of Muncie, who, he says, have been among his best boosters. Being a lover of children himself, he has at frequent intervals given special matinees and special shows for the little folks, and for the last several years has given benefit performances during the Christmas holidays for the poor kiddies of the city.

These and other features have served to bind the Strand so closely to the owner's heart that it was with a real pang that he packed up his personal effects, moved out and turned the theatre over to its new owner on Easter Sunday. He will remain in Muncie and expects to continue to operate the Liberty in much the same way as he did the Strand.

The Howard Theatre, 1601 Howard street, is one of the latest additions to the amusement life of Indianapolis. The theatre, which will soon be completed and which will be devoted exclusively to pictures, is situated in a residence district in the southwestern part of the city. It is owned by J. F. McCoy.

The Colonial Theatre at Logansport, owned and operated by Harlow Byerly for the past thirteen years, was sold March 29 to Harley H. Hornbeck, of the Hornbeck Amusement Company of Lafayette, for a consideration of $25,000. Associated with Mr. Hornbeck in the company are his father, A. D. Hornbeck, and his two brothers, Willard and M. B. Hornbeck. In addition to the Colonial, the company has two theatres at Lafayette, two at Monticello and two at Knightstown.

New York Exhibitor Meeting Won't Be Held in Buffalo

It looks like the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., of which Charles L. O'Reilly is president, is having quite some time in getting a place to hold its annual convention. At the recent Albany conference of the directors and Jules H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee, May 8 to 12 was selected as the date, but difficulty was met in deciding upon the city in which to meet. Later it was decided to hold the convention in Buffalo, but at a joint meeting in the Queen City of the Lakes of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association and the Western New York unit of the State organization, it was decided that Buffalo did not want the convention this year because the city is not as yet properly organized to handle the meeeting, and because should such a meeting be held all the work would fall on the shoulders of two or three men. J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent and executive committee chairman, announced following the meeting in the Hotel Iroquois that the convention undoubtedly will now be held in New York City on the above dates.

Rodolph Valentino is coming to Buffalo to put on his dancing stuff in the Broadway Auditorium on the night of April 11. The usual publicity barrage is being laid down by the advance agents of the Mineralava company with which outfit "The Sheik" is tying up on this tour. The usual beauty contest for Buffalo girls and a dancing contest are announced, and Ruddy will dance on a special platform to be erected in the big auditorium.

Melbourne, Can., has revived the old custom of permitting pictures on Sunday night—but in the church instead of the theatre. The Rev. R. G. Nichols, who recently took charge of Saint Mark's Anglican Church, Fitzroy, is responsible for the innovation. He is so pleased with the success of his first night's show that he intends continuing the practice every Sunday night. For the first half hour the ordinary evensong service is held. Then a picture is screened, several hymns being sung during the presentation.

James Cardina has let contracts for his new Kensington Theatre, Buffalo, to Joe Cristema, 794 Seventh street. Jim plans to have the house ready for the public next fall. Mr. Cardina recently gave three benefit matinees in the present Kensington Theatre for three families whose homes were destroyed by fire. Jim co-operated with the Mothers' Club on these events and $58 were given each family from the receipts.

Melvin C. Wiley has opened the Seneca Theatre in Buffalo's east side section. The house was formerly the Red Jacket.

Why is it that as soon as Bobby Albert of the Albert Theatre, Lancaster, N. Y., enters the First National exchange, all the girls in the office rush to his side? Especially when there is such a handsome young fellah around as Gene Markens. Perhaps they saw Bobby dancing at the Palais Royal.

George Hanny of the South Park Amusement Company has purchased a new Nash sedan and a new Ford limousine. One film man has suggested that it ought to be "leading the life of Hanny," instead of "leading the life of Riley."

Charles M. Bagg, formerly owner and manager of several Buffalo theatres, is dead. Mr. Bagg at one time managed the Lafayette, now the Olympic. He was born in Cassville, N. Y., in 1855, and came to Buffalo about forty years ago, following his graduation from Hamilton College.

Courage of the operator and coolness of the organist averted a real scare in the audience at the Palace Theatre on the morning of March 28 when fire swept the booth of that house. William Melgier, 450 Elm street, the operator, was burned while trying to extinguish flames in several reels of film. Mrs. Bessie Dunham, 182 Maurice street, the organist, remained at her instrument and helped quiet the audience by playing popular airs. The fire was confined to the booth and the loss is placed at $2,500 by Battalion Chief Zahm. The fire did not interfere with the operation of the house. Two machines were destroyed. New ones were immediately installed.

In response to a request from Mayor Frank X. Schwab, Al Beckerich, president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, announced that all theatres controlled by the organization closed from noon to 3 o'clock on Good Friday. This meant that most of the houses in town were dark during these hours. The mayor declared a civic holiday.

Dewey Michaels has booked "Driven" for the Plaza Theatre on William street during Universal's anniversary week, May 6 to 12, and is arranging an elaborate presentation for the feature.

The daylight saving question is coming to life again in Western New York. An ordinance calling for a return to daylight saving in Niagara Falls has been submitted to the council of that city by William H. Woodbury. Public hearing will be given the ordinance this week. Councilman Frank A. Jenss went on record as against any consideration of the measure. Mr. Jenss is interested in the Bellevue Theatre at the Falls. The referendum held last year showed a majority for standard time. Lockport, N. Y., will operate on standard time this summer, the city council having voted to repeal the daylight saving ordinance which has been in effect since the beginning of the World War.

Andy Geitner came to Buffalo last week for a booking tour along Film Row. The popular Silver Creek, N. Y., exhibitor has one of the finest houses in Western New York. He has installed an organ which he controls from a seat just inside the door to the auditorium, and is thus able to greet patrons at the same time that he keeps a personal eye on his music accompaniment.

Through the efforts of Manager Herman Lorence of the Bellevue Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., the Fox company has been induced to send a camera man to the city to "shoot" a series of pictures of the local schools. The fame of the Niagara school system has spread to all parts of the country.

"Robin Hood" opens at Shea's Hippodrome this week to tremendous business. It is expected that the production will be held for the second week, something very seldom done with any picture in Buffalo, no matter how big. The picture is being shown at regular prices, Manager Vincent McFaul announcing in all his advertising that this is being done through special permission from Douglas Fairbanks. A fine prologue and excellent musical setting is being given the picture.

Howard Waugh, manager of the Palace Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., reports an extremely busy week last week, when as a special attraction he offered the Watson Sisters and then hooked up with the Rotary, Kiwanis and Zonta clubs, arranging for the girls to appear before each organization. He also arranged for displays of some of the Watson Sisters' gowns in the Bigelow Department store and hooked up with a leading jeweler for a display of their gems. He landed two special stories in the Evening Journal.

Marshall W. Peterson of Peterson & Woods, owners of the Palace, Mozart and Wintergarden in Jamestown, who has been very ill for the past three weeks, is now on the road to recovery.

As a special attraction at the Regent Theatre this week, Manager J. H. Michael is presenting Thelma Carlton, the Palais Royal danseuse.

After two weeks of pictures, tabs and vaudeville, the Criterion Theatre has gone to a straight picture policy, reverting to the old Strand idea with prices ranging from 15 to 25 cents. Buffalonians did not seem to warm up to the tab stuff. Lionel Edel will succeed Ben Holmes as manager under the new policy. The pictures will continue to be second run Paramount.

Rochester

Manager William Fait, Jr., has booked for the Eastman Theatre six screen productions which he considers one of the strongest series ever scheduled for one house for a consecutive period of six weeks. The first of the series is being shown this week. It is "The Christian," which is being given an elaborate music setting by the Eastman symphony orchestra. The next attraction will be "The Pilgrim," followed by "Adam's Rib," "Safety Last," "One Exciting Night," and "Bella Donna," which comes to town the week beginning May 6.

Alexander Roman, who is considered one of the finest violinists coming to this country from Russia in recent years, and who for 15 years was concertmaster of the Moscow Orchestra, is concertmaster of the new Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. Herman Martonne is assistant concertmaster.

The Festival Chorus gave a concert in the Eastman Theatre, Wednesday evening, April 4, under the direction of Oscar Gareissen. The chorus appeared in its full membership, singing a fine program, with the accompaniment of a large orchestra.

"Popsy" Carrick, manager of the Buffalo Hodkinson exchange, was in town last week for a visit with Manager William Fait at the Eastman Theatre and it is rumored that "Down to the Sea in Ships" was talked about.

Oswego, N. Y., theatres have been closed to all children under 16 years of age. The authorities thus hope to check the spread of scarlet fever in the city.

Troy

Two new picture theatres were opened in Troy, N. Y., on March 31. The Rose, owned and operated by Jacob Rosenthal, featured "Orphans of the Storm" at its opening. The house is located near the business center of the city, and will change daily, with a 15 cent admission price ruling for the evening shows; the matinees at 10 cents. The second of the houses opening is now known as the Astor, and represents a remodeling of the old Majestic, at an expense of about $12,000.

Texas Exhibitors Win Court Victory Over Sunday Closing

Basing their plea on the claim that a "motion picture show has no more resemblance to a theatre than a pansy to a peacock or a geranium to a giraffe," exhibitors of Beaumont, Texas, recently won a notable victory in the courts over the Sunday closing question.

Very recently a story was published in a local newspaper that theatre managers who operated on and after Sunday, February 4, would be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Before the Sunday in question rolled around, Beaumont exhibitors met in the office of T. B. Noble, Jr., at the Liberty Theatre to take some action to counteract this move, which was understood to have been brought about by the ministers and a certain Beaumont personage.

Mr. Noble was elected president of the Beaumont Theatre Managers' Organization and decision was reached to engage the services of Sol E. Gordon, probably the foremost attorney in the state on the Blue Law question, he having fought Sunday closing laws for the past twelve years.

On February 4, all of the eight managers of local theatres were arrested and released on bond. It was agreed among the managers that Mr. Noble be tried first. He was tried before a Justice of the Peace court. The County Attorney would not permit his assistant, who usually takes charge of Justice of Peace cases, to handle the matter, but instead talked himself for six hours.

Then the defense had its inning and Mr. Gordon talked for two hours. This grand total of eight hours of conversation soon had the judge and jury weary. The jury was out eight minutes by the watch and returned a verdict of not guilty. The other managers have not been tried and, according to Mr. Noble, are not likely to be tried.

Theatres still are running in Beaumont on Sunday and there has been no interruption of their service to the public.

In commenting on the trial, Mr. Noble told a representative of Moving Picture World that in a Justice of the Peace court the jury is judge of both the law and the facts.

"We admitted the fact that we were running on Sunday," Mr. Noble said. "We simply won out on the contention that we were not violating the law, which reads something like this: 'It is against the law for theatres, variety theatres and places of amusement of like kind to which an admission is charged to operate on Sunday.' I might add that the newspapers and most of the citizens were with us and were overjoyed at the outcome of the test case."

A. L. Landernau, projectionist, was burned to death and one other man was seriously injured in a fire that destroyed the Palace Theatre, Skiatook, Okla., and an adjoining structure, recently. The loss was $125,000. The blaze started in the projection room of the theatre from an overheated film.

The Palace Theatre, Marshall, Texas, has been leased by the management of the Grand and Queen theatres of Marshall and has been closed indefinitely.

For the run of "The Flirt" at the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Manager Jean Finley inaugurated a contest during which a woman appeared at prominent department stores at stated hours. The public was invited to pick this woman out and hail her with the words "You are The Flirt, appearing now at the Old Mill Theatre." A series of catch questions was also run in the newspapers, and prizes of $25 and $15 were awarded

Arthur E. Denman, booking manager for the Interstate Amusement Company, with headquarters in New York, was a recent visitor in Dallas. Mr. Denman announced that a number of picture stars would be included on coming Majestic Theatre bills. Among these are Bessie Barriscale and Theodore Roberts.

The city of Temple, Texas, is going out of the theatre business and is offering an opera house for sale. The building was purchased several years ago on the installment plan, following its failure as a theatre, and it was intended to convert it into a public auditorium. The venture proved to be a white elephant and now the services of a wizard with pictures or legitimate attractions are sought.

A ten-year lease on a structure at 1612 Elm street, Dallas, for a consideration of $165,000, has been obtained by P. G. Cameron, owner-manager of the Melba Theatre, who will open a cleaning and pressing and shoe shining establishment.

The Alamo Theatre in Hillsboro, Texas, is no more. This, one of the oldest picture theatres in the thriving central Texas city, is being torn down to make way for three modern brick buildings.

Dallas Theatre War On

More or less of a "war" is going on among the larger picture houses in Dallas, Texas, at present writing. The strong Southern Enterprises are lined up on one side and the "independent" managers on the other. Not only are pictures and picture services strongly contended for, but nowadays it is not enough to give the public pictures—there must be an act or two of vaudeville or presentation of an out-of-town band.

A pretty fight for business seemingly has developed on Elm street, Theatre Row, between the Old Mill, an S. E. house; the Capitol, an independent; the Jefferson, an independent, and the Melba, further down the street, also an independent. Soon after the Capitol had announced a tieup on "Omar the Tentmaker," under the auspices of a powerful Dallas organization, decision was reached by Southern Enterprises to close the Old Mill for a week, refurnish the house and put the music under the direction of Don Albert, who has heretofore exclusively directed the symphony orchestra of the Palace Theatre, another S. E. house. Further, the Old Mill will house vaudeville occasionally in connection with pictures, the opening bill being a troupe of ten Russian dancers and players. For the last few weeks the Melba has been running feature vaudeville attractions in connection with the pictures.

It might also be mentioned that the Queen, another S. E. house on Elm street, has a mystic mind reader as its principal attraction. Just how these expensive attractions are affecting house overhead is left to conjecture. But it's a merry little war while it lasts.

Goodwin and others.

The Saenger Amusement Company, operating theatres in six or seven Southern states, will build a new opera house at Texarkana, Ark., Tex., within the next two months. The structure will be modern in all appointments, of fireproof brick with stone trimmings, and will cost approximately $100,000.

Two-story Theatre Building Announced for Kansas City

A two-story picture theatre building, with shops on the first floor frontage, has been planned for erection this spring at Fifty-fifth street and Troost avenue, Frank Reber, owner of the site, has announced. The building will be 60x123 feet, seating 1,000, and will be so constructed that a balcony accommodating 300 persons may be added. The estimated cost of the building is $50,000. It will be called the Troostwood Theatre.

Plans provide for the front of the structure to be divided into three 20-foot compartments, those on the north and south to be occupied by shops. That in the center will form a street entrance and hallway leading to the loby of the theatre behind the stores. On the second floor, in the front of the building, will be a lounge and the theatre office. The show will be operated by Mr. Reber and his three sons, Clarence Reber, John A. Reber and Glenn W. Reber.

The Electric Theatre, Kansas City, Kas., is giving its patrons a twenty-page program. The booklet contains the complete program for one week, notes and feature stories of actors and actresses and advertisements. The house, owned by the Grubel Circuit, is managed by Peck Baker.

The supplying of a twenty-page program last week to the patrons of the Electric Theatre, Kansas City, brings to mind the fact that a few years ago all of this city's first-run picture theatres gave out these programs. They proved to be very popular with the public and were always looked forward to because of the interesting bits of news which they contained. But for some reason the theatres stopped, one by one, giving away these interesting little booklets. They were missed by many, and now that one of the large houses of the city has started the custom again, it is wondered if the other theatres will gradually begin to supply programs to their patrons.

Many Kansas exhibitors attended the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Missouri, held at the Hotel Baltimore, Wednesday, April 4. They came to meet and hear Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national organization, who was able to attend the one-day convention. Mr. Cohen will not be able to attend the convention of the Kansas exhibitors at Wichita, April 16 and 17. With Mr. Cohen were M. J. O'Toole, chairman of the public service department of the M. P. T. O. A., William A. True and William D. Burford, members of the board of directors of the national organization.

Mrs. Miller has been succeeded by Miss Emma M. Viets, of Girard, Kas.

Miss Viets has been film inspector of the board two years. She is past grand matron of the Order of the Eastern Star of Kansas and an Eastern Star director of the Masonic Home in Wichita.

Miss Irma Doster, of Topeka, has been appointed state inspector of motion pictures by Governor Davis, to fill the vacancy left by Miss Viets.

The series of discovery concerts being sponsored by the New Theatre, Kansas City, began April 1. These concerts will be held every Sunday immediately before the first regular performance. Those taking part were required to present their acts privately, in order that the public might enjoy the most interesting. Only those having unusual talent and worthy of professional consideration are allowed to appear on the programs.

All seats to the discovery concerts are reserved and entitle those attending the discovery concerts to remain for the regular show that follows the performance. This is the first time a house in Kansas City has tried this kind of attraction.

Crandall Equips Washington Boys with Baseball Outfits

Harry M. Crandall has provided sufficient equipment to outfit a complete baseball team in each of the four neighborhoods in which he operates picture theatres. Twelve youngsters have been selected for each team and given baseball suits, including sport stockings, cleated shoes, cap, blouse and pants, as well as gloves, balls, bats and chest protectors. The managers of the theatres will be in charge of the teams, which will be known as Crandall's Savoy, Robert Etris, manager; Crandall's York, Nat Glaser, manager; Crandall's Apollo, J. B. Upperman, manager, and Crandall's Avenue Grand, Harry E. Lohmeyer, manager. A schedule of games for the Crandall League has been worked up and the first games will be played this month. No expense has been spared to give the youngsters the very best equipment, supplied by a well known and highly reputable sporting goods store for Mr. Crandall.

A great many inquiries have come to the Crandall organization as to what it will now do for the girls in these sections. They say that some sort of a team should be formed for them, and a Crandall's basketball league is now to be formed among them.

His Fifteenth Anniversary

W. R. Rowell of the Gem Theatre at El Dorado, Kan., recently celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of his picture theatre in El Dorado. The following editorial was printed by the El Dorado Times congratulating Mr. Rowell very sincerely:

"Considering the present amazing proportions of the moving picture industry, it is hard to conceive that only fifteen years in this business establishes a man as a pioneer. For Mr. Rowell is the dean of the motion picture proprietors in El Dorado. He has seen the business develop from cheap films of the crudest sort of comedy into great classic pictures that portray the finest contributions to literature.

"The growth of the industry has been subtle but nevertheless of wondrous progress. And through it all, Mr. Rowell has kept pace with its development. He has never catered to the paltry and the shoddy. He has steadfastly held out for clean pictures and wholesome entertainment. The substantial success he has attained is proof of the wisdom of his policy and undoubtedly gives to him the glow of satisfaction that his friends feel in his achievement. The passing of this anniversary is one that is well deserving of the congratulations which Mr. Rowell has so modestly received."

Philadelphia's Movie Ball Becomes Ambitious Project

While the vision of the projectors of the get-together function in form of a joint reception and ball, representing for the first time in Philadelphia filmdom annals union of these two vital branches of the industry, only went so far as to cover the subject of mutuality and better understanding, the project, outlined in the last issue of Moving Picture World, has fallen on such fertile ground that already determination has been reached to make the event one of really epoch-marking character. To that end there has been decided upon a shift of scene, and instead of its being held in Philadelphia it will take place in Atlantic City.

Moreover, while originally it was planned to include only exhibitors and exchange house representatives, it now has been expanded to embrace all who are interested in the industry, whether they represent the several branches of those who cater to the public or the public itself. In other words, the doors to this function are to be thrown open to all the fans, and as an added attraction there will be present in person quite a number of the celebrities from Hollywood.

The definite progress made during the last week was the appointment of representative committees on behalf of exhibitors and exchange houses, to which were given authority for the selection of a definite time and of one of the foremost of Atlantic City hotels as the place. Heading the chief committee will be H. J. Schad of Reading, Pa., president of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. Others will be Charles Kline of the Kline Poster Company, Lew Pisor of the Colonial Theatre and for the exchange men, Robert Lynch, treasurer, Metro; Mike Landau of Paramount, Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece, Edgar Moss, Goldwyn, and Jules Levy of Universal. Messrs. Amsterdam and Kline have been assigned the duties of looking after the hotel and other accommodations at the shore.

While vision is being concentrated on this local venture with a national appeal, however, that is not engaging exclusive attention, for the boys are looking forward to a three special car participation in the national convention at Chicago. Enough reservations already actually are in hand to fill one car and there is little doubt that the contingent from Philadelphia and the district tributary to it will be triple its present size when convention day arrives. A 100 per cent. representation is the goal and it is expected that when final arrangements are made at a meeting called for the third Friday of this month at the Hotel Vendig, attainment will be measurably certain.

Of more than passing interest is the entrance into the ranks of exhibitors of Peter E. Costello, capitalist and prominent public man of the northeastern section of the city. Mr. Costello was prominent during the administration of Mayor Weaver as Director of the Department of Public Works; previously had a long legislative career, serving as chairman of the Finance Committee of Councils, and for years was one of the most prominent of neighborhood leaders in Republican politics. The new playhouse will be called the Wissinoming, after the suburb in which it is to be located, and will occupy a site at Torresdale avenue, near Benner street. It will seat 1,000, and be under the direction of William Crozier, formerly in charge of the Jenkintown Theatre.

Messrs. Greene & Altmann this week assumed the proprietorship of the entire theatre located at 4652 Frankford avenue. It is the fourth in the series recently taken over by the firm. The new acquisition will be under the management of J. B. Hammond, who returns to the industry after an absence of more than two years, during which time he was engaged in the automobile business, and who previous to entering business for himself was manager of the Astor Theatre.

John Bagley, whose ambitions are concentrated in his motto, "The More Work, the Better I Like It," is keeping the pace with the growing booking business which he specializes on in the Frankford section. Recently there was added to his list the Bridesburg Theatre, located in the Frankford section, and, with the Eleanora and the Edgemont, it completes the string in the big Northeast textile district.

President Jules E. Mastbaum of the Stanley Company returned to his headquarters during the week after a six weeks' sojourn in California. Mrs. Mastbaum, their three daughters, and a party of friends accompanied him. On the transcontinental trip the party visited many of the largest picture houses in the country. While they were impressed with size and modernity, they were not inclined to think that these theatres had any lesson to teach to Eastern, and particularly Philadelphia playhouses, save in the larger lobbies which all possessed and consequently in the better system of handling crowds.

Throughout the West the system of equipping reception rooms in which patrons may wait until seats are vacated was in general use, and it is the intention of the Stanley management to apply this principle for the benefit of patrons here. Mr. Mastbaum expressed pleasure that some of the standards adopted by the Stanley Company have been emulated, and spoke of the hard work and cleanness of life among the artists. The party was entertained by the Schenks—Norma Talmadge and husband—and met many of the leading lights, among them Charlie Chaplin, who recalled vividly his engagement in Philadelphia many years ago at $25 a week.

Mr. Mastbaum will entertain many friends at the Stanley G. Mastbaum Memorial services at Eagleville Sanitarium, Sunday, April 15. Delegations of exhibitors from three states will be present. Some changes in the list of speakers has been made. The principal addresses now will be those of Lieutenant Governor David Davis, Justice Kephart of the Supreme Court, and Judge Horace Stern of the Court of Common Pleas. The Stanton Theatre Orchestra, under Sidney Lowenstein, and the Stanley Orchestra, under Albert F. Wayne, will play.

A testimonial dinner to Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and Thomas M. Love, who are associated with some of the Stanley enterprises, will be given them on April 24 at the Bellevue Stratford.

Owing to a fire in the new Ridge Theatre at 25th and Ridge avenue, the proprietor, Morris Jacobs, has closed the establishment pending adjustment of the insurance. Damages amounted to $500.

Fire in the Strand Theatre at Northumberland, Pa., just over the bridge from Sunberry, caused damage to the house owned by Samuel Rosen of Philadelphia, it being part of a building which was destroyed with an estimated loss of $100,000.

The Philadelphia trade learned of the acquisition by the Comerford Amusement Company of several new theatres located in Sayre, Athens, Towanda and Northumberland, Pa., making an addition of eight houses to the chain of over sixty which the firm already controls.

Pittsburgh

When present plans mature East Liberty, the fashionable residential district of Pittsburgh, will equal, if not surpass, the downtown section as a first-run district. In addition to the big things contemplated by the present exhibitors of the East Liberty section, the Silverman Brothers, of Altoona, have recently purchased the property of the Alhambra and the lot adjoining, on which they propose to erect a 3,000-seat house. However, the present owner of the Alhambra, Nate Friedberg, has a lease on the property which runs two years yet.

Mr. Friedberg states that he has options on several pieces of property in East Liberty on which he will erect a new house to compare with any in the district when his lease on the Alhambra expires.

Rowland & Clark, who now have two of the largest theatres in East Liberty—the Liberty and Regent—have a valuable plot of ground on Penn avenue, two blocks west of the Regent, on which they may erect a large theatre at any time.

H. B. Kester, of the Cameraphone, will rebuild, beginning May 1, 1924. Plans are now in preparation. He will have a frontage of 58 feet by 200 feet in depth, and plans a house with a capacity of at least 1,800. The building will be three stories in height and will cost $100,000. A dance hall will be built on the third floor and bowling alleys in the basement.

At the present time East Liberty has five theatres, with seating capacities around the 1,000-mark. They are the Liberty, Regent, Cameraphone, Alhambra and Triangle, and the Rex, with a capacity of 300. They are all located within a radius of three blocks. With the proposed new houses and remodeling of the Cameraphone, the combined capacity of East Librety movie houses will almost be doubled, and this section will undoubtedly vie with the downtown section of Pittsburgh as a moving picture center.

It is understood the Silverman Brothers, of Altoona, will build an up-to-date theatre with a capacity of 3,000. The price of the property purchased by them is given as $350,000. It is regarded as one of the highest priced lots in the East Liberty section.

Remember the date, exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania. Your third annual convention will be held at the General Forbes Hotel, on April 16, 17 and 18. Every exhibitor who has the interests of his business at heart, should make it his business to attend every session of the convention.

F. J. Tepper has sold his Monaca Theatre at Monaca, Pa., to Louis E. Stoll. Mr. Stoll formerly owned picture houses in Ellwood City, Pa., and Ashtabula, Ohio.

Frank Roberts, who presides at the huge organ in Rowland and Clark's Liberty Theatre in East Liberty, is wearing the big broad smile that refuses to come off. Reason being the fact that Mrs. Roberts has presented him with an heir, weighing all of nine pounds. The Roberts have another child, a four-year-old girl. Congratulations!

Among the out-of-town exhibitors seen on Pittsburgh's Film Row the past week, whose appearances here occur only once in several weeks' time, were: George Schweitzer, of Titusville; Walter Silverberg, of Greenville; W. A. Dye, of the White Front Theatre, Hundred, W. Va.; M. Roth, of Phillipsburg; B. W. Redfoot, of Windber, and Mr. Gallagher, of the Princess Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va.

Special Election Called in Brookline Film Controversy

Brookline's Board of Selectmen have passed the buck on the question of allowing the picture theatre to invade the largest and wealthiest town in the United States, and have decided to submit the general proposition of whether picture licenses should be granted in the town to a referendum at the special election which has been called on April 24 to choose a successor to the late George H. Worthley as town treasurer.

The selectmen have two petitions for movie houses before them, and a third is to be presented. This is a matter that has come up in Brookline intermittently for eleven years, but always in the past the town fathers have refused every petition for a permit to conduct movies on a commercial basis. The coming referendum will not be binding upon the selectmen, but it is intended to help them in determining their policy.

It is understood that New York capital is back of at least one of the petitions now before the selectmen and that local capital in ample amount has been pledged to back the petition that is to be presented. It is reasonable to believe that if the town fathers decide to vote for licensing the picture houses, preference will be accorded the local people when it comes to issuing licenses.

Edgar S. Hill, treasurer of the Athol Amusement Company, a new corporation, mailed checks last week to the holders of the company's preferred stock, paying dividends at the rate of 8 per cent. He also announced that the company's new theatre at Athol, which is being remodeled from the opera house, will be ready for the opening on October 1. The main entrance to the newly enlarged theatre will be on South street, and from it a parquet will extend out over the sidewalk for a distance of sixteen feet, and this will be brilliantly illuminated at night.

The floor of the entrance lobby is to be tiled, the walls finished in and trimmed in marble. The floor aisles and stairway will be carpeted with rubber, making them virtually noiseless, and the entire floor of the auditorium will be covered with battleship linoleum. The plans call for a women's rest room and men's smoking room. New seats are to be installed, and there will be no posts to obstruct the vision, making the stage clearly visible from any part of the house. The old interior is to be torn out entirely and the new floor will rest on concrete piers. Remodeling of the upper part of the block has been completed, giving six new apartments of three and four rooms each, all of which have been rented.

Patrons of the Arlington Theatre, who were standing in line for tickets in the lobby of the theatre one evening last week, were given a big surprise when a huge seven-ton truck crashed through the doors and came to a grinding halt. There was a crash of glass and many narrowly escaped injury from the flying particles. The driver of the truck had not made such an abrupt entrance because he was in a hurry to get tickets, but had been forced to steer his truck into the sidewalk to avoid hitting a small touring car which was being towed and which crossed the path of the truck.

Jack Dempsey, who is the property manager at the Broadway Theatre, South Boston, readily admits that his famous namesake may be able to put it all over him when it comes to national notoriety, but he knows that his years of faithful service at the South Boston theatre, and his own stage career as well, have made him familiar to a very wide circle of friends.

One of the biggest realty deals ever consummated in Malden took place last week, when the Malden Auditorium building and annex changed hands. The sale was made from the E. S. Converse estate to the C. H. Tenney Company, of which the Malden Gas and Electric Company is a part. The property is assessed at $254,500. The purchase price was not disclosed. The annex, which stands adjacent to the Auditorium, is occupied by the Malden Gas and Electric Company, the Malden post office, the Auditorium Spa and offices. There will be no change in the tenants of the building, it was announced, and the Auditorium will continue as at present.

Channing Pollock, author of "The Fool," which is playing to big houses here at the Selwyn Theatre, gave a sort of back-handed slap at the movies in an address last week before the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs at the Westminster Hotel.

"My observation," said he, "is that hundreds of thousands of people with a real hunger for the finer things in the theatre have no recourse except the motion picture and the cheap show."

If Mr. Pollock will visit Boston oftener and take the trouble to go to some of the first-run houses when some of the big screen classics are being shown, he will find that there are thousands of people, even in Boston, who are perfectly willing to pay $1.50 or more, top prices, to see such pictures. Then, if he will take the trouble to carry his investigation a little further, he will find that there are thousands of other people who are willing and anxious to pay lower prices to see these same pictures when they are shown at the smaller houses later on.

Mr. Pollock believes that "one of the most important needs of any community is art opposition to the rising tide of bad taste and low ideals." And yet the thousands of patrons of the movie houses of Greater Boston will need much more than Mr. Pollock's say-so before they become educated up to his particular viewpoint.

The picture theatre in Leominster, Mass., was badly damaged by fire March 27, when heavy loss was caused in the building in which it is situated. The blaze started in a restaurant and spread to the theatre. The total loss is estimated at $25,000.

Senator John F. Shea of Holyoke spoke in the State House on March 29 in favor of the bill reported by the state committee on legal affairs, providing for legislation prohibiting overcrowding of theatres and providing that tickets cannot be sold unless there are vacant seats. He said it was a fraudulent transaction to sell a ticket for a theatre without providing a seat. He moved substitution for the report of the committee

Senator Charles C. Warren of Arlington said the committee on legal affairs was of the opinion that the bill is unconstitutional. The theatre interests are running their houses satisfactorily, he said, and there is no public demand for such a law.

Senator John W. McCormack of South Boston favored substitution and said that a senator recently received his money back at a theatre where no seat was available after he had bought a ticket. Before securing the money, however, he was forced to state that he was a member of the legislature.

Substitution of the bill was refused and the report accepted.

New Restriction

The Massachusetts House of Representatives last week passed, by a standing vote of 91 to 49, the bill to give cities and town authority to regulate the display of billboards and other outdoor advertising signs. The provisions of the bill may be accepted by cities and towns if they desire. Already the town of Concord has voted to adopt the law. This may prove to work to the disadvantage of moving picture advertising in some parts of the state if the law's provisions are enforced unwisely.

A. M. Taft of Oxford has been granted a permit by the selectmen of Sturbridge to present picture shows in Otis Hall, Fiskdale.

The week of April 1 was known as "College Club Week" at the Capitol Theatre, Abraham Goodside's house in Springfield. "Lorna Doone" was the feature picture. Girl students from Smith College in Northampton provided various features daily as a part of the program. A percentage of the proceeds will be turned over to various societies of the students.

Managerial duties now are in charge of women, so it is only natural that there should be feminine orchestra directors in picture theatres. The Olympia Theatre, Worcester, orchestra is under the leadersip of Mrs. Izetta Shebesta.

The Capitol Theatre in Pittsfield has a well arranged bill for Easter Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Its lineup certainly was big time in every respect and was as follows: March, "Hail, America," Capitol Ladies' Orchestra, first appearance; Capitol News; Margaret Carhart Wertman, violin soloist, two selections; topical film, "The Birth of Aviation"; overture, "Orpheus," orchestra and organ; Thomas Meighan in "Back Home and Broke"; Lyman Howe's Hodge Podge, sea elephants; Cameo Comedy.

Edward Napier, who has been organ soloist since the opening of the Capitol, is director of the new orchestra, composed of young women. Miss Wertman, the violin soloist for the Easter program, is a resident of Pittsfield. For nearly three years she toured a leading vaudeville circuit.

The Savoy Theatre in Fall River closed its doors after the final show on March 31. Edward D. Davenport had presented picture programs in the Savoy since 1913. The building in which the Empire is located will be remodeled.

The Spa Theatre, Pittsfield, which recently was closed because of poor attendance, was reopened April 2 under the management of William Curtin. The theatre has been renovated and new draperies and a new piano installed. Motion pictures comprise the program, with two bills weekly.

George W. Markell, owner and manager of the Strand Theatre in Pittsfield, in association with Phillip Smith, owner of the National Theatre, Boston's second largest picture house, has acquired a controlling interest in the Roxbury Theatre, Boston. Plans are under way for taking over two additional houses in Boston.

Mr. Markell will remain in Pittsfield for the present, where he will buy pictures for the three theatres. At the opening of the fall season he probably will make his headquarters in Boston. It is the intention of Mr. Markell and Mr. Smith to acquire several houses in Greater Boston. They will confine their enterprises to presenting feature motion pictures only in their theatres.

Receiver Is Appointed for Toledo Amusement Company

At the request of Thomas W. Bunnell, a stockholder in the People's Amusement Company, which operate the Temple Theatre, James Beidler, of the East Side Amusement Co., was appointed receiver for the Temple by Common Pleas Judge Milroy here Saturday.

The petition states that the company is indebted to various creditors in considerable amounts and that the property cannot be sold in an action at law as a going concern. Interruption of business and closing of the theatre would take place at once, the petition continues, unless it is given time to liquidate its assets.

High prices paid for films is said to be the main reason for the financial difficulties of the company.

Mr. Beidler's bond was fixed at $5,000. Beidler is an experienced movie man and plans to continue operating the house. His first show was "The World's a Stage."

All of the local picture houses are jubilant that Lent is over. All of them lost money, with the exception of the Rivoli, which continues to pack them in day and night. In fact, Holy Week broke all attendance records with "If I Were Queen" and the great Blackstone as the attraction.

Loew's Valentine have some wonderful bookings for the next three months and expect to keep pace with the Rivoli. The bookings are as follows: "Adam's Rib," "Robin Hood," "Bella Donna," "Glimpses of the Moon," "Famous Mrs. Fair," "Where the Pavement Ends" and "Hollywood."

The Pantheon and Alhambra were the only theatres in Toledo to observe Good Friday. They kept their theatres closed for three hours. Church people of all denominations sent them letters of appreciation. The management also announced that hereafter the new pictures will start on Saturday instead of Sundays. This also seems to have met with public favor, as both theatres were crowded to the doors last Saturday.

A jury in Common Pleas court this week refused to grant $10,000 damages to E. B. Gilmore, manager of the Marvin Theatre, who sued Rev. William E. Hill and Attorney John N. Doty for that amount on grounds that their action in bringing him into Mayor Harry R. Rodabaugh's court on the charge of violating the state Sunday amusement law by opening his theatre on Sundays had damaged his business.

Ohio Showmen Hurl Defiance at the Lord's Day Alliance

"Prepare for Battle" is the ultimatum which Ohio picture managers have hurled at the Lord's Day Alliance. In an address at Akron, Ohio, recently, Wm. E. Borah, United States Senator from Idaho, referred to "sectarian organizations now springing up like mushrooms in local, state and national politics." This is now made the text of a new preachment by the picture interests of the state.

Picture theatre owners say "the challenge of the meal-ticket politicians of the Lord's Day Alliance of Ohio is accepted, and they are invited to prepare for a battle to the finish upon the question as to whether or not they shall have the power to dictate and order what may or may not be done regarding the legislation affecting motion picture theatres and their patrons."

Picture theatre men deny that the Lord's Day Alliance speaks for all sects. There is especial resentment at the alleged efforts to throttle the bill for local option on Sunday picture shows in the House of Representatives' Judiciary Committee without giving it a public hearing.

The Ohio Board of Censors has, within the past fortnight, passed three pictures which for a long time were hanging in the balance. While Pennsylvania movie fans were vigorously protesting at the action of the censor board of that state in banning "The Pilgrim," the picture finally succeeded in getting by in Ohio. Ten Columbus Protestant ministers rendered the final verdict which permitted the presentation within the Buckeye State.

"Bella Donna" was buffeted about in a censorial storm at Columbus for several days before it passed the board. When the film was presented to the censors they refused to approve it until after a considerable deliberation. Meanwhile, the producing company gave private screenings in Columbus, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Toledo, before motion picture and dramatic editors. In every instance the newspaper critics praised and they did not hesitate to acquaint Famous Players of the fact. The producers accordingly submitted the communications to the Ohio board, and the approval followed soon thereafter.

"The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," which met a sad fate when presented to the board several months ago, has finally been passed. The film was at first rejected in its entirety, and just when it appeared that there was no hope, the picture was accepted by the censors with some few changes but practically no eliminations. Verily, "the mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine."

Following the musical comedy, "Good Morning, Dearie," at the Grand Opera House for week of April 2, Manager Unger has booked the film, "Columbus and the Discovery of America," for the week following, after which the house will again resume its regular policy of road attractions. This is the second time recently that there has been a break in the road bookings at the Grand to permit a week's showing of pictures, "Down to the Sea in Ships" having been the attraction a short time ago.

Manager Frankel, of Gifts Theatre, announces a reduction in admission prices from 50 cents to 40 cents, with no change in the policy or the character of the bookings.

There were three exhibitions of the film, "Russia Through the Shadows," given at Emery Auditorium, March 31, the proceeds going toward providing homes, clothing and education for over 1,000,000 little Russian orphans. The picture was shown under the auspices of an organization called the Friends of Soviet Russia.

Among the new picture houses reported is one at Steubenville, Ohio, which will be erected by the Tri-State Amusement Co.

Sunday in Ohio

Ohio exhibitors are giving a demonstration of what they are capable of doing in event that it should become necessary to propose an amendment to the constitution by initiative petition in order to give the people of the state the right to view Sunday pictures. They have begun to flood the General Assembly at Columbus with petitions for the enactment of the bill by Representative Ramey of Lucas County to grant local option on Sunday cinema exhibitions.

The petitions represent one-day campaigns and thousands of names have been sent to members. The petitions have largely come from counties in which no Sunday picture shows are now permitted.

George Manos is having plans drawn for a new house at Toronto, Ohio.

St. Clairsville, Ohio, will have a new movie house, which is now under consideration by Miller and Fletcher, of that city.

City officials of Bellevue, Kentucky, opposite Cincinnati, are busy investigating an alleged private showing of a banned motion picture. The screening is said to have taken place at a prominent Bellevue house at an extra performance, starting at 11 o'clock. Mayor Chester Dorsey made a tour of inspection, but the exhibition was over before he reached the theatre.

The Rialto, Hamilton, Ohio, is giving a benefit for the Hamilton Retail Clerks Association. Tom Mix in "Catch My Smoke" is the attraction. This house recently played Marietza and her Gypsies, in person, in dancing and singing and instrumental numbers, in addition to the regular picture program.

The Palace in the same city is featuring "Opportunity Night" each Friday evening in addition to the regular pictures, on which occasions aspiring amateurs are given a chance to demonstrafe their ability.

A New One

Jules Frankel, manager of Gifts Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, is at a loss to know whether one of his lady patrons, who recently visited the theatre, is really suffering the affliction of physical handicaps or is merely a practical joker.

The fair one in question applied to Manager Frankel for a half-rate ticket. When informed that no such tickets were issued, the lady insisted that she was entitled to admission at half price since she possessed an artificial eye, and could, therefore, only see half as much of the picture as the average patron. Frankel advised her to see the picture twice in order to even things up. The lady persisted, however, and Frankel, out of the goodness of his heart, presented her with a complimentary, whereupon she voiced her appreciation, adding that the courtesy was doubly appreciated in as much as she was financially embarrassed, expressing herself as being flat busted.

Manager Frankel says that fortunately he cannot be arrested for what he thought.

FILM EXCHANGE PERSONALITIES

Chicago

A. J. McCabe, formerly engaged in film sales work in Michigan, entered special work for Universal on March 19. While in South Bend he was taken to the hospital seriously ill. It is not expected he will be able to resume his work with Universal before May 1.

He will doubtless not return to the Windy City until the end of the week. Mr. Stern is to celebrate a birthday some time during the week. The employes, in appreciation of the pleasant relations between officials and offices and sales staff, gave him quite a surprise party Saturday night, presenting him with a handsome and fully equipped traveling bag. The presentation speech was made by Ted Schlanger, short subject sales manager. Poetry was written by Salesman W. Tracy. Dancing, cards and a good time generally is reported by those attending.

His features illuminated with a Bert Williams smile, Bill Danziger, Paramount's Chicago exploiteer, is back at the typewriter after a brief honeymoon. Danziger was married a week ago to Miss Peggy Whitemore of Laporte, Ind., whom he met while stimulating "The Old Homestead" in LaPorte at the Central Theatre. Except that the wife cleaned his pipe by placing bowl and all in boiling water, Bill says matrimony is fine. Any biped devoted to the pipe (tobacco) who can forgive any such atrocious misdemeanor as Peggy committed should live happily ever after, as the fairy story goes.

Otto Bolle, city sales manager for Paramount, and Herb Hayman, salesman, made a flying trip to fourteen suburban houses in one night last week to induce recalcitrant accounts to complete their bookings. Hayman signed four of the fourteen in the office in the first hour the morning after. That's pep!

Harry O'Brien, Paramount city salesman, having just captured the title of amateur champion in pocket billiards at Foley's, is casting predatory eyes about for fresh conquests. O'Brien says he became proficient in wielding a stick when he sold independent stuff yars and yars ago.

Jimmy Schofield, late of the Paramount accessories department, is being groomed for the road by Eddie Roscan in the Indiana territory. Jimmy's shrill laughter is expected to laugh exhibitors out of contracts.

Pittsburgh

Representatives of the First National, Progress, Paramount, Fox, Educational, Columbia and Universal exchanges met at the office of the local Paramount exchange a few nights ago and formed the Press Film League, which at present consists of six baseball teams representing as many different film exchanges of this city. It is probable that two more teams will be added to the league. Arrangements are now being made for the acquisition of playing grounds, and it is planned that each team will have two games a week. More details will be forthcoming later.

J. A. Alexander, of the Columbia Film Service, is secretary of the league and all questions pertaining to the same must be referred to him. Much interest has been aroused in the proposed baseball campaign, and the local trade is looking forward to some mighty interesting diamond battles.

Tickets are now being sold for the big Movie Dance to be held at Duquesne Garden, Pittsburgh, on Wednesday evening, April 18. Benefits from these tickets will be used towards purchasing baseballs, paying umpires' fees and other expenditures.

The Film Board of Trade will donate a silver loving cup to the pennant winning team, as will also the Pittsburgh Press donate a silver award. The Press also presents to each member of the championship team handsome watch fobs.

To Walter Silverberg, of the Mercer Square Theatre in Greenville, Pa., goes the honor of buying the first ticket to the dance. Here's hoping Walter is on hand, for that fellow can certainly put some real pep into the gathering.

Albany

C. R. Halligan is this week observing his fifth anniversary as manager of the Universal film exchange in Albany, N. Y. Mr. Halligan enjoys the record of not only having served for a longer period as manager of a film exchange in Albany than any other single individual, but of having the distinction of working for only the one company. Mr. Halligan first became associated with Universal nearly ten years ago, serving for a time as manager of the poster department and then being selected to handle the exchange itself. He is known to thousands in the state as "Daisy" Halligan, taking his nickname from the fact that at one time he was the proprietor of the Daisy Theatre in Green Island.

A woman promised Miss Wheeler the sum of $500 "if" she won first prize.

A. J. Herman, who handles the First National exchange in Albany, manages to hold the lead in the managers' contest, while one of his salesmen, S. E. Feld, leads in the other branch of the contest.

Charlie Goodwin, Universal Jewel representative, was put out of commission last Saturday night with an attack of ptomaine poisoning. He'll be back in harness soon.

The Carolinas

The matter of loss of films in transit in various sections of North Carolina has forced the Charlotte Exchange Managers Association to take the matter of an investigation up with the postoffice department. Many times it is necessary to make overnight shipments from one town to another, and in such instances there is no provision in the smaller towns for insuring shipments at night and exchanges have been compelled to waive the insurance protection on such shipments in order to not delay shipment until the following day. In several consecutive instances films have been mysteriously lost, and it is becoming a serious matter for many of the Charlotte exchanges.

J. U. McCormick is now covering Carolina territory out of the Charlotte Al Lichtman office, of which he is resident manager.

V. P. Whitaker, special representative for Al Lichtman, has been spending some time in Charlotte getting the local exchange opened and in good running order.

Miss Freda Huckabee, formerly of the Atlanta F. B. O. exchange, is in Asheville recuperating from a severe illness.

J. J. Burroughs is now covering the Carolina territory for the Washington Vitagraph office.

W. H. Kerin is in the Carolina territory for the "Paramount 39," traveling out of the Charlotte office of Famous Players.

The Southeast

"Doc" Koch and the whole force of F. B. O. in Atlanta are on their toes during the present week in anticipation of landing first prize in the anniversary drive which closed April 1 and which it will take several days yet to decide on the winners. The entire force has been on the road most of the week, leaving the office to take care of itself while they made a last final effort to load up sufficient new business and play dates to put Atlanta so far in the lead that there would be no competition during the final days, a report coming in the first of the week that Atlanta was leading them all.

Nick Carter, Frank Sands and W. A. Sanges, of the Atlanta First National sales force, were in over last week end for a sales conference.

Fred F. Creswell, district manager of Famous Players, spent several days in New Orleans the past week.

San Francisco

Edgar T. Roberts, formerly booker for George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., has been made salesman for this concern and is making his initial road trip.

J. M. Cobbs, for some time booker for Pathe, Inc., has been promoted to the position of film salesman and all others in line have been advanced a step. Branch Manager Walter Kofeldt states that business is steadier than for a long time.

Things have been booming of late in the office of Associated First National, not the least of which has been the marriage of Milner E. Cannon, one of the big guns of the booking department, to Miss Janet Maclay. There was quite an explosion when the bridegroom saw how his desk had been decorated by fellow workers and when the report was heard along Film Row exhibitors and film men generally called to offer congratulations. His desk was well decorated with posters featuring successful film attractions, such as "Dangerous Business," "A Man of Action," "Wedding Bells," "Married Life," "What a Wife Learned" and "Don't Tell Everything."

A son and heir has arrived to grace the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Huff and all Film Row is offering congratulations. Mr. Huff is salesman for Universal, and Mrs. Huff served for ten years with Paramount as head of the office department.

Tex Coombs will shortly move into his new quarters on Golden Gate avenue, adjoining the new home of Associated First National.

Carol Nathan, manager of the San Francisco branch of Universal, recently went to Del Monte to attend the wedding of his sister. He returned in time to meet Carl Laemmle, who spent several days here on his way to the Northwest.

Eddie Armstrong, assistant general sales manager for Universal, has returned to his San Francisco headquarters after a stay of several weeks in Los Angeles.

Kathlyn Williams Eyton sailed from San Francisco for Shanghai, China, late in March, and will spend several weeks in the Orient visiting her sister-in-law.

Seattle

The Northwest Film Board of Trade has been in existence for ten years, in Seattle, during which period it has functioned equally on exhibitor complaints as well as exchange difficulties. It is through the influence of the board and its efforts at all times to promote harmony, combat adverse legislation and stimulate good will in all branches of the industry, that in the territory today very few serious disputes arise.

Those composing it at present are: Paul Aust, Select; Carl Stearn, Metro; Pat Lynch, Pathe; H. A. Black, Vitagraph; J. A. Gage, Educational; Ed Lamb, Select; Guy Navarre, Fox (President of the board); Jack Lannon, Greater Features; Ed Davis, Arrow; G. P. Endert, Paramount; Charles Feldman, First National; G. G. Maxey, First National; B. M. Shooker, Arrow.

Carl Laemmle is due in Seattle next Tuesday from California. This is the first time in eight years Mr. Laemmle has visited Seattle. Universal officials are looking forward to the event.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Closing Down Exploitation Staffs Is Merely Sign of Improper Management

ONE of the amusement weeklies, in dealing with the contraction of an exploitation staff recently, expressed the opinion that the day of exploitation was over; that the public, "wise to the bunk," would no longer respond to street parades, floats and similar devices. In other words, the obituary of the exploiter was written, flowers were sent and the grave decently covered.

And Paramount has added four men to its exploitation staff, which in some cities consists of two or more men already on duty.

Some one must be wrong.

With all due respect to an esteemed contemporary, we think that it is in the wrong—again.

Exploitation is not dead. It is merely getting its second wind, and the reason several staffs have been formed and then destroyed has been that, as in the last instance, the department has been formed upon wrong premises.

What Exploitation Is

Exploitation does not consist in setting men in various exchanges to carry out the set plans formulated by the head of the home office. It does not consist in the rigid following of a certain routine of stunts, worked in a prescribed order, and without regard for the size or temper of the town.

Exploitation is the selling of filmed pictures through the utilization of such forms of publicity as may most strongly appeal to the clientele it is desired to reach, and exploitation, even in the same city, may assume many different forms. The clever exploitation man must be able to sense the temper of a manager and his patrons and suit his campaign to existing conditions.

Not long ago an exhibitor told of an exploitation man who came into his town and insisted upon putting over the home office exploitation, though he was warned that to do so would be a detriment and not an aid. He had his orders and he carried them out—and the local manager lost money on an expensive rental.

Proper exploitation not only helps the manager to put over the picture on which the exploiteer is working, but gives him an insight into the basic principles that he may work on his own account on such pictures as may not carry the services of an expert helper.

When Claud Saunders formed his exploitation department for Paramount he based it on one big idea. It put over exploitation rather than to put over any one particular picture or series. To do that he put his men into the field with instructions to sell exploitation rather than Paramount pictures. If exploitation sold Paramount pictures, too, well and good, but if he could sell the exploitation idea he was confident that the exploitation idea would sell Paramounts.

Starting with eight men, he set them down in the field and told them to go to it. He did not tell them just what to do or how to do it. It was up to them. It still is.

Suits the Situation

If a Paramounteer reports that he got two windows and put over a contest when the campaign book suggests a street parade and a built-up lobby, Saunders figures that perhaps two windows will help that particular house more than would a street parade. His man is right there in the town. He ought to know. Certainly he ought to know better than a man in a New York office.

Of course, if a Paramounteer habitually reports small results, he gets a letter. Too much inaction suggests laziness, but the general aim is to put men of good judgment into the field and then let them use that judgment instead of forcing them to follow a prescribed routine of stunts.

It has worked well with Paramount where the original staff of eight men has been successively increased to 16, 23, 28 and now to 34 field men, but Paramount, so far as we have record, is the only company to permit its men sufficient latitude to make good in the particular town in which they are working.

Exploitation did a very great deal to save the situation four years ago. Exploitation saved the picture business; not merely Paramount's business, for the men spread the gospel of exploitation from a broad angle and more than once a Paramount man has helped to put over the picture of some other releasing company.

This has been done on the general principle that exploitation as such was a good thing for the users of Paramount pictures even if it did help to sell other brands, too.

The work has been done too thoroughly to be upset through any newspaper article, but some few exhibitors may take too seriously the deductions made in the article already referred to in the opening paragraph. They may let down on their exploitation too completely.

Like all novelties, exploitation has been overdone. It has been used to excess, and not always with good judgment. But, like all novelties, it is finding its proper place in the scheme of things, and where it is intelligently used it is as profitable today as when its use first became general.

Always Was—and Will Be

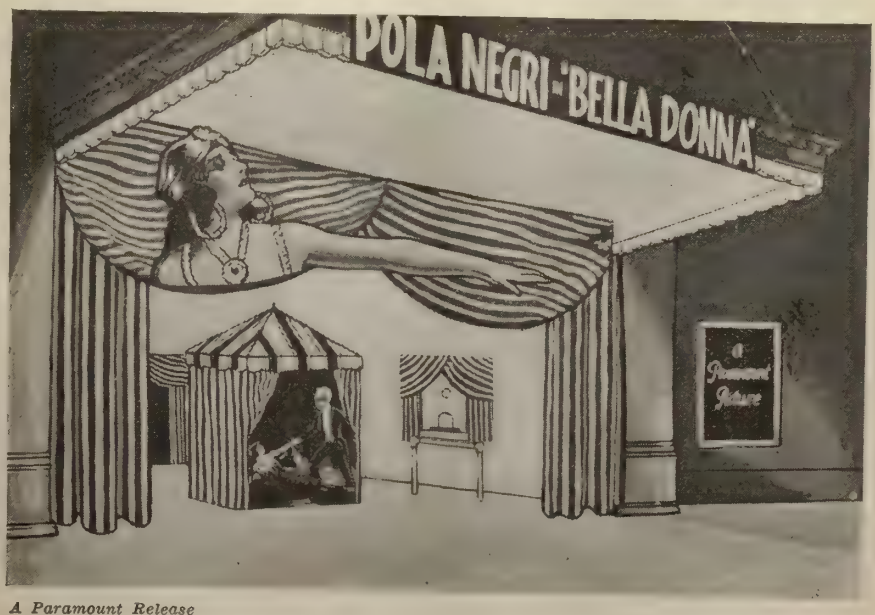
Ten years ago this department recorded exploitation stunts, as distinguished from advertising. In all the ten years which have followed there has been an increasing proportion of stunt exploitation, from the sim-

Old Shiek Tent to House Bella Donna

Re-using the awning material used for The Sheik, but with a different treatment, gives a very effective lobby for Bella Donna which will cost very little. As shown in the sketch offered by the Paramount exploitation department, the awning cloth is used for a drape rather than a tent effect, and the real tent is built up in the lobby as a frame for a cut-out from the six-sheet, the front design being a trim from the 24-sheet.

Probably a better effect can be gained by setting the cut-out back from the opening and setting in reflectors around the inside of the tent to get a brilliant light. The tent can be simply built around a framework if you cannot borrow a lawn tent from some sporting goods house. In this display the doors and box office window are also draped. It would be more simple and perhaps as effective to make simple awnings for these openings. These are merely straight strips of cloth tacked to the upper ledge and held straight out through the use of supports.

The scheme can be elaborated as desired, being capable of an infinity of refinements, but as it stands it will adequately advertise the attraction in the average house.



A Paramount Release

BELLA DONNA GETS A TENT FOR A SIX-SHEET CUTOUT

You can use the old Sheik material for this new display for the first American Negri, in a thoroughly practical and decidedly good lobby planned by Max John Rosenfield, of the Paramount exploitation staff. It is cheap and selling.

ple device of sticking a lighted Turkish cigarette against the lips of a cutout Chaplin and letting him "smoke" it, through the Chaplin "autogobile," to the big campaigns of today.

Saunders did not invent exploitation. He merely made a serious business of what was then a by-product, unformed and unorganized. He organized wisely, making his Paramounteers missionaries of intensive advertising rather than home office puppets, sold along with the film, and he gained results which have become too firmly established to be now overthrown. The only danger is that some exhibitors, taking the printed word too seriously, may lessen their efforts and suffer a temporary setback.

Play It Properly

Keep exploitation for the pictures most needing it. Use it to sell the good ones, rather than the poor ones. Make an effort to change the appeal, do not exploit everything, and exploitation will be found as effective today as it ever was.

It is not exploitation which has failed, but the system used in some instances to exploit exploitation. There is a vast difference. Where intelligent agents have been given discretionary powers, exploitation has been an influence for good. Run on too narrow lines, exploitation systems have been failures in half a dozen recent instances, but that proves nothing in regard to exploitation as such. It is merely the result of a wrong method.

A CONTRASTY DISPLAY OF THE OLD AND THE NEW IDEA

The Logan Theatre, Philadelphia, made this lobby display on "Heroes of the Street," contrasting the old high-wheel machines with the motorcycle of today, which are used by the cycle cops. If you can find an old timer it will prove a great stunt.

Added the Kids

In small towns or even large ones, it is not possible to get much of a parade to put over The Third Alarm. There is not enough apparatus to serve us more than a ballyhoo, and Art Kolstad, of Hood River, Ore., wanted a parade. Being resourceful, he got it.

He persuaded the school authorities to declare a half-day recess that the children might parade with the fire department in a fire prevention stunt, later witnessing a special matinee of The Third Alarm. The youngsters were formed by schools, each carrying a banner for that school and were escort to the fire department. A band of 22 pieces supplied the music. It made the F. B. O. release a cleanup in the place where the apples come from.

Heart Throbs

Thomas D. Serrero, who is now managing the Century Theatre, Baltimore, partly put over Mad Love through allusion to the Negri-Chaplin intermittent engagement with the line, "She will win your heart as she did that of Charlie Chaplin."

It seemed to help and the line was used on a number of forms of advertising.

For special work a creamery gave 800 wholesale ice cream users the lowdown on the Negri sundae, and one of the department stores had its dressmaking expert reproduce in uncut velvet on a lay figure the gown in which she is seen on the front of the press book.

Mr. Serrero does not tell what the Negri sundae is, but try vanila ice cream with candied ginger and rose or strawberry syrup. That should fit.

Couldn't Forget Town

Perhaps there was a town that forgot God, just as Fox says there was, but Baltimore was given no opportunity to forget the town. Eleven thousand special folders were put out and fifty department store wagons carried the banner, while the opening gun was a splash of 300 one sheet teasers asking "Where is the Town that Forgot God?" Later the answer was given on 35 24-sheets.

A useful stunt was persuading a number of ministers to see the production and use the theme for one of their daily lenten sermons. It gave the ministers something of public interest to talk about and at the same time a lot of people who were keeping Lent felt it would be all right to go and see the sermon-picture.

All of which is the contribution of Eugene Daly, of the New Theatre.

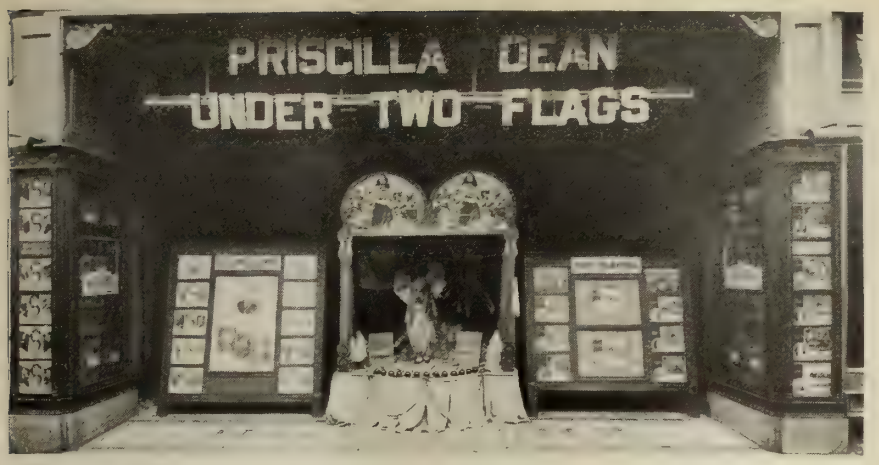
TWO SHOTS OF THE CAMBRIA THEATRE, JOHNSTOWN, PA., DRESSED FOR "EAST IS WEST"

The camera angle makes most of these paintings appear to be on the same side of the lobby, which is not the case. Neither carried any lettering, but from the ceiling depended more than a hundred cut-out lanterns bearing the title, along with a number of large lighted lanterns. The colorful effect of the paintings and lanterns was good argument.



A Universal Release

A CLEVER DISPLAY FOR "UNDER TWO FLAGS" FROM LANCASTER, PA.

John Marks built a miniature stage for a cut-out for Priscilla Dean with the two flags for a backing, colored footlights and a double cut-out above. He says it doubled the usual business he does with this star, and she is always a draw for him, at that.

New Dollar Days

Walter D. Nealand, the Chicago Goldwynner, has a new idea in dollar days. Generally a dollar day is a merchant hook-up, but Nealand was helping Ezra Rhodes, of the Blackstone Theatre, South Bend, Ind., put over The Christian for a week. They figured that along about Friday things might sag a little, so they put out coupons in both papers entitling the entire family to come in for a coupon and a one dollar bill, regardless of the size of the family.

He spent more than $500 on exploitation, for Mr. Rhodes was one of the earliest of the exploiteers, and the result was an $1,800 house with a blizzard raging.

One good stunt was a tie to the street railway which permitted the use of 160 posters and six big banners on the guy wires of their overhead trolley lines. It looked like a County Fair.

Dipping into history, you may recall that it was Mr. Rhodes who invented the lunch hour rain check.

He figured that not many would drop in around noon because they did not have time to see the entire bill, so he issued double tickets, good for a return in the evening, and brought a lot of people back downtown for the evening show.

Followed the Leader Selling The Flirt

Following what seems to be a standard campaign, the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, did all of the stunts on The Flirt, including the masked Flirt in an automobile. She went around the stores through the day and in the evening, escorted by a male partner, who should have worn the mask; she attended the various public dances, handing out proverb cards. On the day before the opening she attended the largest dance hall and a prize was offered the first person to greet her by her correct name.

A departure from the routine was the use of 20,000 slips in wrapped loaves of bread, telling that The Flirt was as clean and as wholesome as the bread itself. Prizes were wrapped in some of the loaves.

The definition stunt was also used with one of the newspapers, the definition being limited to 25 words.

R. W. Bender, the U-man from Seattle, worked with Manager McManus in overcoming the handicap of a snowstorm that was a record breaker.

Buddy Helped

With the help of Buddy Stuart, Goldwynner, E. R. Daniels raised a regular row over The Stranger's Banquet at the Olympia Theatre, Worcester, Mass.

They tied the chair door hanger to 250 window cards with the same information that Mickey Nielan had made reservations for the reader at the banquet, using 3,000 of the door knobs. They also ran teasers in the newspaper with the same message, running into "Meet me at the Stranger's Banquet."

Bottle heralds were used, including 250 at the Kiwanis and 300 at the Rotary luncheon, and 2,000 toast books were disposed of.

A large book, lighted from within at night, was the foundation of a window display on the Grosset & Dunlap edition, and 80,000 milk bottle caps were used by the largest dairy company.

From the letters pouring in from his section we gather that Buddy is making about two towns a day and writing letters to the managers he cannot reach in person.

Auto Sold Picture

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., let a local auto dealer sell Rich Men's Wives for him. All he did was hand out the idea

The car was of a new make and moderately priced. The local representative had been doing considerable hustling to get it known, and he jumped at the chance of a theatre tie-up. He painted a sign reading: "Rich Men's Wives use this car, but you do not have to be a rich man's wife to be able to afford one."

With this banner the car was paraded all over town for a couple of days before the picture opened, and then was placed in the lobby with the sign hung overhead. Mr. White figures that it raised the book about ten per cent.

With a new car or a new model you can double the attraction value by letting the dealer supply a representative to verbally demonstrate the car, advertising that you can see it either at the salesroom or at the theatre when you go to see the play, which is mentioned by title.

Revivals

Eddie Collins, of the Capitol Theatre, Galveston, knows if they were good once they are still good.

He handed out four-page leaflets printed on the front with "How to save Gas and Electricity." Give you three guesses. Right! You turned off the lights and brought the whole family to see Elsie Ferguson in Outcast.

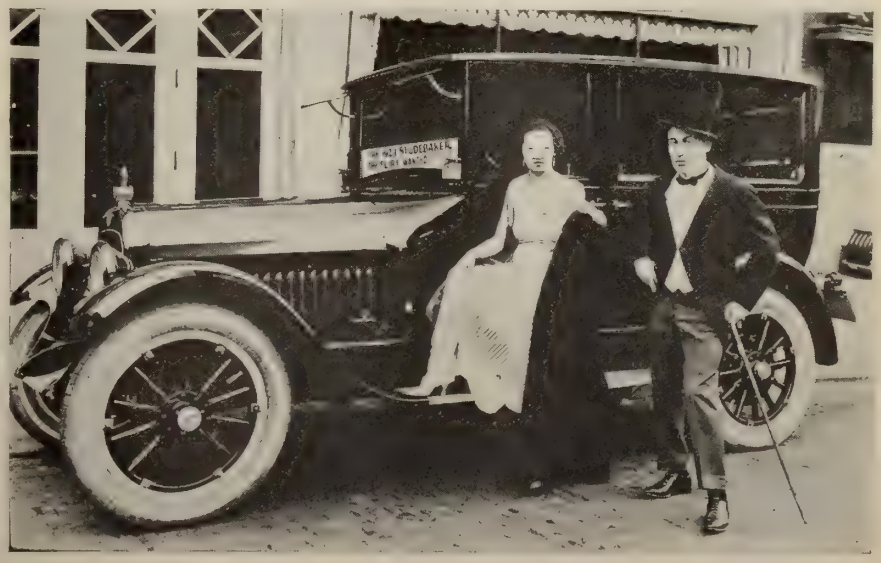
But a little newer is the back page. This was printed: "Turn me over. I'm on my back."

Eddie is getting to be the Eller Metzger of Texas.

Teased Telephoners

Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, used the "Telephone—before you kick in" when he had that title, taking the idea from one of the Eastern houses of Southern Enterprises. But instead of throwaways he made it a newspaper teaser, and it worked even better.

It kept a girl busy for two days replying to the calls, and it shot business skyward quite a ways.



A Universal Release

GEE! LOOK WHAT "THE FLIRT" PICKED UP IN TACOMA

He was her escort to dance halls and restaurants in the interest of the Rialto Theatre, and at one of the largest places a prize was offered to the first person to greet "The Flirt" by her own name. It helped to sell the picture.

Tied Film Fashions to Racing Hearts

Because the stage of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., is too small to permit the use of models in a fashion show, Hugo Plath put it on a film and ran that off, giving about as much satisfaction. It was a special for Racing Hearts, but only one angle of the campaign.

An auto agency sent several new model cars around town for an entire week before the opening as well as during the engagement, and bannered these for the attraction. The week of the showing a car was displayed in the lobby. This had the wheels jacked up and these were given motion by a small electric motor. The car could have been worked under its own power, but the resultant gases would have been the reverse of an attractor, so the silent and odorless motor was used. Mr. Plath can trace a number of direct ticket sales to this feature.

He made a miniature road race in the windows of the automobile company, to hook in and to announce that Jim Murphy, the champion race driver, would be seen in the film.

For the lobby display he used two-foot hearts, one to each letter of the title. This and the automobile was sufficient to get attention.

As the merchants who were represented on the film paid the cost of making it, Mr. Plath's expense was around five dollars for a decided increase in business, and he shipped the display on to the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, further cutting the cost.

Sheiked the Voice

Figuring that The Voice from the Minaret was one of those Sheik stories, Frank H. Dowler, district supervisor, used a desert scene in his shadow box for The Voice from the Minaret, and Norma brought him 40 per cent over the normal business.

It was an elaborate set, with three striped tents, some miniature trees, a couple of painted palms and some genuine desert sand, not to mention a couple of camels which look suspiciously like paperweights. Good lighting made it look like a lot of money.

Got Two Windows in Single Store

Books brought five hook-ups on The Christian when it was played at the Strand Theatre, Hartford, Conn. One of the windows was in a dry goods store, which had a book department, and here the Goldwynner also hooked a second window on gowns, with stills from the banquet scenes to interest in the local dresses. Along the book lines the Hartford News Company laid off fifth window cards to smaller shops handling a limited supply of books.

Hartford officials are fiercely fussy about perambulators and apparently would as soon have the pest wagon parading the streets, so they bannered the windows of the taxicabs on four panes, with an overflow meeting on the windshields.

On the same lines 500 hangers were affixed the steering wheels of private cars reading, "Stop," in large type, with the injunction to go to the Strand.

Five thousand letters were sent to an automobile mailing list and there was a preshowing to 250 clergymen and divinity students in a local college.

And the store hangers, with "Closed to see The Christian at the Strand Theatre," were used on Sunday, when all of the establishments were tightly locked.

Taken by and large, they got their money back on the picture, plus interest and profit.

Dealt in Dope

With the entire country talking about the drug evil, one would think that Eddie Collins, of the Capitol Theatre, Galveston, would not take the risk of handing out dope, but Eddie put out 3,000 "decks" of dope in small envelopes printed:

DOPE
Don't Open Unless
You Use It

Inside was a tiny slip reading: "This is straight dope. Reginald Denny in The Kentucky Derby is the greatest romance of fast horses and throbbing hearts ever made." The signature followed.

Jack Meredith, Universalist, helped Eddie out, getting him four windows and building a racing scene for the lobby. It all made for real business.

Dressed Cutout to Match the Drapes

Charles M. McManus got out of the rut when he made a display for The Stranger's Banquet at the Rialto, one of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Tacoma. He used a cutout from a three sheet and dressed it in a new costume to match the curtains used to enlarge the display.

The drapery is purple sign cloth, touched up with gold splashes, and the dress is a slightly lighter shade of the same material. It is all held together with a frame and border of compo board, matching the coloring so perfectly that it does not show clearly in the cut.

A Goldwyn Release

THE TACOMA NOVELTY

Such a display as this does not mar the most beautiful lobby, and at the same time it serves to give the suggestion of richness to the production itself, since the advertisement influences the impression of the thing thus advertised; a poor advertisement reacting against the product as surely as good work helps. Not even the most critical can pick flaws in McManus' accomplishment. It's real.

Three window tie-ups were landed and a set of accessories, including napkins, toothpicks, bottles, toast books and after-dinner mints, were given each guest at the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Commercial Club luncheons the previous week. The mints were the lifesavers, two to an envelope and 4,000 envelopes, each printed for the play.

Press Book Display Gives a Lobby Idea

It is by no means the first time it has happened, but C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., got the idea for his lobby attractor from a one-column advertisement in the press book when he started on Nobody's Money. He worked this with a one sheet, cut up, and a dollar mark, bordering it with the money heralds.

He kept a supply of the latter on hand, because the heralds were lightly attached to the design and the patrons valued them the more because they thought they were putting one over on Mr. Irvin when they swiped them. Irvin just smiled and set 'em up again. He knew that was what would happen.

In his off hours the theatre's doorman circulated around the banks and dropped heralds on the floor. Almost every time someone would call his attention to the dropped money and would pick up the herald when he generously told them they could have it.

The human dummy did so well in Louisville for "Bellboy 13' they brought him back for "Lorna Doone," when he impersonated Sir Frank Ensor for an hour at a stretch without moving. He is just back of the small cards, but the photograph does not show him up. From the National Theatre, Louisville.

Started Something

When he had The Flirt, Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, had his secretary write a letter to the paper upholding Cora. The letter was published in the 'mail box" and a couple of days later came a reply—genuine this time—from some reader who offered the opinion that Cora should have gotten out on a hustle for the things she craved. Both letters made the front of the paper and gave a punch to the imagination. Mr. Meyer writes that the Editor showed him the letters before using them, evidently being impressed by the interest taken in the story.

You can do a lot of press stuff with letters if you do it tactfully. Here is one time where you will want to get the other fellow's goat. Go after it in a nice way. In this instance the letter ended "Personally I sympathize with Cora in her efforts to get ahead in the world and think Mr. Tarkington has drawn an unfair picture of the American girl." It is a wonder that only one letter came in reply.

Four Ways

Julius K. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, figured that you could get a lot of use out of Mighty Lak a Rose. According to one window card, you could "see it, play it, hear it or sing it"—or all four. That was worked in the Victor window, while the Edison shop advertised that the Edison machines were as superior to other talkers as Mighty Lak a Rose was superior to the usual run of photoplays.

There was a good kick in this line.

Both shops offered the phonograph records and the music rolls. Each listed all the records under that title.

K. K. K. Helped

When Goldwynner Eddie Carrier hit Sandusky, Ohio, he found the town in a ferment over a little exploitation stunt of the Ku Kluk Klan. One night they built a fiery cross out on the ice in the lake, and the next night a second cross blazed from a neighborhood hill.

Then George Schade came out with a thirty-foot cross, electrically lighted, atop the Schade Theatre, and everyone thought the Klan exploitation was part of the campaign for The Christian.

The Motoring Age

I. C. Holloway, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., tied The Dangerous Age to the safety idea, and got the Automobile Club to send out stickers giving the rules of the road, with the heading, "This is the Dangerous Age. Drive slow," and the advertisement for the house in a box in one corner.

The same thing was repeated on large cards to be put up in garages and, between the windshields and the service stations, no one could plead ignorance in the traffic court. It ran business up very nicely.

One reason the stunt went over so well was that the slip, which was about four by nine inches, was so tastefully printed that even the fastidious driver could not object to it. The largest type was only 24 point, and the body face was a ten point. It did not look as flashy as a block three sheet, but it was infinitely better for the purpose intended. It stayed up, a reminder of the Grand Theatre.

A Little Bit New

Money bags for Nobody's Money is the indicated stunt idea, and most managers have borrowed the bags from the bank and have gone to it.

Include Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., in the list, but add that he jazzed it a bit.

He started the day before with three boys and three bags very clearly marked as coming from the bank. The boys were turned out of the back door, sent down the back street for three blocks and then hit over to the main street, along which they returned to the theatre. After a few minutes' rest, they repeated the stunt all day, until everyone wondered what was happening at the bank.

The opening day the stunt was continued, but now the boys had back signs with the title and theatre, and there were three piles of money bags permanently in the lobby.

One essential of the stunt is that the boys were told to make no replies to questioners the first day. That put the tease into the teaser.

So Was This

Eddie Collins, who has to count the pennies and make them look like quarters, put out a novelty card for the Capitol Theatre, Houston. He stuck a sulphur match through the top of a card which read: "Most matches are failures. See why in Viola Dana's latest comedy romance, They Like 'Em Rough, Capitol Theatre, now showing."

Ours was, too. It would not light when we tested it out, but it's a clever idea and it ran them right up to the box office, which is where Eddie wanted them.

Ponies and a Horse

Because Thomas Villnave, of the Wyoming Theatre, Casper, Wyo., knew of a number of children in town owning Shetland ponies, he was able to supplement the usual jockey stunt on The Kentucky Derby with a pony parade, paying in passes; and a horse race was staged on the main business thoroughfare through a hook-up with one of the newspapers.

A pair of seats was given as a prize to the best child in each class in the different schools, or to 116 classes in all.

Kantner's Sermon Talks a Mouthful

Oscar Kantner, exploitation man for the Southern Enterprises, Atlanta territory, now that Lem Stewart has come North, has sent out a little talk on exploitation which puts the matter in about as few words as can convey the idea. We reproduce it as written, omitting only the typographical display. Paste this on your desk and read it now and then:

THE EXHIBITOR

That loses faith in and closes his theatre because he contends that there is no money in his town for amusements and that the people are losing interest in motion pictures is admitting to the public that he is a poor business man and that he is

WHIPPED

There are thousands of exhibitors who are making money in theatres today which were closed by some predecessor—

AND THIS IS HOW THEY ARE DOING IT—

Firstly—They believe in the merchandise they are selling.

Secondly—They endeavor to make their theatre a community asset by keeping it clean, comfortable and making it inviting to their patrons.

Thirdly—They appreciate the position they hold in their communities, in the selection of correct motion picture entertainment for the community.

Fourthly—They know they have merchandise for sale which is just as much in demand as the merchant who sells food or clothing.

Fifthly—They make their theatre keep pace with motion picture production through the presentation to their patrons of the highest possible standard of pictures.

Sixthly—They merchandise, exploit and advertise their theatre and its pictures persistently.

In other words, they go out after business instead of putting out a couple of one-sheets in the lobby of their theatre and remain content to think that the response paid to each picture is all the possible patronage in their town.

Unless you are content with the profit your theatre is gaining for you you should not be immune to suggestions made by theatre managers and owners who are successful as exhibitors. If you are not successful and are not content with your success as an exhibitor "look around" at the thousands who are successful.

Killing two birds with the one stone has been accomplished again.

A Bridgeport, Conn., jeweler told in his advertisement that he had been transforming "Minnies" for years unnumbered, dressing them out with jewels, watches, lorgnettes and other aids to beauty. To point the argument, he had to tell all about Minnie at the Poli Theatre, and this gave the house a boost, while it also provided the jeweler with a chance to be different and so win greater attention to his own stock.

It should be easy to sell any jeweler this idea, and then lay it off to the beauty parlors, dry goods stores and druggists

One Time Stunt Made Permanent

When the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, screened The Voice from the Minaret, one of the special stunts was a set of gilt frames containing hand colored pictures of Norma Talmadge. The frames were gilt, glazed and sightly and they made the grade in about 100 windows.

They worked so well in grabbing space that they will be retained as a permanent feature for a time, the photographs being changed weekly. The window shown is in one of those drug stores which carry everything from motorboats to corn cures, and they set five frames into a display of toilet articles, figuring that the popular star would get more attention for the window than the gaudy lithographs supplied by the makers of the advertised preparations. There were only three styles of pictures, so there are two duplicates, but they all went in.

SOULS FOR SALE

Eleanor Boardman, beautiful leading lady in Rupert Hughes' "Souls for Sale", is shown here, in her dressing room at Hollywood. She says, for best results, use Palmolive Cold Cream, it makes the skin fresh, smooth and attractive.

SELLING SOMETHING BESIDES SOULS FOR SOULS FOR SALE IN NEW YORK

Eddie Bonns, Goldwyn hustler, tied Palmolive products and the A. D. S. peroxide of hydrogen to semi-news displays for the Rupert Hughes story, on the proposition that it will sell both the film and the toilet articles to better advantage than either could gain working independently. Each campaign helps the other. The cut shows the Palmolive. The other is a picture of Lew Cody selling his soul for a hair bleach.

Bamberger's Cinch in Mexico City

Wouldn't it be just wonderful if you could wake up some morning and find yourself back in the good old days before exploitation was invented? Wouldn't it be a close second to heaven? You bet!

Leon J. Bamberger, Claud Saunders' assistant, was loaned the Olympia Theatre, Mexico City, to show them a few exploitation tricks, and, gosh! how he dreads to come home! He don't even know about the "I am the only one not going to the ——— Theatre this week, but that's because I'm an ass." They don't even know that, and there is Bam, with his six scrap-books and an admiring audience!

Pipe in the large cut the line up for Footlights, or "El Brillo de las Candilejas." First comes the giant telegram, supposed to have come from New York. Next is the street-car stunt, but Bam could not get hold of a bus, so he made his own. They are all going to see—er—what we called it up above—"hoy," which means today. And they are going to spend one dollar, Mex. The monkey cage tells that the simians will appear in—you know what—with Elsie Ferguson, and the show window announces that the Mexican friends and admirers of Miss Ferguson have selected the hat from this store to be sent her with the request that she wear it in her next picture.

Wait until Bam works his 5,000 free passes idea.

Keith Exploitation Helps The Christian

Most of the Keith connected houses in New York worked special stunts for The Christian, the most elaborate being that at Proctor's 125th Street Theatre where there was a steeple eighteen feet high on the marquise. A set of chimes was installed in this structure which was operated five hours a day.

A miniature church, with a doll clergyman and all the rest was the appeal of Moss' Franklin Theatre and at Keith's Hamilton another church structure was supposed to be modeled after that used in the play.

At the Fordham reliance was placed on a hook-up with Grosset & Dunlap, the photoplay edition being on sale the week before the run and all through the engagement, a special stand being set up in the lobby. This is something new and very good.

Samples by Radio

George Schade, of Sandusky, put in a jazz band for a holiday and then arranged with a local paper to broadcast a sample program, working through the Bell people. The papers gave him a lot of publicity and it brought in a lot of patrons following the holiday. There isn't very much you can tell him about publicity. He wrote part of it and memorized the rest.

Omar Was a Winner Through Good Work

Omar the Tentmaker has not exactly been knocking out records down South, but when they told Frank H. Burns, of the Grand Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., that it was hard to sell, he decided to see just what he could do with it, and he surprised even himself.

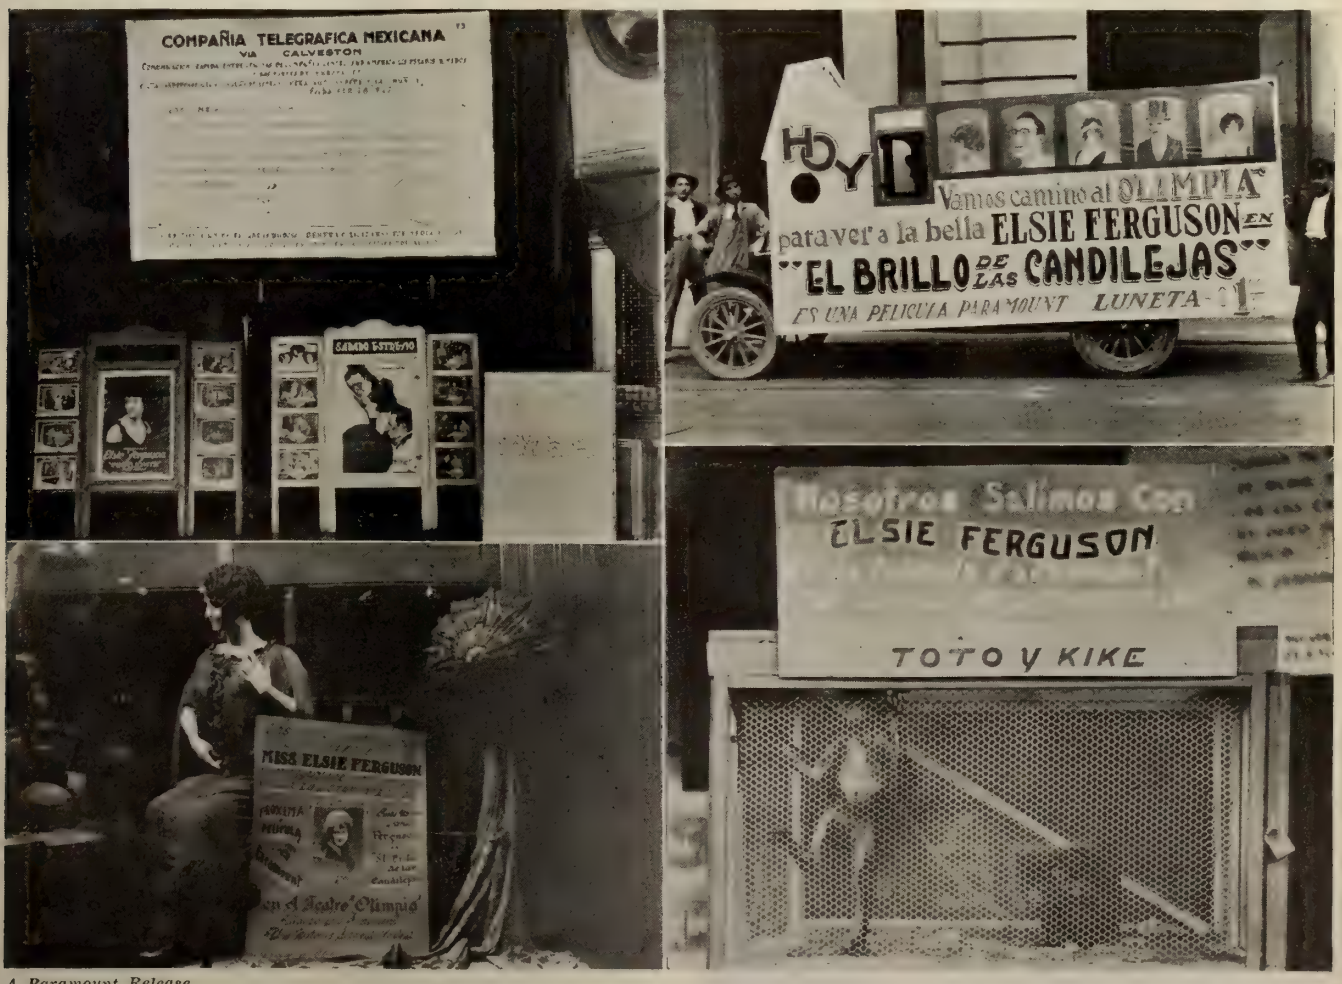
His campaign, to quote his own words, was "The surest way to put a picture over in this type of town is to concentrate on it." He used both regular and special slides some two weeks in advance, and aroused so much interest that there were many telephone calls as to the times the picture started.

Heralds and window cards were used plentifully, and he had a tent effect in the lobby, rather sketchy, because of the fire laws against obstructions, but so vividly colored that it made up in noise what it lacked in area.

A Good Sky Line

His banners showed an Oriental skyline in black, with the lettering in red, with a vividly deep-blue sky. They were really artistic, yet they made a noise like a brass band.

The net result was a full opening matinee and a sustained business. People felt they really ought to like the much-talked-of picture, and so they did. They went out and told others, and the others came, and business was above the average for this time of year.



A Paramount Release

ALL THE GOOD OLD STUNTS ARE BRAND NEW DOWN IN MEXICO CITY WHERE BAM IS

Leon J. Bamberger, the liberal pass man, was loaned to the Olympia Theatre, Mexico City, to show them how to exploit the Paramount product, and Bam, with his six scrap books, is having the time of his life. Even the "This is no bull" is new down there, but he has not used that yet, but here are some he used for Footlights. Look at them and envy Bam.

Two Cuts Sell the Idea of Hottentot

The manager who cannot sell The Hottentot is a pretty poor salesman, since he has so much to offer and is given the material in such excellent shape, but some displays are better than others, and while this bucking horse hardly equals the galloping horse, used by many, it gives a change of cut and the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, has made it more effective by placing the cut of Sam where it will do the most good. These are two distinct cuts, but placed as they are here they give the effect of a single with type matter cut in and each helps the other to gain a comedy effect. You get the idea that the Hottentot is a horse and that the hero is afraid of him, and for very good reasons. A small section of sales talk just over the horse puts the full idea over, and the cut of the girl is thrown in just to prove that there is one, in case anyone could imagine a play without a heroine. Possibly the argument that Detroit sold the same attraction for 65 cents will help in Toledo at thirty cents, but if it does, we think that this fact and not the Lloyd reissue should have been given the box, since the comedy is a repeat and the price mark is new. If it was not worth the box, it should have been buried in a smaller face. If it was worth anything at all, it was worthy a stronger play. The Hottentot is showing a better advertising average than most plays. This is partly due to an unusually good layout of cuts, but more to the fact that most managers know they are safe in getting behind this production and selling it off to the limit. They know it is going to be a knockout, so they tell about it with confident enthusiasm. This is one instance where a pictured comedy is funnier than the stage version. Generally the picture falls with the comedy lines cut out, but you never saw Willie Collier mount his horse the way McLean does in the race. The Alhambra has given a very intelligent handling of the material in 145 lines by four.

Simple Layout Has an Attractive Value

With nothing more than a somewhat crude cut the Colonial Theatre, Watertown, S. D., has achieved a striking strip advertisement. It is a five threes, and at the first look there does not seem to be much of it. It looks as though it had been slapped together with no thought, but if you look at it a little longer it will strike you that this is a decidedly impressive advertisement because of its very simplicity. This is largely due to the cut, which fits the rest of the layout. It possesses a rugged strength that is not at first apparent. There is not much to be said about Sherlock Holmes, because so little needs be said. If you cannot sell the Doyle stories on their title alone, you will need several pages of argument. Sherlock Holmes is known to all intelligent persons, and you cannot tell them more about him. Some pictures could not be sold on this simple layout, but with Sherlock Holmes and Barrymore no argument is needed, and this is more effective than any amount of argument. And the printer has made a good job of his end of the work. We do not altogether like those all-cap lines, but there is so little talk that they do not hurt as much as would a longer argument. In a way the all-cap works in with the rest.

appeal to the out-of-town readers. The inset gives a suggestion of the devilment going on beneath the pictured roofs, and the two ears of selling talk will pull the price out of the pants' pockets of most male readers. It will probably have a strong appeal to the women as well. And it stands out on the page like a poster on a church door. There is nothing particularly artistic about this work. The sketching is crude and so is the idea, but this very crudity is what will sell a picture primarily built to appeal to certain tastes; and the artist in his design has followed the idea of the production so exactly in his appeal that it will sell chiefly to those most likely to be interested in the story. And this is the fine art in selling—to suit the appeal to the patrons most apt to be suited by the article sold. This would be poor work for a play of fine type, but it is precisely what will sell "The Lights of New York" to the largest and most appreciative clientele.

Honest Advertisement Turns Up Once More

The Capitol Theatre, Superior, Wis., is the latest to use "the most honest advertisement ever printed" and does it on School Days, which seems to be going the rounds in spite of later releases. There is apparently no time limit on School Days. It is founded on a stock cut, but the management has taken over the "most honest" stunt, apparently because it worked so well on Tol'able David. since the text refers to the first use of the device. The honest advertisement was, we believe, first used for Tol'able David. It is a good form of a "just once" idea, and the Capitol seems to have found an alibi for a second use.

can stand alone. There is more to the story than the text brings out, and in spite of the real horses, which are played up here, we believe that a larger return might have been gained from the larger sale of the picture idea. If that were sold and then the horses thrown in for good measure, the result might have been still better, and there is enough good selling talk on the story to put over the comedy idea in an advertisement of any reasonable size. This is not quarreling with the layout, but the point to consider is that the treadmill stuff will not prove as important as the picture. If the prospect were sold first on the picture, then when he saw the show and came away, he would feel that the picture was all the advertisement said it was. Instead of that, if he is brought in to see the horses and the picture, and he likes the picture better than the one minute flash of the nags, he will go out feeling that the horses were not so much but that the picture was great and the Capitol doesn't know much about shows since they boosted the horses. The patron may not realize just how he argues, but the average man will feel subconsciously that this is the case. On the other hand if the picture is sold to the limit first, the real horses can be added to bolster the belief that the Capitol does things well and knows what it is doing. When you can get a comedy picture that is as genuinely funny as this Ince production, even the added starters should not be permitted to interfere. Make the most of the comedy that you may pass it along to the next, which may need a little help.

Formal Arrangement Hurts This Display

Placing the cuts too formally hurts what might have been a good display from the Orpheum Theatre, Flint, Mich. This is a four tens and the wider cut is just wide enough to set into the space. This is most always a handicap, and with a particular printer, who loves to do things up in neat little ruled packages, the general effect is that of a checkerboard. It is not a selling advertisement. A better use of the space would have been to have placed the smaller cut on the right hand above the four column cut, running it right up to the top of the page with the house signature to the left. Then the "This is our third money-back, personally-guaranteed photoplay" could have been run either above or below the wide cut. The small features, without the paneling, could have been run across on the right, with the time and price schedules between the Snapshots and the Comedy, the title of the latter being given. The underline could have run below this. The advertisement could have been shortened an inch, a saving of four inches; it would have looked better and would have sold better. And the next time a printer sets a mortise in a paneled box, as is done in the wide cut, he should be arrested for disturbing the peace. It should have been set in to suggest a part of the announcement and not held from the title with rule. Someone out in Flint seems to have a mania for panels. They are all right in their way, but they should never be overdone.

first impression of this advertisement is the title, the sketch and the house name. These are the essential points, and they are so well displayed that nothing can detract from them, though plenty of type is used for the lesser announcement. The upper left-hand corner shows the apology, "we cannot convey just what this picture presents," used by a number of others, and the cast is carried in fairly large type just to the right of the cut, while beyond that is the full program of musical and other features. The attraction just ending is given just a line below the cast, and the coming of Jackie Coogan is spread in an italic line at the bottom. It is sound planning, and results in a good selling display.

Of the many advertisements we have seen on Norma Talmadge in The Voice from the Minaret, we like best the 170 by four from the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. It has gone to the other extreme and now does very well indeed, but nothing of late is based upon sounder principles than this attractive com-

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." That is the spirit that prompts sincere exhibitors to send the dependable booking tips you always find on these pages. Used by a host of exhibitors, they have aided in the booking of good pictures and the avoiding of bad ones. They are published in a spirit of fair play to producer and exhibitor, without fear or favor. Use these tips and send some from your own experience.

American Releasing

ME AND MY GAL. (5,433 feet). Star, Betty Balfour. Another English production. My advice to any exhibitor is "look before you book" on this one. I starve to death on all foreign pictures. Advertised with six, three, one, slide, photos. Poor attendance, also bad weather. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MARRIAGE CHANCE. (6,000 feet). Featured cast, includes Milton Sills. Wonderful cast, but rotten story. Audience walked out on third reel. I can't explain to you how poor it was. Milton Sills brings the crowd. Chas. R. Holz, Strand Theatre, San Anselmo, California.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. (7,382 feet). All star cast, includes Monte Blue. An excellent picture that pleased all who saw it. Has a real good race track scene in it that is sure to make them take notice. Advertised with ones, six, slide, photos, heralds. Had extra good atendance in town of 1,500, drawing regular small town type. H. Wall, Ozark Theatre, Berryville, Arkansas.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. (7,382 feet). All star cast includes Monte Blue. Great surprise. Wonderful business and everybody pleased. Advertising slants very good. Business big. Large city. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

SUPER SEX. (5,749 feet). Selected cast. Nice clean little picture that is too long. Drags in spots. Lighting especially good. Had poor attendance. Town of 4,000; draw family trade and students. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

Associated Exhibitors

GRANDMA'S BOY. (4,800 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. (You will find this report repeated under "Dr. Jack" (Pathe) as it is a combined report on both pictures). "Grandma's Boy" is fine; "Dr. Jack" is very good. Both pictures will please, especially "Grandma's Boy" if bought right; but they made us pay more money for "Dr. Jack," too much for what it would bring in. We advertised very heavy, but it took all we took in to pay film rental and overhead. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,822 feet). Star cast includes Mae Marsh. Fairly good picture; this picture will not please all audiences. Seventy per cent rating. Fair attendance. Big city; draw middle class. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,822 feet). Star cast includes Mae Marsh. Pleased here about fifty-fifty. No complaints to speak of —neither was there any great commendation on its merits. Advertised usual way to health seekers and tourists for fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES. (4,687 feet). Star, Leah Baird. Just a program picture that gets by. If you can buy it right, run it. Played it with return engagement of Lloyd's "Sailor Made Man." Business was very good. Used newspaper anl lobby. Town of 8,000; draw mixed crowd. Admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

F. B. O.

GOOD MEN AND TRUE. (5,400 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Best Carey, and we've had about all his vehicles. Better than "The Kickback." "Good Men and True" has every element that has ever appealed to any motion picture fan. Carey puts over his smile and eye glint. The humor is compelling; the punch is a winner at climax. Attendance good in town of 500, drawing from all classes. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

THE KICKBACK. (5,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Just fair; nothing to rave over. We bought it as a program picture and played it as such. Will not stand advanced prices. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, slide, for fair attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood class. General admission 10-22, special 15-30. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

THE KICKBACK. (5,000 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good, but lacks much that will appeal. Town of 500; draw from all classes. O. J. Ramey, Lyons Theatre, Lyons, Colorado.

SNOWSHOE TRAIL. (5,382 feet). Stars, Roy Stewart, Jane Novak. This picture took very good here. No complaints; everyone said it was fine. Attendance poor on account of heavy snow. Town of 2,800; drew all classes for this. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. A sure fire drawing card. If a picture is bad I'll pan it, if it's there I'll praise it. Book this one. Used billboard, dodgers, stunts, etc. Excellent attendance. Town of 8,000; draw working element. Admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

WHAT DO MEN WANT? (6,141 feet). Featured cast. Played this feature to capacity business. Everybody well pleased and film in good condition, and at price exhibitors can afford to pay. Used three sheet, ones, 11x14. Good attendance. Large city; draw family trade. Admission is ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

First National

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Just another Ray picture. For me, punk. Used regular advertising with fair attendance. Town of 2,500; draw all classes. Admission 10 to 55; play vaudeville. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

ALIAS JULIUS CAESAR. (6,131 feet). Star, Charles Ray. From a comedy standpoint, the best thing Ray has ever done—and it surely was due the exhibitor after such "rot" as "The Barnstormer," "Deuce of Spades," and "Gas, Oil and Water," and it puts the theatre in line to do some real business with "Tailor Made Man," for it took the bad taste out of the patrons' mouths that those other "limes" left. Play "Julius Caesar" and step on it. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists brought great attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast includes Lewis Stone. Don't miss this production; it will create a sensation if properly exploited, and the production will satisfy the most critical audience. Used ones, threes, sixes, twenty-fours, extra newspaper. Had big attendance. City of 28,000; draw the best class. Admission twenty-five cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,171 feet). All star cast. Fair drawing card, but it is a good story. I lost money on it; I bought it too high and then there was bad weather. Watch them, boys. Used lobby, lithos and newspapers. Small attendance. Town of 4,500; draw mixed classes. Admission 10-20. Wm. L. Boulware, Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. If they like a deep plot with plenty of action, get them this picture. Pleased eighty-five per cent. But eight reels is too long for any one picture; you can't do justice to the short subjects. Used lobby, newspaper and window cards with fair results. Draw from county seat and surroundings. Admission 15-25. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A swift moving "knock-'em-down-and-drag-'em-out." In houses where they like sensational features this will be a clean-up. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. City of 28,000; draw best class. Admission twenty-five cents. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. Good picture of its kind but (with half the town sick here also) eight reels of sadness is too much. Picture leaves bad taste as it doesn't show heroine's child is legitimate. Good attendance. Town of 4,000; draw students and family trade. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

KINDRED OF THE DUST. (8,500 feet) Star, Miriam Cooper. Very good picture in every particular. Can't boost it too much; got the money. Advertised it like a circus. Had big results. City of 25,000; draw family trade. Admission 25-50-60. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

LESSONS IN LOVE. (5,923 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Blizzard kept them away. Pleased all who saw it. A few called it Connie's best. Regular advertising, result noted above. Regular small town of 1,474.

Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

LOVE'S PENALTY. (4,685 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. While not a Special, it gave better than fair satisfaction and drew a better than average crowd. Good attendance in town of 500, drawing also rural type. Admission for this picture, 20-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Good picture, but flopped after first day, not drawing like his other pictures. Advertised good, fair attendance. City of 40,000; draw family class. Admission 25 to 75. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,600 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A perfect film, or as nearly so as films can be made. I would advise any theatre with a community of average intelligence to play it. Charles Dickens, and Jackie in "Oliver Twist" make a great combination, and you can go all the way down the line and you won't find a flaw in any of the characters. Beautifully staged and acted. It was an artistic success here; the financial success was something else again, as I had to slightly increase my prices—and don't think I didn't hear about it! If I had played this picture at the original quotation I would have lost my left orbit; as it was, I practically broke even, but I am happy to know that First National got theirs as always. Advertising angle—Jackie Coogan, Charles Dickens' story, excellence of cast and director. Anything you say this picture will make good; but it's nearly a highbrow exhibit. Advertised with heralds, mailing list, photos, ones and threes, to health seekers and tourists. Fairly good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OMAR, THE TENTMAKER. (8,000 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. Box office value, for me, "below zero." Entertaining value to our audience, about fifty per cent. Was glad when the last show was over. Persian love story on eight reels. Big city; pull neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Madison Street, Chicargo, Illinois.

PRIMITIVE LOVER. (6,192 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Would call it just "average." Connie has made too many—the trouble with most stars. Fair attendance. Town of 4,000; draw family trade and students. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

QUESTION OF HONOR. (6,065 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Good out door picture. Seemed to please majority. Only a one day show. Fair attendance. Town of 4,000; draw family and students. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

ROSE OF THE SEA. (6,037 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Splendid, and pleased a hundred per cent. Miss Stewart very popular here, as very seldom do we run a bad one of hers. Used photos, slide, posters. Good attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SEVENTH DAY. (5,335 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A very good program picture. Will get by all right if properly advertised. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Features dog Strongheart. My report agrees with all the rest I've yet seen on this; this is a fine picture. Town of 3,700. Had good attendance. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Florence Vidor. Here's a good one from the viewpoint of propaganda, and will make money. Advertising slants, plastic surgery, stars, story, action. Good attendance. Town of 4,100; draw all nationalities, mixed class. Admission 10-25. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Ran this for High School and made a hit with the people. I got a brand new print and bought as cheap as a program picture. Regular advertising gave very good attendance. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mount Morris, New York.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. As fine a picture as has been produced in many a day. A heavy snow storm kept the crowd away. With good advertising any small town can make out on this one. Used threes, slides and bills, with good attendance. Town of 2,800; draw mostly working people. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WEDDING BELLS. Star, Constance Talmadge. Very good Talmadge picture. This is the favorite star here and the picture was very pleasing. Used ones, threes, sixes, window cards. Attendance was very poor, but no fault of the picture. Town of 1,400; draw small town and country people. Admission twenty-five cents. Tom Marksby, for Knight Brothers, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

WHITE SHOULDERS. (5,966 feet). Star, Katherine MacDonald. Best picture she has been seen in so far. Regular advertising brought good attendance. City of 40,000; draw family trade. Admission 25 to 75. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight From the Shoulder aims to serve all exhibitors. If there is any way humanly possible to make it serve more fully, sing out!

The only way to get full co-operation is for us to understand each other.

Tell me what you miss and I'll do my utmost to fill your needs. I can't guess them all, but when I know them I have something to work on.

Mr. Miller of the Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio, scribbled a note to the effect that we were not getting enough late reports. We got after it and they are certainly coming in and they will come in faster, for the boys have never fallen down on a request yet.

Now Carlisle A. Anglemire thinks it would help get rid of the mutilated print nuisance if every report carried a statement of condition of film. Put it in, everybody! If the print is good it will boost a conscientious exchange manager; if the print is punk—the boys will know what to look out for. VAN.

Fox

ARABIA (TOM MIX IN ARABIA). (4,448 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This one is a little better than "Do and Dare," but unless this star demands Western pictures they will most assuredly kill him. "Arabia" is not a Western. Used ones, threes, sixes, slide, pulling good attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood type. General admission 10-22, special 15-30. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,400 feet). Star, John Gilbert. The usual Sheik picture; when you have seen one you have seen all. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ARABIAN LOVE. (4,400 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A splendid picture. Almost comes up with "The Sheik." Book this and advertise well and you can rest assured your patrons will go away pleased. I'd say would stand advanced admission. Used photos, threes, ones. Good attendance. Town of 400; draw common small town types. Admission 10-20. J. I. McCarty, Majestic Theatre, Charleston, Tennessee.

CALVERT'S VALLEY. (4,416 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Fair picture; pleased everybody. Regular advertising. Good attendance. Town of 1,800; draw mixed class. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good; lots of action and will please a hundred per cent. If we could only buy them without taking the other "junk." Used billboards on this; good attendance. Small town draw, in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

CHASING THE MOON. (5,092 feet). Star, Tom Mix. If you want speed and action, get this one. Film condition bad. Rental fair. But it sure gives 'em thrills. Usual advertising gave good attendance. Town of 1,100; draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. There was a time when we did capacity on this star, but not any more. Losing very fast. Too many cheap pictures. Poor advertising angles. Poor attendance. Big city. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Played this on a Saturday night and it "fitted in" fine. It's full of action and the comedy is not neglected. A good program picture that you should surround with real short subjects if you play to a discriminating audience. For instance, I filled in with Pathe News, Topics of the Day and Screen Snapshots, and did a nice business. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists. Very good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FAST MAIL. (6 reels). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Wild and woolly! Nothing to rave over, yet not so bad. The posters showed what the picture would be like and they weren't disappointed. If your people like stories with plenty of action, give them this one. Used posters, heralds and street stunt. Fair attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 1,400. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Stars, Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone. Only fair as to entertainment and very poor in drawing power. However, had I bought it right, would be glad I had played it. Lost a little on this one. Fox makes some good programs and some good "Big" ones, but the medium stuff doesn't go here. Used newspaper and lobby. Poor attendance. Admission for adults 25-50, depending on day and feature. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Stars, Estelle Taylor, Lewis Stone. Good picture, although not for children. Used regular advertising. Had fair attendance. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

JUST TONY. (5,033 feet). Star, Tom Mix, features horse "Tony." Here is one that my patrons raved over. It pleases them all whether they like Mix or not. Used lobby and six sheets. Good attendance. Small town draw. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

JUST TONY. (5,033 feet). Star, Tom Mix, features horse 'Tony." One of the very best high class Western dramas we have had. This picture drew a different type of business from the usual Western and they all boosted it. The work of the horse in this is a marvel in direction. Had excellent attendance. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MAN SIZE. (4,316 feet). Star, William Russell. This picture is very good and will take well where the audience likes this kind. Did not do much for me for the reason that my patrons want something up to date. Used regular advertising with fair attendance. Paul I. Grimes, Strand Theatre, Salisbury, North Carolina.

NERO. (11,500 feet). All star, foreign cast. This is a marvellous spectacle picture that pleased most of the people. The big scenes had our people gasping and the massacre of the Christians almost stampeded them. Best house we have run to this year. Film in good condition. Used threes, ones, cards, photos, newspaper two weeks. Great attendance, full house. Town of 3,500; draw working people from shoe factory, etc. Admission, children, ten cents; adults, twenty-five cents, regularly; for this picture it was ten cents more on both classes. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Fair program picture. Put a good comedy with it and it will get by. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 3,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. F. P. Werner, Queen Theatre, Trinity, Texas.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Not as good a drawing card as "Shirley of the Circus," but the picture pleased and you can boost it. Town of 7,125; draw miners and railroad men. Admission 10-30. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very pleasing picture. Advertised with posters, photos and slides, to fair attendance. City of 30,000. Draw workers and small merchant class. Admission 10-17. Walter Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

QUEENIE. (5,174 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. As usual, Shirley was good in this picture and the audiences were pleased. Very good attendance and no kicks registered. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE SCUTTLERS. (6 reels). Star, William Farnum. A good picture, a good story; but Farnum pictures are too slow in action to take well here. Used slides, ones, 11x14s. Fair attendance. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

STRENGTH OF THE PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. A good program picture, well liked by at least 95 per cent of the audience. Usual advertising gave fair attendance. Town of 2,800; draw working class. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WESTERN SPEED. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A picture with enough comedy and Western stuff to suit almost everyone. Eileen Percy and "Shorty" are good in support. Used ones, threes, photos, newspaper, and had good attendance. Smith Read, Patriot Theatre, DeKalb, Texas.

WEST OF CHICAGO. (4,694 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good Western. Used regular advertising. Good attendance. Town of 1,800; draw mixed type. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

WHILE JUSTICE WAITS. (4,762 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A fast moving Western with plenty of excitement. Story is real interesting. Photography fine. On five reels. Usual advertising yielded good attendance. Town of 7,000; draw general class. Admission 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? (8,361 feet). Star cast. Absolutely the best Fox Special this year. Title went against it here. Many of my patrons said it was the best picture they had ever seen. Advertise this strong. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? (8,361 feet). Star cast. Your printed form requests the star of the various films; well, you can't prove it by me—who is the star in this one. After careful observation I noticed no one in particular and there isn't a name in the cast that means a nickel at the box office. My advice on this, if you're not sewed up with a play-'em-all contract, is to keep away from the sobster. It wasn't thought to be entertainment here, and we get enough of the stern realities of life right here without tear compelling stuff on the screen. This is a picture of location; if they like this type, feed it to them; they don't want it here. As a production there is nothing startling about it and there isn't a chance on earth to call this a Special outside of the exchanges. Used heralds, mailing list and usual photos. What attendance did come saturated their handkerchiefs. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

YOSEMITE TRAIL. (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. The usual Farnum picture. Nothing to brag about, but should please sixty per cent at least. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

YOUTH MUST HAVE LOVE. (4,368 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. I guess some day they will turn out to see this star, here, but they haven't decided as yet. This one in particular is good, but her pictures fail to draw. Used ones, three, slide. Poor attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Mr. Schutz Has a New Use for Reports!

Straight From the Shoulder helps you get picture tips, wises you up on the good stuff and keeps you away from the other stuff. But here comes Adolph Schutz, of the Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico, with an idea that shows not only his enthusiasm but his good common sense as well. Look it over!

"In my advertising on 'To Have and to Hold' I used Straight from the Shoulder Reports on the screen! They help. Try them!"

Ever think of that? Mr. Schutz is a man of ideas. Naturally it's going to make people swing your way to see on the screen that some other audience has voted strong for this picture or that one coming to your theatre. Book from this dependable tip department and use it to give your audience the "inside angle." They'll like it.

Goldwyn

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). In cast, Helen Chadwick, Claire Windsor, Pat O'Malley. I put this picture over with a Fashion Show. It is a very good picture of its kind, but not the kind of a picture you would expect at the price I paid. They caught me asleep when I signed that contract. Used newspapers, slide, photos. Fair attendance. Drew general type in town of 2,000. Admission, usually 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). In cast, Helen Chadwick, Claire Windsor, Pat O'Malley. A very good picture; rather disappointed in the attendance, but then I played it during Lent. Buy it and buy it right and you can get some profit, but that's all in the game. Rest assured enough will be asked. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists returned fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DOUBLING FOR ROMEO. (5 reels). Star, Will Rogers. A very good Rogers picture and sure to please most of 'em. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HONEST HUTCH. Star, Will Rogers. A very good comedy-drama which pulled fair business with many good remarks passed. Regular advertising drew fair attendance. Mining town; draw laboring class. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Stars, Helen Chadwick, Richard Dix. A good picture, but I paid too much for it. Not a Special as they claim it. Did not draw second night. Lost money. Used heralds, photos, newspaper. Attendance rotten. Admission for this 15-35. Pull townspeople in town of 600. E. A. Oestern, Lyric Theatre, New Albin, Iowa.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Stars, Helen Chadwick, Richard Dix. Very good. Print was in bad shape, and has been cut to pieces. Pleases everybody. Used lobby and newspaper. Good attendance. City of 19,000. Admission 10-35. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

SIN FLOOD. (6,500 feet). Stars, Helen Chadwick, Richard Dix. A very pleasing production, but another in which the title maens nothing to the average theatre-goer. The story of a reformer among crooks. Of course, the picture carries a good moral lesson. Advertising slants fair. Poor attendance. Town of 7,400; draw better class. Admission 10-17-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Hodkinson

DWELLING PLACE OF LIGHT. Star cast. Very good drama, with a double lesson, which went over good, although a little old.

Extra advertising, using postal cards, six, three, ones, photos. Mining town; draw laboring class. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

FREE AIR. (5,600 feet). A very good picture; one that will appeal to most any audience. Posters and cards, for fair attendance. Town of 1,200. Chas. F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

RIDERS OF THE DAWN. Really not what we expected. Too rough all the way through. Too much killing. Some of the roughnecks liked it real well, but did not go over with the average. Action is fine, but too much is too much. Played this with Keaton in "The Boat," which was fine. Used heralds, mailing list, ones, three. Attendance good considering the extremely cold weather. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

SLIM SHOULDERS. (6,050 feet). Star, Irene Castle. Nothing extra. For me, not worth what the exchange gets for it. Will please about seventy per cent. Used twice usual advertising for fair attendance. Draw regular small town class. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

SLIM SHOULDERS. (6,050 feet). Star, Irene Castle. Some liked it, others didn't. In my estimation it was good entertainment, but will only do for a one day run and at regular admission. Used ones, threes, sixes, heralds, photos, slide. Good attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SLIM SHOULDERS. (6,050 feet). Star, Irene Castle. A good feature which pleased nearly all. Some complained that the "Fashion Revue" advertised on heralds failed to materialize, although the star was well dressed. Advertising was usual for Specials. Fair attendance. Farming community of 1,000. Admission 10-30, 20-40 on specials. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

Metro

CONQUERING POWER. (5,500 feet). Stars, Rodolph Valentino, Ellen Terry. Play it as a program picture, not a Special and don't bank too much on Valentino. Will please about eighty per cent of audiences. Used lobby, heralds, window cards and newspaper. Fair attendance. Small town, county seat and surroundings. David Chait, Palace Theatre, Flemington, New Jersey.

FASCINATION (7,940 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Good picture and star well liked. Should make you money if bought right. Used heralds, slide, six and one sheets. Very good attendance. Draw town and country, town of about 2,000. Admission 10-25. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

FACE BETWEEN. (5 reels). Star, Bert Lytell. A good program picture that holds interest quite well. Small town; draw general patronage. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A snappy title and good bits of comedy, but very draggy in places. No, it didn't break any records. Advertising slants—Irving S. Cobb, star also. Fair attendance. Town of 8,000; draw working element. Generally admission is 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A nice program picture that will please; not as good as they claim it is. You have Irving Cobb's name here as the author and can get a lot of publicity; but if you promise too much you may regret it. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists. Pretty good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

"Polly" and Reform

POLLY OF THE FOLLIES (F. N., 6,137 feet). Great for us. If any of you exhibitors have a Sunday closing fight on, grab this! It sure shows up the reformers. We have such a fight on here and it worked in just right. Played in First National week. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

FORGET ME NOT. (6 reels). Stars, Bessie Love, Gareth Hughes. A nice little picture that's inclined to be "sobby." Well produced and a good picture when all is said and done. Here they'd rather laugh than gulp, so let that be taken into consideration. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists, gave fairly good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOLDEN GIFT. (6 reels). Star, Alice Lake. A splendid little program picture that failed to get us any business. Will please if you can get them in. Alice Lake never did draw for me. Used ones, threes, photos, slide. Poor attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

HANDS OF NARA. (6,000 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. Fairly good picture; nothing extra. Used regular advertising. Fair attendance. Town of 6,500; draw all types. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

JAZZMANIA. (8,000 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Star was never more pleasing and entertaining than in this. It is a story of steppers and scepters, of saxophones and sovereigns, of cornets and coronets. A picture worth while and should please any audience, anywhere. Advertised with newspaper, billboards, window cards and lobby. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JAZZMANIA. (8,000 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Action, dancing, with comedy now and then. A typical Mae Murray picture; not the best, nor her worst—but if you can get it without parting with your right eye—buy it. You know what to say of "Mae." She can dance, wear clothes (you don't need to say how much) and they come and see her, also the "curves." Candidly the picture pleased here. It won't stand any severe dissection, but you won't go wrong, either, playing it. Advertised with photos, heralds, mailing list and other usual accessories. Patrons are health seekers and tourists. Attendance good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

KISSES. (4,300 feet). Star, Alice Lake. Very nice little offering with lots of funny situations, but this doesn't mean anything. We lacked $2.50 of taking in film rental. For us, no more Lakes after this. Used ones, threes, sixes and slide. Poor attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor who created role in stage play. Excellent audience picture. Pleased all. Everyone entertained. Made no money, however, as rental was too high. Buy it, however, if you can buy it right. Town of 8,000; draw working element. Admission 10-30. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star cast. Rex Ingram production. A perfect gem. As fine a piece of work as one often sees. Lewis Stone and Robert Edeson give magnificent performances; Alice Terry is a dream of loveliness. Entire cast is splendid and the production flawless. A distinct triumph for Rex Ingram, but not a big box office asset. Advertising slants, the novel, production, cast, Rex Ingram. Only fair attendance. City of 14,000; draw merchants, clerks, farmers. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). All star cast. Good audience picture. Patrons all satisfied. Business good. Grade it 85 per cent. Very good attendance. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Star cast, includes Lewis Stone. Very good but failed to pull for me. Good direction; wonderful settings. Some of the patrons said it was "rotten," while others said it was excellent. Pleased about forty per cent here. Can't put this one over in small town. Used extra advertising with poor results. Town of 2,500, draw from all classes. Admission 10 to 55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. Lewis Stone, Barbara La Marr and Ramon Navarro are all good drawing cards here. Had rain both days or would have stood them up. Used newspaper campaign and window displays with fair results. Town of 6,500, draw from all types. Admission 10-25. Wm. H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

TURN TO THE RIGHT. (8,000 feet). Alice Terry in star cast. Mighty good comedy drama. Pleased a hundred per cent. Had mighty cold weather for showing. Used ones, threes, twenty-fours, window cards. Good attendance. Town of 1,700; draw town and country class. Admission 10-25 and 15-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, Sheridan, Indiana.

WOMAN'S HATE. Star, Alice Lake. Alice is well liked here, but nobody cared to see this picture. Very poor house. J. M. Vidinha, New Mill Theatre, Eleele, Kauai, Hawaii.

WOMAN'S HATE. Star, Alice Lake. Not the best, but a good picture. Regular advertising. Fair attendance. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

YOUTH TO YOUTH. (6,900 feet). Star, Billie Dove. Miss Dove is new here, but is the coming star. Everybody liked her. A well acted story. Used lobby, newspaper, programs. Good attendance. Draw mixed class in good sized city. Admission 10-30. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

YOUTH TO YOUTH. (6,900 feet). Star, Billie Dove. Not cared for here. They came out pretty well for the matinee, but stayed home with a vengeance at night—and that's the answer. Usual advertising. Poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Paramount

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. You can't beat this picture. It will please any type of an audience. We played to a nice business. I showed it at both my theatres in Del Norte and Monte Vista and every one liked it. David Hess, Princess Theatre, Del Norte, Colorado.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Excellent. Good drawing power and a very entertaining picture. Well liked by a small town audience. Played it two days; second day much better than the first. Used lobby, lithos, newspaper and street man. Good attendance. Town of 4,500; draw mixed classes. Admission 10-20, 17-28. William L. Boulware, Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio.

BACK PAY. Star, Seena Owens. Had they put this one in five reels it would have gone over much better. A splendid story that holds interest throughout, with the exception of the blind scene; this part is too long drawn out. Used ones, threes, photos, slide. Good attendance. Town of 4,200; draw neighborhood type. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. (4,918 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. This picture is not at all bad and is sold at a very equitable figure. We did not do much business, but this was because there is much sickness locally. Has weak advertising angles. Poor attendance. Town of 7,100; draw better class. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

CRIMSON CHALLENGE. (4,942 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. This is a good Western picture. Star showing up good. Usual advertising brought good attendance. City of 10,000; draw from middle class people. Admission twenty-five cents. Bert Jackson, house manager, for Daniel Buss, Star Theatre, Tonawanda, New York.

DAUGHTER OF LUXURY. (4,538 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Best picture starring this lady that Paramount has released. Pleased all because it was not so heavy as "The Ordeal" and "Borderland" and a whole lot better than either. Only praise for this one. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DAUGHTER OF LUXURY. (4,538 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. This and Buster Keaton's "Electric House" made a better than average entertainment. Feature short. Patrons seemed to like it. It's not a picture you would hear much about, either good or bad. Used newspapers only. Fair attendance. City of 17,999; draw family trade. Matinee admission 10-17, evening 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

GREEN TEMPTATION. (5,000 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good program picture. When Paramount wants to give the exhibitor good pictures they can do it. Why don't they make more like this? The picture will stand back of any advertising you can give it. Regular advertising drew good attendance. Town of 2,000, both whites and blacks. Draw all sorts. Admission 10-20. F. C. Butt, Liberty Theatre, Montezuma, Georgia.

GREEN TEMPTATION. (5,000 feet). Star, Betty Compson. For me only a fair picture. No good comments from audiences on this picture. I can't say much for it. Might go over in some other towns. Used posters and slides. Fair attendance in town of 4,500, drawing better class. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HEART SPECIALIST. Poor; nothing to it but the price they charge. Advertising: ones, threes, photos, slide, newspapers. A. W. Sage, Masonic Theatre, What Cheer, Iowa.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Stars, Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan, Raymond Hatton. This is a splendid picture—but!—it didn't draw. We dropped money on it in plenty; however, it is well done and Joy reveals her great possibilities as an actress. We always knew she was going to arrive. She has, and she is fine, but it was just a hundred per cent too high for us to make a penny. Business is rotten in the small towns; we are just breaking even when the weather is good and going behind when the weather and roads are bad. This is the case with all the shows around this part of Indiana, but the good weather is ahead and maybe the turnouts will be better. If not, there is going to be some adjustments on film prices asked and fought for. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

First On These

MESSAGE OF EMIL COUE (Educational). Very dry lecture but as a lecture it would do; but not interesting to patrons coming to the theatre for entertainment. Well advertised. Had half a house. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

PLUNDER (Pathe-Pearl White). The first episode leads to the opinion that this star is in her true element again and that this serial will do well. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH (Fox-All Star). This is one that's got "Over the Hill" beat forty ways. Will get the money anywhere. It's a real, human story. L. A. Hoover, Gem Theatre, Durango, Colorado.

TRUXTON KING (Fox-Gilbert). A pleasing picture, well executed and good photography. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE CHRISTIAN (Goldwyn-Star Cast). For us was a big picture. Count it as one of the best this season. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

PILGRIM (F. N.-Chaplin). A good man gone wrong—this might do no end of harm to the industry—should not be run in a strong church community. It is not original and not funny. Tries to make fun of a church service and fails. Any self-respecting exhibitor is better off without it. The Ministerial Union here passed resolutions condemning it. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Stars, Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan, Raymond Hatton. All the seduction of the Orient, the tang of the storm-swept sea, the picturesque charm of Old Salem in the glorious clippership days. It's all in this beautiful romance. It's a masterpiece beautifully played and very entertaining, and a very clever picture, picturesque and exquisite in every detail and appointment; but the question is, which girl wins your heart—lovely Leatrice Joy as the charming Chinese bride of the bold young American who saved her life, or pretty Jacqueline Logan as the Yankee 'girl he left behind him," ready to die rather than give him up? The question is, "Who?" William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Bert Lytell. Just what is claimed for it; one really great dramatic picture, perhaps the best crook drama since "The Miracle Man." Company great, particularly May MacAvoy. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). In cast are Betty Compson, Lytell, MacAvoy. Here's something to raise your voice about. It's got anything and everything stopped for sheer thrills, excitement and suspense. The stars are excellent, while May MacAvoy's work is wonderful. Usual advertising, also extra lobby displays. Great attendance. City of 44,000; draw mixed type. Admission 10-17-20-25. Walter C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

LOVES OF PHARAOH. (7,352 feet). Star, Emil Jannings. Over patrons' heads; however, a wonderful production just the same. Those who have studied Ridpath's History, raved over it. If any of your patrons want a massive production, give them this one. Used 22x28, threes, ones, insert. Fair attendance. Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, South Dakota.

LOVE SPECIAL. (4,855 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Fair. Clean. Would probably be more completely satisfactory in any other kind of community than mine. Real railroad men see too many flaws. Drew well. Advertising slant—pushed railroad angle here. Good attendance in small town pulling from railroad men, Americans. H. G. Braden, "School" Theatre, Avery, Idaho.

MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good of its kind. Superlative cast that covers up a fault or two of the plot. We did well with it for the price paid. Used special advertising. Good attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan; Leatrice Joy in cast. A picture that escaped censure. It has plenty of variety if nothing else, and a good acting company of players. I feared this for the critics said some fierce things about it. True, it's a little improbable, but they liked it well enough here not to complain and that's a good enough sign for me. Exploit Tom Meighan and Leatrice Joy—she's a comer. Usual advertising to health seekers and tourists brought good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MANSLAUGHTER. (9,061 feet). Star cast, with Thomas Meighan. Cecil DeMille production. We were well pleased with this picture and every exhibitor should run it if priced right. Excellent photography and well directed. Used ones, threes, papers, heralds, photos. Good attendance. Town of 2,400; draw family trade. Admission 10-25. E. T. Dunlap, Auditorium Theatre, Hawarden, Iowa.

THE OUTCAST. (7,300 feet). Star, Elsie Ferguson. A wonderfully well done picture that lacked the quality to please either the men or the women. The story did not appeal at all and while Miss Ferguson's ability as an actress is unquestioned, the picture went flat. If I expected to make any money I would not again buy it. Arthur B. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

OVER THE BORDER. (6,837 feet). Only fair. Did not please more than seventy-five per cent. Story lacks interest. Good attendance. Regular small town; draw general type. Admission fifteen cents. Dr. J. E. Guibord, National Theatre, Grand Mere, Quebec, Canada.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). All star cast. Here is a picture that pleased them all. As they came out they said it was the best ever. Acting was great. Photography was excellent. Play it. David Hess, Iris Theatre, Monte Vista, Colorado.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan always gives them a good, clean type of picture. People went away pleased. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, local paper. Fairly good attendance.

Tom Marksby, for F. M. Knight, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

ROOKIE'S RETURN. (5 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. Fair picture, but old. Film in poor shape. Used one, three, stills, newspaper, handbills, slide. Admission 15-35. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre, Kadoka, South Dakota.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. Failed to arrive for first day's showing, consequently we could form little opinion of its drawing power. It is nothing to rave about as a picture, but gave satisfaction. Those who formerly idolized Reid seem to come to see him still after his death. Class this as an average good attraction. Advertising slant, Reid, Lila Lee, balance of cast. Fair attendance. City of 14,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THIRTY DAYS. (7,788 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. This picture does not compare with some of the other releases of this star, but he plays a character where nothing of the strenuous is called for, a part somewhat along the lines of his interpretation in "Clarence." I mention this because some exhibitors and critics thought that because Mr. Reid didn't gallop all over the screen he wasn't playing the part and that he was so very quiet in the film because of his illness. Now, then, my advice is to play this; don't make rash promises, but put it in on a night when your chances are good for average business and you will find he'll pull them in. It's not a continuous laugh, but it's good entertainment. Advertising slant, I ran this line and made it prominent—"Farewell performance of this beloved screen star." Good attendance of health seekers and tourists. Usual advertising. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Compson, Lytell. A splendid picture drew well and pleased everybody. You will make no mistake in booking it. Town of 1,600; draw high class patrons. Admission 10-25-50. L. M. Zug, Rialto Theatre, Jerome, Idaho.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Compson, Lytell. It truly does justice to the book from which it takes its name. Exhibitors should get behind this and give the patrons the exact truth concerning it: the picture will back up anything truthfully said about it. Of course, as usual, they want plenty of money for it. Advertising angles are exceptionally good. Attendance very poor. Town of 7,400; draw better class. Admission 10-17-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Stars, Compson, Lytell. Boost this to the sky; if your people like real pictures. Here is one that is a real Special and will stand all you can say about it. If you haven't played it, do so. Don't be afraid of it. Used extra heavy advertising with fair attendance. Town of 2,000; draw general type. Admission except Specials 10-15. Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Illinois.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. While it rather flopped at the box office, it seemed to give good satisfaction. The story is improbable, but no fault can be found with the staging, direction, acting or star. We made no money on it as we paid too much for it, but we bought it before the "Yellow Journals" started to ride Valentino. They have hurt him some. Advertising slant, star, if still popular. Fair attendance. City of 14,000; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Liberty Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. (Report repeated as impossible to separate and we won't edit.) "Grandma's Boy" is fine, "Dr. Jack" is very good. Both pictures will please, especially "Grandma's Boy," if bought right; but they made us pay more money for "Dr. Jack," too much for what it would bring in. We advertised very heavy but it took all we took in to pay film rental and overhead. E. H. Elkin, Palace Theatre, Hico, Texas.

A Special Report

William Noble of Oklahoma City comes in with a tip on a private showing that will interest those wanting news on the late ones.

SAFETY LAST (Pathe-Lloyd). Harold Lloyd's latest and best feature comedy. Strictly up to date and extremely pleasing. Perfect in every detail and a picture so good that it would seem impossible to improve upon it. A hair-raising and thrilling picture, full of human interest from start to finish, with a pretty romance running through it. Harold climbed the front of a twelve-story stone business building with the sang froid of a steeple jack and the terror of a first timer expressed indelibly in every move, as the climb was made from dire necessity and not from choice. There was no other way than to climb, climb, climb! The picture was specially screened before the Oklahoma Theatre Owners' and Managers' Association and the verdict of the entire audience was that the picture was a masterpiece, the peer of most and inferior to none. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Selznick

DE LUXE ANNIE. (7,000 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. If Norma goes good in your house, get this one. It's a reissue, but as good as a lot of newer so-called specials. Pleased great majority. Used advertising and good attendance. Typical small town of 3,000. Admission 15-20. A. LaValla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

A MAN'S HOME. (6 reels). Star cast. Would have been a good picture if I had received all the film; but only received about half of it. All cut to pieces. Used one, three, six, 11x15, slides. Fair attendance on bad night. Town of 1,100; draw general type. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

United Artists

IRON TRAIL. (6 reels). Selected cast. Would have gone big, but worst print I have received in ten years here. Fair attendance. Town of 4,000, draw family trade. Admission, 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. (9,984 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. Not as good as some of her previous pictures. Men said nothing but the women all liked it. Think this feature is too long; gets draggy. Scrap in the last reel is a scream. Used heralds, slides and extra billboards. Good attendance. Draw in town of 800 and country patronage. Admission varies. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

LOVE FLOWER. (D. W. Griffith). Stars, Carol Dempster, Richard Barthelmess. A good, logical story; but D. W. Griffith's name doesn't mean anything to my audience, so people didn't come out for this. Used regular advertising and had poor attendance. Charles Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

LOVE LIGHT. Star, Mary Pickford. Some liked it, others not. I personally did not care much for it. They are only good for a big, fat rental price to me. Advertised same as usual. Town of 1,500; draw all kinds. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. As old as the hills but very good. I struck a bad print. If Fairbanks himself had attended this show he would ask them to reduce film rental on "junk" film. Used six, three, one, lobby, slide. Very good attendance. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Universal

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. This is a 100 per cent picture for any exhibitor. Pleased everyone. Mayo is a favorite. Film was in good condition. Book it, and do not be afraid to boost it. Advertised with ones, slides. Very good attendance. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

BLIND WIVES. (9 reels). Von Stroheim production. A high class picture for high class trade; will not appeal to the poor class. A big picture for the big town. Good attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,229. Admission 10-20 regular, 10-30 special. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,508 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A lurid melodrama in a new field for exploitation—a powder factory—and affords the chance for a wonderful explosion scene. A story of a misunderstood hothead that has merit all the way. City of 15,000; draw general class. Admission fifteen cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

THE FLIRT. (8 reels). Star cast. One of the best pictures Universal ever made. Well directed and well acted and very pleasing; should please any audience, anywhere. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE FLIRT. (8 reels). Star cast. A scintillating comedy-drama that delights all classes. It is a brilliant story, not gorgeously but adequately staged. Cast is generally excellent. At a fair price it will prove more than satisfactory (we paid too much for it). Advertising angle, the name of Tarkington is best asset. Only fair attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Pleased a good crowd. Very clever comedy. Subtitles are very good. Good attendance in town of 4,229, drawing neighborhood class. Admission 10-20 regular, 10-30 special. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA. (4,658 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Here's a knockout for Gibson. Seemed to please all. Lots of laffs and a few fights, and action galore. Usual advertising gave very good attendance. Town of 4,034; draw small town, loggers, lumberjacks, etc. Admission 10-35-50. Marsden & Noble, Noble Theatre, Marshfield, Oregon.

THE FLIRT. (8 reels). Star cast. Here is the picture, boys, that everyone should play. Played it in the worst storm Cicero ever experienced in years; but pulled good crowd. As I didn't give Universal mortgage on my theatre I made a little money. Used posters, program, slide, photos. Had fair attendance. City of 30,000; draw laboring class. Admission 10-17. Walter Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star, House Peters. This one is all you would want to please any audience. Your people are sure to like it. It has sure got the pull that they like. Used ones, three, six, 11x14, slide, window cards. Fair attendance, very cold weather. Town of 1,100; draw miners and railroaders. Admission 10-20. T. J. Hickes, Liberty Theatre, Saxton, Pennsylvania.

HUMAN HEARTS. (6,350 feet). Star, House Peters. Seldom have I had such unusual praise. A No. 1 picture, although I lost money (bad weather). Heavy advertising, handbills, newspaper. Pull family trade. Attendance rotten. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good melodrama and will please the average audience. Good racing scenes and fair story. I wouldn't want to pay too much. Used billboards and newspaper. Town of 6,000; fair attendance. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

NIGHT RIDERS. (5,750 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A good program picture. While this was not enthused over, heard no kicks. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

THE OPEN WIRE. Star, Eileen Sedgwick. A very good program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

POWER OF A LIE. (4,910 feet). Star, Mabel Julienne Scott. Nice program picture; a little above average. Not a big picture, but we did not pay a big price for this. Advertising slant, cast is very good. Had fair attendance. Draw neighborhood class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WILD HONEY. (4,093 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Just exactly what review in Moving Picture World said: Some very fine drama. Some of the worst clap-trap ever put in a picture. Some liked it at that. Heavy, morbid stuff. Priscilla Dean never got over with us; sameness all the time. Flood scene good, but not nearly as good as in "When the Clouds Roll By" or "The Sagebusher." At top of one slide inscription said, "You'll never forget this scene as long as you live." I want to forget it right away. Scenes in wilderness very suggestive; when will they stop it? I didn't mention in advertising anything but flood scene; am glad I didn't. Fair attendance. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

WILD HONEY. (4,093 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Ran this on Sunday to a pleased audience and a large one. All paper on this subject should be used as it contains many thrilling scenes. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Vitagraph

DIVORCE COUPONS. (5,249 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Good program picture. Better than some so-called specials. Draw transient and neighborhood patronage. A. W. Sage, Masonic Theatre, What Cheer, Iowa.

FLAME OF THE NORTH. (7,130 feet). Stars, H. B. Walthall, Pauline Starke. Everybody had boosted this in the reports, so I boosted it to my patrons; but for some reason it failed to please the majority. Print good. Used threes, ones, heralds, mailing list, photos, tack cards. Good attendance. Town of 1,364; draw general class. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas.

HEART OF MARYLAND. (One of the few Civil War pictures being distributed.) This is a fair picture from an educational standpoint as it portrays the customs, mannerisms and mode of dress of the Rebellion period in an entertaining and accurate style. Used one sheets. Rural patronage. Attendance fair. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas. (Came in after we said they'd be closed till airdome season; glad to be made out wrong if it means more reports.—Ed.)

RESTLESS SOULS. (5 reels). Star, Earle Williams. Pleasing entertainment. Good program picture. Used six, three, one, slide. Fair attendance. Big city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS. (6,100 feet). Special cast. A fairly good special, but not one to rave over. No compliments and no complaints. Used special lithos, regular mailing list and newspaper. Fair attendance. Farming community of 1,000. Regular admission 10-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

YOU NEVER KNOW. (4,867 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Good show. Book it. Williams is good. Coy Watson, Jr., and his dog extra good. Used six, one, newspapers. Mixed patronage. Good attendance. L. P. Stubblefield, Hartsville Theatre, Hartsville, Tennessee.

Here Are Some Late Ones

NINETY AND NINE (Vitagraph-Warner Baxter, Colleen Moore). A melodrama of the olden days and done in olden day style; plausibility, none; possibility, hardly any. Summed up, for me it's eight reels of film ending with a steam engine dashing through a forest fire. Photography very good, acting ditto, direction and story very faulty. You can take this picture and play it on a Saturday because it's wild melodrama; if you have a particular audience, be careful. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS (Preferred-Star Cast). Good picture, well directed; scenic beauty, superb cast. Well connected story. Made money. N. L. Royster, Alcazar Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

JAZZMANIA (Metro-Mae Murray). Good picture for better class. Two reels too long. Seven reels is long enough for pictures. J. H. Marchand, Jewel Theatre, Helena, Arkansas.

FURY (F. N.-Barthelmess). This picture outdoes "Tol'able David," probably on account of Dorothy Gish in cast. Business good. Julius Lamm, Shakespeare Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

NINETY AND NINE (Vitagraph-Warner Baxter, Colleen Moore). Good old-time melodrama that goes over. Get behind it and the public will respond at the box office. Use Vitagraph's trailer showing racing train. Big city, neighborhood class. Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield Theatre, Chicago, Illinois.

GOSSIP (Universal-Gladys Walton). Good program picture; Capital and Labor theme. Comments from my patrons very good. Walter Babitz, Grant Theatre, Cicero, Illinois.

Comedies

ALL WET (Fox-St. John). A splendid two-reel comedy that kept the audience in good humor. St. John has never disappointed. Used ones and threes with good attendance in town of 4,200, drawing neighborhood trade. Admission, 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BAKERY (Vitagraph-Semon). One of the best comedies we've shown for a long time. Larry is a knockout here. Have 1,400 people; two shows drawing small town and country. Admission, 25 cents. Tom Marksby, Opera House, Blenheim, Ontario, Canada.

CENTURY COMEDIES (Universal). For me, far below the average and getting worse. Looks like nothing but kid comedies. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

ELECTRIC HOUSE (First Natl.-Keaton). A trick comedy that made a hit. A little different from any Keaton has made and got over big. The mechanical stuff in it is excellent and very cleverly worked out. City of 15,000; draw general class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

HIS WIFE'S SON (Fox-Sunshine). A two-reel comedy with lots of pep. As a rule the majority of Sunshines are good. Used ones and threes on it. Good attendance. Neighborhood draw in town of 4,200. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

THE LANDLORD (Fox-Sunshine). A fairly good two-reel comedy that is not up to Fox standard. Some parts very funny, but as a whole not much. Used ones and threes with faiar attendance. Town of 4,800, drawing neighborhood. Admission, 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LARRY SEMON COMEDIES (Vitagraph). You can't go wrong on Semon comedies. I have played them all and am going to play more as they are released. Large city, draw family trade. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

LOOK OUT BELOW (Pathe-Lloyd). A very good Lloyd picture; laughs every second. But in very poor condition. Town of 2,800. Draw all classes for this. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MUD AND SAND (Metro-Stan Laurel). This comedy has some good laughs. If you have shown "Blood and Sand" show this and you will do good. If you haven't shown "Blood and Sand," don't show comedy until you do. Had good attendance in town of 2,500, pulling from all classes. Admission, 15-30, 25-50. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

NEVER WEAKEN (Assoc. Exhib.-Lloyd). A three-reel comedy that kept them roaring. It is a 100 per cent comedy. Draw better class. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

OUR GANG COMEDIES (Pathe). Have shown two of these and they are very good and full of laughs. Town of 7,000, draw general type. Admission, 10-25-35. Jno. W. Creamer, Strand Theatre, Chillicothe, Missouri.

VILLAGE SHEIK (Fox-St. John). This is about the worst St. John comedy that Fox has put out so far. Advertised with programs and newspaper. Good attendance. City of 12,000; draw all classes. Admission changes. Louis Pilosi, Pilosi's Theatre, Old Forge, Pennsylvania.

Serials

ADVENTURES OF ROBINSON CRUSOE (Universal). Star, Harry Myers. A good serial for the kids, but is unneces-

sarily lengthened into eighteen chapters, which makes it drag. Use ones, slides, bills. Fair attendance. Mining village of 1,700. Admission 10-17. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

IN DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL (Universal). Star, Art Acord. Best serial ever run. Everybody pleased. Good attendance. Town of 400. Auditorium Theatre, Holsopple, Pennsylvania.

TIMBER QUEEN (Pathe). Star. Ruth Roland. Best serial we've run in years. Full of pep and action. A dandy drawing card for Saturday nights. Extra attendance in town of 2,850, drawing better class. Use sixes, threes, one, slide, photos. Robert Karsch, Monarch Theatre, Farmington, Missouri.

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). Star, Art Acord. On sixth episode. Not holding up so well. Too much repeating, and for the first time in all my years using U. service I have kick about condition of prints; badly cut down. Advertising slant, get kids interested, dad and mother will come along. Town of 2,500; draw all classes. Fair attendance. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Arkansas.

Short Subjects

MOONLIGHT SONATA (Prizma). One reel. A beautiful novelty providing you have a good pianist concealed to follow special music score. My patrons liked this. Try it some time. Town of 8,000; draw mixed class. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

ONE JUMP AHEAD (Pathe). Star, Leo Maloney. You can't go wrong on Leo Maloney two-reelers. They are the best Westerns on the market. This one went extra good. Lots of action; that's what they want. City of 15,000. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PATHE NEWS. Have tried all the news reels but am back with Pathe. Can't beat it. Best bet in news reels. H. W. Peary, Ogden Theatre, Ogden, Utah.

TEXAS SPHINX (Universal). Star, Harry Carey. Universal boiled down reissue. If you intend to run Carey features, better lay of these reissues; they will kill your feature date, although they are very good. Use three, one, slide, lobby. Fair attendance. Large city; draw all classes. Get ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Straight From the Shoulder is growing fast because sincere exhibitors take an interest in helping their brother exhibitors with tips. You have something to say about the pictures you run. It will be useful to many others. SAY IT ON THE BLANK BELOW.

THIS WIFE BUSINESS (Hodkinson). This is a two-reeler offered with Woman's Home Companion for better films and has possibilities for exploiting. It is hardly a comedy, but it carries a message in a semi-humorous manner that gets over with the audience. A great picture to run where you have a big patronage of women. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

A TRIP THROUGH FILMLAND (Eastman). Free film. If you get a chance to play these free films, grab it! Every one of our patrons enjoyed them, especially the school kids, for their educational value. H. W. Mathers, Morris Run Theatre, Morris Run, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

CUB REPORTER (Goldstone). Star, Richard Talmadge. (5 reels). Weakest of their series so far. This star, given a real story and production, should go good. Fair attendance of family class. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

DESERTED AT THE ALTAR (Goldstone). Special cast. (7 reels). Capacity business for four nights. Picture very good. City of 12,000; draw mixed class. Admission 10-20-30. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

GIRL FROM PORCUPINE (Arrow). Featured cast. (6 reels). Fairly good program picture that gave too much space to unimportant details. Pleased majority, however. Advertising slant, I boosted James Oliver Curwood. Had fair attendance. Typical town of 3,000. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

GOLDEN FLAME (Western Pic. Expl.). Star, Dick Hatton. Good; lots of action. Better than some so-called specials. But one can't get people in on Dick Hatton picture; his pictures all good. You might try him; the prices are right. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

I AM THE LAW (C. C. Burr). Star cast. (6,800 feet). Advertised to the exhibitors as a big special. People went out dissatisfied; said they had seen better pictures for less money. Personally I think it was a real good picture. Used posters, slide, heralds, newspaper to bring very good attendance. Town of 1,200. Charles F. Johnson, Plaza Theatre, Punta Gorda, Florida.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER (Warner Bros.). Star cast. (6,300 feet). The best of the classics so far except "Beautiful and Damned." A picture that pleases. Used special lobby, etc. Good attendance two days. Town of 7,500; draw all classes. Admission 10-25. William H. Mayhew, Broadway Theatre, Cisco, Texas.

MAKING THE GRADE (Western Pic. Expl.). Star, David Butler. (5 reels). Fairly good picture. Played to good house. Used a three, two ones, cards. Town of 2,000; draw residential class. Admission 10-25. W. F. Piland, Victory Theatre, Cairo, Georgia.

RAGS TO RICHES (Warner Bros.). Star, Wesley Barry. (6 reels). Well, if they don't like this one, tell them they had better see a doctor. I held it over for the second day; everyone seemed very much pleased, told me they thought it was great. Drew all classes. Used ten ones, two threes, thousand heralds, photos, slides. Good attendance in bad weather. Town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre, Marvell, Arkansas.

SCHOOL DAYS (Warner Bros.). Star, Wesley Barry. (7,000 feet). A kid picture which had a number of laughs but which did not seem to register very highly. As a special it drew less than was expected. Used special advertising, all kinds. Attendance poor to fair. Farming community of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular, once a week 20-40. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre, Ruleville, Mississippi.

SURE FIRE FLINT (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. (6,000 feet). Here is a dandy. People laughed, and they talked this picture for several days; they're waiting now for "Burn-'Em-Up Barnes." Well advertised, brought good attendance. Town of 1,200; draw town and country. Admission 10-25. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

"Enemies of Women"

Cosmopolitan's Version of Ibanez Novel Magnificent from Every Angle and a Fine Audience Film

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unusually impressive is Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women." It is big in every way. Adapted from a recent novel by Ibanez, the author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," it has as tremendous a theme, and in fact a similar one, the regeneration of characters through the influence of the World War. In this instance it is an ultra-wealthy and dissolute Russian prince and a Russian duchess, who is but little better morally, who are turned from the extreme of selfishness to the heights of service for others.

Produced with apparently absolute disregard for expense, this picture, while to a certain extent lacking in spiritual appeal of "The Four Horsemen," is more spectacular and more beautiful. This applies to the interior sets, which are the work of the celebrated artist, Joseph Urban, responsible for the magnificent sets in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and in this instance he had even greater opportunities for lavishness and gorgeous effects and greater rein for the magnificent artistry. It is also equally true of the exteriors of Paris and Monte Carlo, which were actually filmed in those continental cities. Nothing ever shown on the screen exceeds in scenic beauty the scenes filmed with Monte Carlo as a background.

Against such magnificent backgrounds is laid a story which holds your interest tensely throughout. What is lacking in sympathy for the leading players in the earlier reels is more than made up by the gorgeous spectacles and stirring action; for instance, there is a sabre duel which is undoubtedly the finest and most thrilling ever seen on the stage or screen, presented with unusual realism. And this is but one of the magnificent instances of action. Naturally, the war element is predominant, for it is a story of the war, and the thrills are not confined to posed situations. There are a large number of actual war scenes used. Some may consider there are to many, but Director Crosland has made an excellent selection of these shots culled from scenes preserved as actual government records by Russia, France and other countries, and they are undoubtedly thrilling and serve to carry along the spirit of the picture.

The acting of the picture is superb. No finer selection could have been made than in casting Lionel Barrymore as Prince Lubimoff. He makes him a living character, unpleasant for the most part, but always fascinating. As the Duchess Alicia, Alma Rubens is admirable; it is her best screen portrayal. Particularly compelling is she in her emotional moments. Other players in less important roles, which they portray with the same degree of excellence, are Gareth Hughes, the veteran stage actor; W. H. Thompson, Pedro De Cordoba, Gladys Hullette and William Collier, Jr. The prominence of the supporting cast and their fine character portrayals are thoroughly in keeping with the magnificence of the production.

Prince Lubimoff is shown as a man who collects beautiful women as some men collect porcelain or paintings, and a showmanship feature not to be overlooked is the decidedly unusual beauty of the women in the big scenes. Many of them are from the Ziegfeld Follies.

Great credit is due to Alan Crosland for the manner in which he has directed this production. He has made of it an unusually fine audience picture, which should prove a box-office winner in any type of house. If there is any criticism along this line, it is in the fact that there is a regular deluge of spectacle and action which at times tends to submerge the main theme. However, in its present form the picture is in eleven reels, as presented at the Central Theatre, a Broadway theatrical house, but the producers announce it is not the length in which it will go to exhibitors.

Story

Prince Lubimoff, a wealthy Russian, whose only idea is self-gratification, fights a duel with the Cossack brother of a woman he is accused of having wronged. To escape the czar's enmity, he is rushed out of the country by his friend, the Duchess Alicia. Going to his villa at Monte Carlo, the war broke out, but he nor his associates are not impressed by any obligations to their country or humanity. He thinks only of self as exemplified in the Duchess, whom he won't even admit to himself he loves. Piqued by his belief that she has a youthful lover, he and his associates seclude themselves in their villa and form a group of "Enemies of Women," refusing to see any of that sex. The war causes loss of his feudal estates, but he saves his jewels. The Duchess' supposed lover is really her sixteen-year-old son. He goes to war and she realizes the beauty of sacrifice. Circumstances bring about a duel between the boy, who is shell-shocked, and the Prince during a sensual revel. The boy drops dead as the duel begins, the truth becomes known, and the Prince, the last of his group to succumb, also meets his Gethsemane. Chastened, he goes to war, and uses his wealth and estate to help war's unfortunates. Later he meets Alicia as a Red Cross nurse, and together they resolve to start life anew.

"Modern Marriage"

Bushman-Bayne Return via Novelty Picture—American Releasing Corporation Has Film

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, after barnstorming the country and world in general via the vaudeville stage, return to the screen in a Whitman Bennett novelty production, entitled "Modern Marriage." By a unique arrangement stage and screen were joined in this picture, which the writer saw at its world premiere showing at the Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., Monday afternoon. It is this novel twist which affords the Bushmans an excellent excuse to make personal appearances that jammed the popular Providence theatre, plus the exploitation effort put into the picture by Harry Crull and Matt Rielley. The two last named gentlemen had much to do with the royal reception that was given the two stars on the occasion of their return to the silver sheet, for through their efforts—and theirs alone—the coming of the couple was heralded throughout the southern part of New England so effectively that the house was literally packed all day with enthusiastic movie fans.

The production, it was explained to the writer, was conceived by Mr. Bushman and made along lines that fitted in with his personal appearance, together with his wife and two other actors, who enacted a portion of the screen story on the stage. The novelty is a distinctly good one and certainly doubles the value of "Modern Marriage" as an attraction. The appearance of the star put the picture over with a bang that is missed when the picture itself is run off as a bona-fide screen-play, with the Bushmans confining their efforts entirely on the screen. However, the appearance of Bushman, Bayne and their company probably entails the expenditure of at least $2,200 over film rental—but if your house is big and you can see your way clear on a "nut" of about $5,000—for you'll need all that to exploit the picture, stars' salaries, film rentals, etc.—you want to book "Modern Marriage" as it was shown at the Providence house.

However, from a showman's angle, the return of Bushman and Bayne is worth the investment of any exhibitor. They have been wise in that they have at no time permitted the public to lose sight of them, and their return to the silver sheet is a box office asset, no matter what your view be. In this instance there is something considerably more than the picture to take into consideration. In fact, the picture is secondary.

Providence greeted the pair royally. The picture is 6,331 feet long. As an out-and-out picture it runs about one hour and twenty-two minutes. With the personal appearance it ran about one and a half hours. The stage appearance is cleverly worked up. When the fabric of the story has been woven the film faded out and the curtain, rising, discloses the stage set for the meeting of wife and husband, the latter having learned of his better half's relations with another man. Bushman, as Hugh Varley, proves himself fully capable and takes his audience by surprise, playing with force and restraint, being particularly effective in the emotional scenes.

Miss Bayne is charmingly effective in her work, giving a profound betrayal of a wife whose love for her husband dominated in spite of the shadow of doubt cast by unusual circumstances. The effectiveness of the "spoken picture" was enhanced by a pretentiously luxurious stage setting, an interior of the castle with its Gobelin tapestries and gorgeous Gothic arches. It furnished excellent atmosphere, and when the scene was completed the silver sheet was lowered and the picture faded in again without discomforting the audience in the least and maximizing their interest in the production.

The Bushmans are the centre of attraction, and even when the picture was run without the interference the audience seemed pleased and applauded enthusiastically. As a picture in itself it entertains; as a novelty, with Bushman, Bayne, Zita Moulton and Roland Bottomley appearing personally in the stage scene, it is a knockout. The direction of Lawrence C. Windom was guided by the personal appearance requirements of the couple.

"Modern Marriage" is one picture that nobody can judge in a cold projection room. It's like passing judgment on a "Chu Chin Chow" in a storehouse. You've got to see it—and we saw it as a picture in itself and as a novelty. The real showman will clean up with it. That is our humble opinion gathered from what we saw in a real playhouse, where it was handled by true showmen and criticized by people who know what they want when they plank down their money at the box office.

Story

Hugh Varley receives an anonymous note hinting at the indiscretion of his wife Denise. A friend tells him it is common talk. Already Denise has decided to end her infatuation for Frank Despard and goes to his apartment for her letters. She is refused them by Despard, who escorts her to the outer door, through which Denise sees her husband coming. She slips into an apartment occupied by Cort Maitland, who, in Despard's absence, has stolen upstairs and is rifling his friend's room. The evening papers announce Despard's murder in his apartment by persons unknown, and his valet makes public the fact that Despard was expecting a lady, whose name, however, the servant pretends not to remember. Hugh Varley engages Cort Maitland as his secretary and the latter makes capital of his knowledge of Denise's folly, while the valet offers her letters to Hugh for a price. To protect her Hugh buys them, and from this complicated situation develops a powerful climax, ending in Hugh's discovery of Maitland as the guilty man.

"Three Jumps Ahead"

Splendid Riding and Beautiful Settings in Fox Production for Tom Mix
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Tom Mix gives his admirers the sort of entertainment they like in his new Fox production, "Three Jumps Ahead." Amidst beautiful Western settings the story is laid. It has suspense, much fast riding, a beautiful leading lady and a splendid climax.

A spectacular thrill toward the end shows Mix on his horse, Tony, leaping over a chasm at a magnificent height, just after his enemies have destroyed the bridge. From this act on there is uninterrupted excitement. Mix, who is endeavoring to overtake the stage coach which is carrying an old man to his doom, catches up to the coach, throws the driver down hill, takes the reins and by wild driving eludes his pursuers. The coach falls over a bank and the old man lands finally safely among friends.

The story, as usual in this star's pictures, is interesting only because it affords a chance for effective action. The discovery of the hiding place of a gang of cattle-rustlers starts trouble—and a good deal of action. There are frequent touches of comedy. Alma Bennett is beautiful in a role not especially prominent, as "Three Jumps Ahead" is essentially a man's picture.

"The Town Scandal"

Gladys Walton Successfully Cast in Universal Satire on Blue Law Advocates
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Supported by good material that has been well directed, Gladys Walton offers entertainment not only to her admirers but to film fans generally. Universal has made a clever choice in the story of "The Town Scandal." It is an entertaining expose of purity league advocates, putting their various hypocrisies to interesting use as comedy and drama.

Gladys Walton has a type of part which she always handles knowingly, the role of the show girl. It is suited to her particular art far more than some of her recent characterizations. Jean Crosby, the heroine, is a likable human mixture of worldliness and simplicity. Her adventures in the city where married men from her home town become her ardent suitors are pictured in a way that the majority will find amusing. Her part in the ballet number will of course have an appeal. The back stage atmosphere and stage door episodes are effective because of their bearing on the story.

The travesty on the men who are joy-killers while at home but without scruples when in the big city gives the picture its punch. Any exaggeration seems permissible because it is for comedy effect. The story shows originality and good construction and can be counted upon to entertain.

Story

When Jean Crosby made her hit in a Broadway chorus she dropped back in the old home town, Murphysburg. The Purity League didn't like her—except when its male members made individual trips surreptitiously to Broadway to see what she looked like in tights. Their attitudes changed when they waited at the stage door for Jean. But when Jean turned loose her nimble tongue on the Purity League with the help of her friend, editor of a Murphysburg paper, the excitement was rich and furious.

"The Woman of Bronze"

Drama of Great Emotional Power Screened by Metro for Clara Kimball Young
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Henry Kistaemaecher's emotional drama has been effectively screened by Metro with Clara Kimball Young in the stellar part. While the film version may seem more stereotyped than the stage play, it is nevertheless stirring. It successfully sustains interest to the climax, an intensely dramatic moment.

In projecting Clara Kimball Young's personality, the production weakens somewhat in other respects. The effect is that an unnecessary burden has been placed on her. Subordinate members of the cast who really have important roles are inartistically subdued. The result is that some of the big emotional scenes—and there are many—are narrowed to make her more striking. This, in addition to her tendency to overact has a detrimental, though by no means entirely destructive effect upon the drama. Much of her performance is pleasing. At times she seems to have vividly realized the magnificent character of Vivian Hunt.

The picture should have a strong appeal for women. The story of the artist who forgets his wife in an infatuation for his model, and after continued failure and unhappiness, wants his wife back again, is one that will win the ardent sympathy of most women patrons. Attractive studio sets and a pleasing scenic equipment generally is another favorable angle. Lloyd Whitlock is a good type, physically, for the artist. John Bowers' enthusiastic ability shines through an obscured part and Katherine McGuire makes Sylvia Morton, the model, seem as insubstantial as she really was.

Where heavy emotional dramas of married life draw, "The Woman of Bronze" should be a distinct success.

The extraordinary power with which she meets this situation brings a stirring climax.

"Look Your Best"

Rupert Hughes Has Created a Clever Comedy Drama Satire on Dieting
Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

A clever commingling of comedy, pathos and drama, with a thrill thrown in now and then and a subtle satire on dieting running all through is "Look Your Best," a Goldwyn release.

It is the sort of light entertainment picture lovers like when they are just out for a good time and relaxation.

With the much discussed question of dieting as a background there will be many in the audience who will appreciate heartily the efforts of the people to diet and forego all the pleasures of eating, and the many times they yield to temptation.

An appealing strain of pathos is introduced in Perla, the Italian girl whose life is almost all work and no food, and her childish pleasure in her first nice clothes. Colleen Moore does well this wistful role. There is always a fascination about life back of the curtain and there are many scenes here of the rehearsals and scenes in the dressing rooms that will attract.

Very beautiful are the scenes of the Butterfly Girls with great gauze wings executing their dance and then suspended on wires flying through the air. The stage sets and the dance which Antonio Moreno and Colleen Moore do at the end of the picture is also very artistic and gives an air of a big production to what at times seems to be simply a comedy.

Rupert Hughes worked up through many laughs to the big thrill of the cut wire and has handled very well these scenes with the girl flying through the air coming right toward the camera—and all the while the audience knows the wire is going to break—and it does and there is a fall that will give them a shudder.

The plot is a gossamer one, and simply a thread which lightly holds together the events of the story—but in a picture of this character you don't expect much plot. The audience will be chuckling and enjoying each new incident as it comes along.

Cast

Perla Moroni.....Colleen Moore

Story

Perla, a half starved Italian girl, is engaged by Bruni to be one of his butterfly dancers because she is so thin. Krug, the wireman, becomes infatuated with Perla. She begins to get fat, and when she tires of Krug's attentions he files the wire on which she hangs as a butterfly so Bruni will think she is too fat for the part and discharge her. Bruni used to be a beautiful dancer but through love of food grew too fat and could no longer dance. He and Perla both start to diet. He composes a beautiful dance for them and they are a great success. The story ends with their wedding—and the two still dieting.

"Refuge"

Katherine MacDonald at Her Best in First National Production

Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

Too often Katherine MacDonald's beauty has been played up in pictures without very much of a story to back her up. But her late productions have been much stronger, and "Refuge" certainly is one of the best she has ever had.

The production itself is excellent and there is a strength, and a thrill and fast moving events that will carry an audience right along with them. And combined with this is a mystery which will keep the audience in suspense.

The exhibitor can be sure that this is a picture which everyone will like.

Just a little atmosphere of the war is brought in with the three buddies—and these three add a great many excellent comedy touches to the picture.

These stories of fictitious kingdoms are popular at present with the public, there is an illusive romance about them which appeals, and there is adventure and mystery.

All the events of this picture take place in one day—and it was some busy day for all concerned.

Katherine MacDonald is very appealing. Beautiful as ever, she plays the role of Nadia with vigor. The cast is good. Hugh Thompson will make a strong appeal to the women and girls in his character of Gene for he plays as romantic a lover's role as they may desire.

The climax of the picture is gripping and will have the audience on their tiptoes. With all odds against him the hero wins out after a fight that surely is a corker.

One of the beauties of this picture is that while it is so full of adventure and so much action the scenes are logical—they all might have happened and as a result, coupled with the splendid acting, the entire picture carries a conviction that makes it very real. And the thrills come close together.

Elaborate sets of the castle and of the lodge add to the atmosphere of the production.

ZaSu Pitt's Delightfully Original Comedy Featured in Truart Production

Splendid entertainment for the juvenile fans is offered in "Patsy." It is light and imaginative with ZaSu Pitts heading a large cast of children in one of her eccentric comedy roles. The story has also a romantic theme with Marjorie Daw and Tom Gallery in the essential roles. The appeal is not necessarily confined to children. Perhaps most adults will consider it rather too frolicsome and rambling for complete enjoyment, but admirers of ZaSu Pitts and wholesome kid comedy will be apt to like it.

Among the amusing features is an amateur circus and the formation of a miniature Ku-Klux Klan. Patsy's initiation into the gang shows ZaSu Pitts in one of her inimitable moments. The circus adds considerably to the comedy strength of the picture while the Ku-Klux serves for melodramatic use as well as amusement. Marjorie Daw is pretty and Tom Gallery's pleasant personality will be welcomed as usual. "Patsy" will be sure to interest those who have been anxious to see ZaSu Pitts in a prominent role colored by her distinct personality.

"A Noise in Newboro"

Viola Dana Starts Something in a Fast-Moving Metro Picture

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

Director Harry Beaumont knew just what he was doing when he produced "A Noise in Newboro" for Metro and Viola Dana, and by carrying out his directorial suggestions succeeded in unfolding some splendid acting. She is "noise" personified in this production—and she accomplished precisely what she set out to do, create noise. But that's merely incidental—novel, if you please. In this production they've taken a childhood love affair and builded on it in such fashion that it makes a rapid-fire comedy drama that will please those who admire and like Viola Dana's style of work.

Why a girl should persistently court a man who is seemingly indifferent to her to the point where she is made to appear positively ridiculous, why that same bundle of femininity should want to chain herself to an ambitious soldier of fortune who overlooks no opportunity to belittle her are things, perhaps, which only the author could explain. Nevertheless, as illogical as these things seem to be, they do furnish meat for an altogether entertaining picture that is Dana-esque in every sense. Viola Dana is all over the place. But her personality plus sincerity in her mannerisms make you feel totally at home.

In this instance it is the story of a prodigal daughter who leaves the old burg for no other reason than to make money, return and burn up the old home town. But what a disappointment it was for this damsel, when she returned, to find only a quiet, jerkwater town railroad station there to house her. But she fulfilled her ambition and created enough noise to satisfy any municipality's craving for excitement for a decade.

Harry Beaumont knew that he had to use hoakum tactics, and he put it to good use, too. He directed with a hand that makes "A Noise in Newboro" a good showman proposition. In addition to the presence of Viola Dana, the cast includes others whose names are popular with theatre patrons, including David Butler, who does splendidly as Ben Colwell; Eva Novak, Allan Forrest, Betty Francisco, Malcolm MacGregor and others, all of whom do satisfactory work. The photography is good and the settings just what they should have been with a luxurious ballroom set that is colorfully photographed from picturesque angles.

The Story

Martha Mason leaves Newboro for the "big town." Before leaving she becomes engaged to Ben Colwell, who has his eyes on Anne Paisley, daughter of the village's wealthiest resident. Martha becomes a famous artist, and when both fame and fortune have been achieved she decides to return, only to find herself ignored by Ben and the town as dead as ever. She resolves to start a "big noise" after her offer to donate to a school building fund has been rejected. She solicits the aid of a local newspaper editor. At the betrothal party of Ben and Anne, Martha and her friends start trouble. Anne is jealous. The party ends disastrously for Anne, Martha and Ben being rushed off in a taxi. The escapade reaches the ears of the local editor and the "noise" is started. Ben and Martha's friends are arrested. Colwell is chased out of town just as Martha and her pals board a train for New York, satisfied they had carried out their mission—to create a "noise."

Valueless Exploitation
Following Through
"Scoops" and Canards

Ambitious Distributors
Playing Square Game
Real and—Reel

BY ROGER FERRI

WE don't blame exhibitors and exchangemen for ridiculing certain exploitation men. This past week up in a New England city we had an opportunity to study the tactics of one of this tribe. This chap, coming on from New York, was to have aided the exhibitor in putting across a picture. We failed to see him negotiate a single tieup that aided the exhibition. In fact, he merely sat about the manager's office, talked and talked—until he actually became tired. Then he went to bed. Next day was the opening. He stationed himself in the lobby and suddenly realized he had left undone a score and one things he should have done the day previous. He hopped and skipped and succeeded in getting into everybody's way, for the exhibitor, realizing the futility of capitalizing on the visitor's "talents," had taken the bull by the horns and taken care of the campaign himself. That night the exploitation (?) man ran to the writer, offering him names and what not. Fortunately, we had gathered all the data we wanted from the manager, who would have starved had he trusted to the visitor earning his money. And yet this incompetent individual returned to New York soon after the opening and circulated a yarn relative to "what he had done." Poor boob, he's so incompetent he doesn't realize what a frost is—and can't be on the level even with himself.

WHILE some concerns that have enriched themselves in the independent field are seemingly wanting to rid themselves of the "independent" classification there are others who really have no right to such distinction who are advertising their enterprises as being distinctively "independent."

SEVERAL exhibitors, writing to this department, have complained about the condition of prints of independent pictures delivered to them. Our sympathy is with the exhibitor in this instance, but, at the theatre owners themselves. A little more attention to the projection booth and the handling of film will eliminate this sad state of affairs.

FORCING a fair deal for independent productions is one task with which exchangemen and distributors alike will have to contend with next season. The theatrical end of the business is undergoing a "circuitization" which unless checked will certainly prove a boomerang to the industry in general. Several organizations have laid out plans whereby they will finance special showings of pictures next season as a means of earning prestige and creating a market among theatre owners for their product. This is not a new idea, yet the day is not far distant when this method of exploitation must be adhered to with greater frequency as one way of getting a square deal for meritorious productions released via independent channels.

JUST so long as independent distributors drop all interest in productions immediately after their sales have been negotiated. just so long will they wonder why it is that the better theatres throughout the country are not booking those pictures. The time is here when the distributor must give the exchangemen greater and more effective cooperation, something only three or four distributors only are giving, while the others are sitting back, puzzled and wondering why certain things exist. Giving the exchanges press books—80 per cent of them are valueless and impractical—does not discharge the distributor from the obligation he owes the local releaser in the proper local exploitation of pictures. Get behind your pictures, help your exchange sell the exhibitor, and the exhibitor to sell his public.

WARNER BROTHERS' advertising float has finally reached the Coast. It has been out on the road an entire season. Nothing any independent has ever done or can do will in any way come up to the great benefits derived from this stunt. It was truly a circus stunt that earned for Warner Brothers more publicity than all their financial resources would have enabled them to buy.

A CERTAIN western paper charges that "eastern editors" have complained about "scoops" that publication alleges it has scored. It further claims that it is the "only trade paper maintaining reviewers in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles." Modesty forbids Moving Picture World from disclosing the absurdity of that claim. However, inasmuch as the charge of negligence has been made we'll take it up right here and now. To begin with, Moving Picture World's independent department has "scooped" that publication in EVERY news story that has broken in the past year. Reviews? Insofar as independent productions are concerned this publication already has transmitted to its large army of readers its opinions on pictures that publication has not even awakened to the fact are in the market—and they are all big specials. More: Moving Picture World's news and reviewing staffs are so well organized that even trial showings of productions—showings the location of which have been supposedly kept a secret by the producer-distributors—have been "caught" by its staff representatives. And that system has covered more than three cities—it has covered the entire country from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore. It has reported every first run, given box office figures on such showings and within the next two weeks will announce another service feature that will prompt the western ozone championship claimant to hide in shame.

IF you are an independent producer or distributor you can't overlook certain statistics compiled by Dave Mountain, foreign sales manager of Arrow Film Corporation. Dave has made a careful study of conditions abroad and you can learn much from the brief but concise statement he has prepared for Moving Picture World. This statement appears on the fourth page of this department.

TAKING the 1923-24 production announcements of leading independent producers and distributors as a basis, it is estimated that for next season the independent market will have available for distribution through State rights exchanges some 500 pictures. A compilation of releases in the independent market this season shows that for every single picture released by the six leading distributors individual distributors had three available. Next season the leading companies will have something like 134 productions, divided among them as follows:

Warner Brothers	22
Arrow Film Corporation	24
Principal Pictures Corporation	18
Al Lichtman Corporation	12
Truart Pictures Corporation	12
Phil Goldstone	10
Independent Film Corporation	8
C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation	8
C. C. Burr-Mastodon Films, Inc	6
Aywon Film Corporation	6
Equity Pictures Corporation	4
Weber & North	4
Total leading productions	134

The above figures will give independent exchanges of the country a concrete idea of just how many pictures to expect from the market next season. There are at least twenty individual producers whose product will be released by distributors selling product individually. These, of course, are not included in the above estimate.

MEANWHILE, the situation in regard to productions for late spring and summer distribution is one that commands the immediate attention of producers. Principal Pictures Corporation has taken the situation under consideration and has decided to release a series of five specials through cooperative exchanges. The Principal "Super Five" includes "The Spider and the Rose," "Temporary Marriage," "East Side West Side," "The Man from Ten Strike" and "Bright Lights of Broadway." National independent distributors are in dire need of product for distribution during the next six months—a period that must not be neglected by the field. The ball must be kept rolling 12 months in every year.

Independent Distributors Facing Dearth of Productions for Release in 1923-24

National independent distributors in New York have suddenly been brought face to face with a dearth of productions available for distribution. There is no denying the fact that the current season has been the best in the history of the independent field of endeavor, all the big pictures having been quickly grabbed off. Sales this season have been made in comparatively record time, the number of pictures that have not been sold 100 per cent being able to be counted on the fingers of two hands. This department has during the course of the past few weeks received numerous inquiries not only from national independent distributors, but from many exchanges that are in dire need of product.

While there is still a lot of mediocre product available in various circles, the cheaper stuff is having the hard struggle it always has had catching on. A striking example of the demand for worth-while productions among exchangemen can be gleamed from the fact that immediately after this department has published various announcements concerning acquisition of stars, etc., exchange men have either written in or wired for detail information relative to the plans of distribution.

Although the first Elaine Hammerstein production, "Broadway Gold," has not yet been completed, Truart already has sold more than 60 per cent of the country with the rest of the territories being negotiated for. Exchangemen, however, while admittedly frank in their statements that the current season has been a very good one financially, are not inclined to give considerable ready cash. This is due to the fact that the big money made this season has been virtually consumed in liquidating debts incurred the tough times of 1921-22 and 1922-23.

Rubicon Finds Field in Strong Shape

The extraordinary healthy condition of the state right market and the strong demand for good pictures was keenly evidenced last week immediately following the first trade paper announcement of the William L. Roubert production, "For You My Boy," which is being released to independent buyers by Rubicon Pictures.

The trade papers carrying the first advertisement had hardly been on the street before the telephone started to ring and inquiries come in from independent exchange managers in New York asking when the picture could be screened.

As a further proof, however, that the independent market is coming into its own again is the fact that several out of town buyers had made inquiries relative to the picture even before the first formal announcement, having been tipped off to it by various accessory manufacturers who had sought to answer their questions in regard to new productions.

C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., writing from Asheville, N. C., says: "The golf courses here have all others I have seen outclassed." C. C. has been enjoying a well-deserved rest in the southern country.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, of Arrow Film Corporation, went to Providence R. I., Sunday to exploit "Lost in a Big City," the latest Arrow special, which will be shown at the Rialto theatre there next week.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Film Players Corporation of Chicago, spent Easter in Atlantic City, N. J., with Stanley Mastbaum, Marcus Loew and other film magnates.

Oscar Oldknow, president of Southern States Film Company of Atlanta, has taken over the southern rights to "Environment" from Principal Pictures Corporation.

M. H. Hoffman, head of Truart Pictures Corporation, returned to New York last week from a hurried visit to the Coast.

B. W. Judel, formerly general manager of Mutual, has organized the De Luxe Feature Company in Chicago, and has purchased J. G. Mayer's "The Greatest Menace" for Illinois.

The Paragon Film Company has opened an excanghe in Seattle, Wash., at 2024 Third avenue. E. Pederson of Howland Pederson, is president; O. Crouse, vice-president; Roscoe Russell, general manager, and Capt. R. H. Smith, treasurer-secretary. He has purchased the entire Phil Goldstone product.

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's latest picture, "Temptation," has passed the test of the Pennsylvania Board of Censorship without a single cut, according to announcement made this week.

Bobby North, of Apollo Exchange, New York, announced this week that the eKith-Proctor-B. S. Moss interests had booked the Edward Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," over their entire circuit.

Burr Nickle Productions, Inc., has arranged with the Eastern Film Corporation of Boston to handle its output in New England.

Nigh's Weber-North Picture Completed

A staff of six, headed by Will Nigh, is cutting the director's special production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, which was completed last week after two months of straight shooting. An extra cutting staff has been gathered and includes Ben Behrens, Nigh's assistant; Sydney Hickox, chief cameraman; Jack Brown, cameraman; Jo Moran and John D. Schulze, art director. Special quarters have been assigned to the staff adjoining Weber & North's offices. It is estimated that two weeks from date will see the production in final form.

The task of skimming the cream out of the picture is a delicate one but will be skillfully handled by Director Nigh, and the final result will prove a condensation of all the big moments and scenes of the photoplay. Every foot will count. None of the big scenes will be omitted. Screenings of each five hundred feet as they are completed are held in the projection room in the presence of Bobby North and Sam Sax, sales manager, and no foot of film is approved without the unanimous consent of all concerned. The cast includes Tom Moore, Ann Forrest, Harry T. Morey, Edmund Breese, Tom Lewis, Florence Billings, Shannon Day and others.

Gerry Bachelor, the girl who won the beauty and brains contest at the motion picture ball recently has been signed by C. C. Burr to appear in his All-Star comedies released by Hodkinson. Miss Bachelor will be seen as a Salvation Army girl in No. 11 of the series—a title as yet not having been chosen for the two reeler. The young lady was seen on Broadway this season in "Sun Showers" and is considered one of the most promising of the younger actresses.

During the time that C. C. Burr was recuperating from a severe attack of pneumonia at his home, he read and passed on some fifteen manuscripts and stories for production by Mastodon Films. Four were finally chosen and will soon be put into production. Then, to recover from the play reading, Mr. Burr took a trip down South with his family. Last reports are to the effect that he is doing as well as could be expected and will be back at his desk soon after this appears in print.

Charlies Murray has once again been banged up for the sake of his art. In making a comedy for C. C. Burr one of the other characters was called upon to kick Charlie on the shins. Murray made preparations carefully. A football shin guard was carefully wrapped around his shin under the trousers and then the scene was made. But fate was against Charlies, the player kicked the wrong shin and Charlie hasn't stopped yelling yet.

Gerald C. Duffy, author of "Sure Fire Flint" is preparing his latest story, "Rich Men's Sons" for the screen. It is to be produced by C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films and will be one of the six big features to be produced by him for the independent market. Duffy, by the way, has been highly complimented for his titling of "You Are Guilty," one of the latest Burr releases.

Betty Blythe sails this month for Algiers, to be starred in the film production of "Chu Chin Chow." It is believed this will eclipse even her "Queen of Sheba" in splendor. Herbert Langley, well known in English operatic circles, will play the title part, opposite Miss Blythe. The Graham-Wilcox Company, Ltd., are the producers, and the interiors will be filmed in London.

Bert Lytell, now staring for Sol Lesser in the film production, "The Meanest Man in the World," is due to come East within the next few weeks to carry out the terms of his new contract recently signed with Cosmopolitan Pictures. Mr. Lytell will play the title role in "The Lone Wolf" series. It was in other stories of this same series in which Mr. Lytell made his greatest fame as a screen star. The character is a reformed international crook, whose fight against the underworld which tried to get him back is tense and dramatic.

Corinne Griffith, foremost exotic screen star, commenced work last week on "Six Days," the screen adaptation of Eleanor Glynn's well known novel. The picture is being filmed at Goldwyn's studios at Culver City, Cal. Miss Griffith, upon the completion of this picture, will return East to head her own unit. Corinne Griffith Productions.

Upon his return from Banff, Can., where he is playing in "Snowbound," Gustav Seyffertitz, screen heavy, will start work in "Under the Red Robe," in which Alma Rubens is featured. The interiors will be filmed at the Tilford Studios, New York City. Seyffertitz is to play the role of "Clony," who although a villainous looking character, is really quite a good fellow and a true friend. Seyffertitz is one of the best known villains on the screen.

Webster Campbell, well known director, is preparing to film the first Corinne Griffith production. He is now on the way to New York from California. The picture will be made here in the East, as soon as Miss Griffith finishes her picture in California and returns.

Mae Murray to Make Series of Specials for Independents

As was exclusively reported in this department three weeks ago the deal involving one of the best woman star drawing cards has been closed—and now that the deal has been announced by the one chiefly concerned, M. H. Hoffman, it is no breach of confidence to state that immediately after she has completed her prevalent contract with Metro Pictures Corporation, Mae Murray will start work on the first of a series of high-class, luxurious productions that will be distributed in the independent market through Truart Pictures Corporation. The Murray pictures now being made by Miss Murray under the direction of her director-husband, Robert Leonard, are produced by Tiffany Productions, Inc., in which Mr. Hoffman is financially interested.

The Metro contract will not expire until the latter part of the current year, however, and it is not expected that the first independent Mae Murray special will be ready until late next Fall. Mr. Hoffman announced on his return to New York from the Coast last week that he will have between 13 and 18 productions available for distribution in the independent market next season. These will include the Mae Murray specials and those starring Elaine Hammerstein, who is now working on the first Truart release, "Broadway Gold," on the Coast, from where Mr. Hoffman returned late last week. Nothing of an authentic nature could be obtained on the deal whereby Truart is expected to release a series of pictures starring William Farnum.

However, M. H. Hoffman is interested in production with Abe Carlos and Roland West, which combination is expected to furnish a series of four pictures which also will be on the Truart program.

Mr. Hoffman has hit upon a plan whereby his product will be extensively shown throughout the country. In territories where exchanges have no access to representative first-run houses, he will personally arrange through his representatives for first-run showings. These will be exploited and supervised by his offices and in this way Mr. Hoffman hopes to force reluctant exhibitors to show the product, on the theory that if a production is good no exhibitor will overlook it. The first run proposition, he adds, will add prestige to his pictures.

C. B. C. Seeks Buyers Aid on Productions

In accordance with the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's desire to make each production on its Six Box Office Winners program a better picture than the last, that company has this week put the idea to a practical test by asking franchise holders to check up with them on each detail of production and exploitation and to let them know wherein they have succeeded and where they have conspicuously failed.

The system, which entails a great deal of extra work, but which is, according to the C. B. C. production and exploitation forces, well worth it, consists of an actual questionnaire which goes to each franchise holder of the six features, and which lists each detail of production and exploitation, and asks the franchise holder to note beside each point just what he thinks of it as applied to "Temptation"—his reasons for so thinking, to make a comparison of the same point in connection with the two preceding Box Office Winners, "More to Be Pitied" and "Only a Shopgirl," and to compare it favorably or unfavorably with other features which the territorial holder is handling.

These are to be sent to the C. B. C. offices, and those which refer especially to production are to be referred to the proper production departments in New York and at the West Coast studios—while those which have to do with exploitation will be referred to the proper parties in that department.

Some of the points which will be passed upon under "Production" are as follows: Sets, Players, Story, Consistency, Direction, Casting, Costuming, Properties, Editing and Cutting, Titling—including wording and type and photography of same; General Photography. Under "Exploitation" will come the various headings: Posters, Lobby Display, Oil Paintings, Slides, Window Cards, etc.

Betty Blythe is completing her last Whitman Bennett independent picture, "The Girl Who Got Everything," at the Yonkers, N. Y., studio. This production will be released within a month.

Whitman Bennett, according to plans announced in Providence, R. I., this week by Francis X. Bushman, will make a series of four pictures starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Burton King has completed his first production of a series of six that will be distributed in the independent market. No distribution arrangements have yet been made, however. Ben Silvy was assistant director.

Many of the stars in "The Broken Violin" attended a special trade showing of that production at Wurlitzer Hall in New York last Thursday night.

Tyrone Powers has been signed for the role of Cardinal Richelieu in the production, "Under the Red Robe."

Announcement was made in New York that Wesley Barry's next production for Warner Brothers will be "The Printer's Devil."

Gene Marcus Buys Principal Franchise For Eastern Pennsy

PHILADELPHIA—(Special) — With the passing of Easter business in this territory is expected to pick up, although reports that have poured into independent exchanges hereabouts from exhibitors have contained no complaints. Business, however, during the Lenten season fell off considerably in spots, although locally the flop was not as bad as it was last year or the season before.

Gene Marcus of Twentieth Century Film Corporation is planning to expand his interests. He has tied up considerable product for the summer season as well as 1923-24. He has taken over the entire Big Super Five program of Principal Pictures Corporation, including "The Spider and the Rose," "Temporary Marriage," "East Side West Side," "Bright Lights of Broadway" and "The Man from Ten Strike," starring Guy Bates Post.

That Lou Burman, of Independent Film Corporation, may augment his staff in order to concentrate on Warner Brothers' productions next season seems certain. Lou Burman will have something like 25 productions for distribution in this territory next season.

David Starkman has taken over the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey rights to Weiss Brothers' "After Six Days," the Biblical picture, which he showed for the first time last summer at Woods' Theatre in Atlantic City.

Atlantic City, N. J., on Easter Sunday attracted no few film folk from this city, New York and other centres. Lou Burman, Ben Amsterdam, Louis Korson, Gene Marcus, David Segal, Bob Lynch, Joe Friedman of Chicago, Marcus Loew, J. D. Williams, Irving Lesser and many others were seen on the Boardwalk sporting their new Spring outfits.

David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., last week made a tour of the territory, visiting Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Reading and other cities. He has been in conference with exhibitor heads in this territory for several weeks relative to his tieup with the local exhibitor organization.

Clem Kracht of Moving Picture World's advertising staff was here last week, going to Atlantic City for the Easter week-end.

The United States Releasing Company is featuring through its Capitol Film Exchange, exclusively Western productions. The firm also will release the Burton King specials in the future.

"Brass" will in all probability be given a pretentious opening by the Stanley circuit either at the Victoria or Stanley Theatre, there being a possibility, too, that the picture will run here for an indefinite period.

The report circulated along Vine Street that Renown Pictures Corporation contemplated an exchange in this city was found to be merely propaganda started by a visiting salesman from one of the national distributors in New York.

Goldburg Closes Sales Deals

The Independent Pictures Corporation, distributing a series of twelve semi-western features starring George Larkin, Ruth Stonehouse, Jack Livingston, Al Ferguson and Mary Wynn, signed a contract with Mathew Aparton for the entire series for distribution in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico.

Eight of these twelve releases were produced by Premium Picture Productions at Beaverton, Oregon, and aside from the productions themselves, because of the local interest in these attractions, each have been booked for a first run in Seatle, Portland, Salem, Eugene, Roseburg, Pendleton and Baker, Oregon.

"Brass" Author Lauds Picture

Ever since producers began filming the stories of prominent authors there has been a general complaint that the completed print was not the author's story in any way, shape or manner. Charles G. Norris, author of the Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production directed by Sidney Franklin, took occasion recently to view his "brainchild" during its engagement at the Strand Theatre, New York.

Barry Finishes Appearance Tour

Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced screen idol, completed recently his twelve weeks personal appearance tour in connection with Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production directed by William Beaudine, it is announced. His next picture will be "The Printer's Devil."

Opening of Chinese Market Aids Americans, Says Arrow Foreign Head

D. J. Mountan, general manager of the Foreign Department of the Arrow Film Corporation, this week submitted some very interesting data, proving conclusively that the situation abroad is greatly improved.

"Foreign conditions," said Mr. Mountan, "are back to normal in practically all territories, with the exception of Germany and Austria-Hungary. These two territories, however, have lately been showing great interest in American productions and are doing some buying despite the very unfavorable rate of exchange. It is interesting to note the figures regarding the number of pictures made outside of Germany that were shown in Germany in the period of 1920-1921. The following figures, compiled by the Film Express, published in Germany, are of interest:

Country	1920 No. Film	Reels	Meters
U. S. A.	17	76	21,118
Denmark	3	14	4,041
France	3	9	2,911
Italy	14	73	25,530
Austria	29	132	43,812
Russia	2	5	1,176
Spain	1	6	2,078

Country	1921 Film	Reels	Meters
U. S. A.	204	788	213,352
Argentine	1	2	537
Denmark	87	282	86,192
France	33	51	11,658
Great Britain	4	11	2,906
Italy	92	434	133,617
Austria	173	757	262,431
Sweden	29	86	26,903
Switzerland	1	1	388
Spain	2	11	3,724
Hungary	42	183	60,165

"These figures show that the inevitable has happened and America jumps almost to the head of the list, being second only to Austria, Germany's next door neighbor and one whose exchange is even lower than Germany. With any sort of break in exchange there is no questio but what America will forge to the top.

"Another territory that is now open for the American market is China. This territory has heretofore used nothing but used prints and the American producer and distributor has received little or no profit. With the advent, however, of the new Peacock Motion Picture Corporation and the ambitious plans of the very capable executives of this organization, American producers and distributors are now beginning to realize a fair return from this territory. I, for one, am sure every man in the industry received the news of the formation of this corporation with great delight. The names of their general manager, F. V. Chamberlin, and his associates, J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., and R. C. Patterson, Jr., are positive proof that the contemplated plans will be carried to a successful conclusion, and that American film men may expect to sell a large percentage of their pictures in China territory."

Pointing to the activity of American films in the foreign market, Mr Mountan listed the following sales, which prove conclusively that the motion picture business is in a very healthy condition abroad:

For Cuba—Twelve special productions to include "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," "Lost in a Big City," "The Broken Violin," "Man and Wife," "The Little Red Schoolhouse," "The Rip-Tide," "The Streets of New York," "Night Life in Hollywood," "None So Blind." Also a series of Mirthquake Comedies, starring Bobby Dunn.

For Japan—"Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York."

For Australasia—"Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York."

For South Africa—"Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," "Lost in a Big City," "The Rip-Tide," and forty-eight of Arrow's regular features which will include the series of Curwood's, Peter B. Kyne's, Grace Davison's, Neva Gerber's, Jack Hoxie's, William Fairbanks' and other Arrow pictures, and a series of Hank Mann two-reel comedies.

For Brazil—"A Motion to Adjourn," "The Innocent Cheat," "Bonnie May," "Night Life in Hollywood," "The Streets of New York," "Impulse," "God's Country and the Law," "Penny of Top-Hill Trail," "The Hidden Light," "The Price of Youth."

For England—"Peaceful Peters."

For Spain and Portugal—14 Mirthquake Comedies.

For Porto Rico, San Domingo, Haiti, Mexico, Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Central America, Chile, Bolivia, Peru, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, and British and French Guinea—"Nan of the North" serial, starring Ann Little.

Mr. Mountan stated that one of the most important sales was that for South Africa, embracing as it did a complete service which took in forty-eight of Arrow's regular features, as well as a number of other Arrow productions and a series of two-reel comedies.

Emil Harder, President of Sunshine Films, Inc., will shortly take a company of four to Switzerland where exteriors for his next picture, "The Birth Of Switzerland," will be taken.

Sidney Garrett of Inter-Globe Export Company, who returned from abroad last week, brought back with him two English pictures, "Harbor Lights" and "This Freedom."

There is a strong probability that Fred LeRoy Granville may make pictures on the other side. Luxor Pictures, Inc., has arranged with him to handle a series of six pictures.

The Stolls will make a series of seven-reelers based on the Indian Love Lyrics for which they have purchased the screen rights.

Ernest Shipman has reserved for himself the distribution rights to all his Canadian productions in the Dominion of Canada.

Al Lichtman, according to a cable from our London correspondent, sailed from New York last week and is due in the metropolis on Saturday afternoon.

A German company has opened negotiations with an American director to make a series of four pictures in Germany with an all-American cast. The picture, according to plans of the German firm, would be based on a German theme and made with the domestic market in mind only.

The Italian Government will be represented at the Motion Picture Exposition in Los Angeles this summer, according to a report received this week from Naples.

Business at the English kinemas has increased splendidly during the past few weeks, much to the surprise of showmen there who had looked forward to a slump.

It is estimated that something like 18 American companies have sent players to Monte Carlo where scenes have been taken during the past few months for American productions.

C. C. Burr's "Secrets Of Paris"; the Al Lichtman product and Warner Brothers' features, together with "The World's A Stage," a Principal feature, are doing a great business in British possessions, according to reports received from their English distributors.

It is cabled from London that Al Lichtman while abroad completed European distribution arrangements for all his pictures. He will make known these distributors on his return to New York late this week.

Renowned, Chicago, Ready for Business; Friedman Is Active

CHICAGO—(Special)—That Renown Pictures Exchange will be quite a fact in the local independent distribution market next season seems imminent for the reason that they are seeking the best product available in the market. This past week the exchange contracted for a Principal Pictures Corporation franchise for the "Big Super Five" program including "The Spider and the Rose," "Temporary Marriage," "East Side West Side," "The Man from Ten Strike," with Guy Bates Post, and "Bright Lights of Broadway." This exchange also will handle all the Truart productions, including the Elaine Hammerstein specials, four, and it is rumored also, the new series of Mae Murray independent pictures to be released next season.

Joe Friedman, who has just returned from Atlantic City, N. J., where he has been spending the Easter holidays, is planning for some splendid product for next season. Joe Friedman has the Al Lichtman franchise in this territory and is also handling big independent productions. There was a report current here that Friedman was to be financially interested in a production venture, but no confirmation of the rumor was available locally.

Frank Zambrini of Progress Pictures Exchanges in Chicago and Indianapolis is announcing an unusual releasing program for the next five months. The lineup will include "Lost in a Big City," with John Lowell; "The Little Red Schoolhouse," "Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers" and "The Broken Violin."

M. H. Hoffman of Truart Pictures Corporation and owner of the Renown Pictures Exchange here and in New York, was in Chicago last week, en route to New York from the Coast.

Just what the status of the Warner Brothers product in 1923-24 is remains a problem. One thing seems certain and that is that Balaban & Katz will not handle the product in view of the battle that has arisen between that firm and Warners. There are a number of rumors relative to prospective distributors, but these are merely reports that have not been confirmed here or in New York.

"Luck," the third Johnny Hines' special, which C. C. Burr sold to First National for Illinois, will, in all probability, be shown at the spacious Chicago Theatre, according to present plans. Johnny Hines' previous picture, "Sure Fire Flint," set a splendid record at the Chicago several months ago.

Independent exchanges in this territory have no complaint over the treatment they have been receiving locally from exhibitors. The big pictures have had no trouble catching on. Particularly true has this been in the out-of-town theatres.

Warners Sign Harry Beaumont

Harry Beaumont, conceded to be one of the most individual comedy-drama directors in the industry, was placed under a long term contract by the Warner Brothers, following the completion of "Main Street," the popular novel by Sinclair Lewis, according to an announcement made this week by Harry M. Warner.

The reason for the signing of Beaumont is contained in a telegram sent by Sam and Jack L. Warner, production managers of the coast studios, to the eastern office. Under the terms of the new contract, Beaumont will direct a number of the forthcoming productions scheduled by the Warner Brothers for the coming season. The first will be "The Gold Diggers," according to the announcement, the David Belasco stage success written by Avery Hopwood.

Transcontinental Tour of Huge Warner Float Ends on the Coast

LOS ANGELES—Warner Brothers huge float advertising the Warner's seven classics of the screen, has arrived here. The float has been on the road for about six months, and throughout its entire journey, it is said to have aided scores of exhibitors showing the Warner classics.

The float carried the exact reproduction of the seven books filmed this season by the Warner's. It is thirteen feet high and seventeen feet long, the books being mounted on a truck. It also carried a silvery toned calliope, and in the course of the tour a radio set was installed.

Commendations on the uniqueness of the advertising stunts are reported to have been received from every city, town and hamlet visited by the float. Public officials have extended many courtesies to Frank A. Cassidy, newspaper man and exploiteer, who was in charge of the float, and his assistant, Herbert Swor, throughout the trip, and in many instances they were greeted and paraded through the cities by a blare of music.

The float was started on its triumphant transcontinental tour from New York City the latter part of August. At that time fully 5,000 bankers, delegates to the forty-eighth annual convention of the American Bankers' Association and representing nine-tenths of the banking resources of the country, met at the Capitol Theatre, New York, to witness the high-class showmanship used in motion picture presentation. They were extended the industry's greetings by Will H. Hays, through a message projected on the screen.

Along about the theatre hour the float made its appearance on Broadway, heralded by a brass band and protected by a cordon of policemen. The event was made a gala occasion, and for fully a half hour the procession stopped in front of the Capitol. Then it proceeded down Broadway, across Forty-second street to Eighth avenue, where Cassidy and Swor started for the West Coast.

En route to Los Angeles, Cassidy met prominent city and state officials, Chambers of Commerce and Rotary Clubs. On each occasion he impressed upon them the value and instructive power of the motion picture, and the rapid strides being made by producers to bring forth bigger, better and cleaner motion pictures.

From New York the float proceeded to Boston. It then stopped, among the larger cities, in Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Detroit, Toledo, Columbus, Cincinnati, Terre Haute, Ind.; Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Davenport, Iowa; Des Moines, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Cheyenne to Denver, Salt Lake City, Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas, across the desert to San Bernardino to Los Angeles.

Practically every exhibitor that came in contact with the float took the liberty of wiring congratulations to the Warner offices. Without exception they have acclaimed it the greatest national advertising stunt that has ever been evolved in the industry. And it is estimated that approximately fifty million people were impressed with the names of the Warner classics.

Live Coast Studio News

Harry Rapf and Sam and Jack Warner tendered a banquet to Gene Sarazen, the world's golf champion, at the Hill-crest Country Club here last week. Gene is working on a series of one-reel pictures for Warner Brothers and incidently perfecting Sam's, Harry's and Jack's golf.

Gene Sarazen may go East in June to take part in the film golf championships, according to report here, for being a film star, the champion is now qualified.

There is a report current here that Bert Ennis, of New York, will come to the coast in June to take up the publicity directorship of the Sawyer & Lubin interests here.

Johnny Hines is expected at the Warner Brothers' studio the latter part of next month to start production on "Little Johnny Jones." He was loaned to Warner Brothers by his own producer-manager, Charles C. Burr.

Elaine Hammerstein will make all four her independent productions here, according to a statement given out this week. The first release is "Broadway Gold." It has been completed. Truart will handle the distribution of these pictures.

Production on "The Man From Ten Strike," starring Guy Bates Post, is well under way. This story is based on a novel by James Oliver Curwood. It will be released by Principal Pictures Corporation under their franchise releasing arrangement.

Harry Langdon, a vaudeville comedian, has been placed under contract by Sol Lesser for Principal Pictures Corporation and will appear in pictures that company will make and distribute in the independent market.

Bert Lytell will complete production on "The Meanest Man in the World" some time this week and then will leave the Principal studio for the East to start his contract with Cosmopolitan. Principal Pictures Corporation will release this George M. Cohan special.

Edward Small has opened an agency here at 6047½ Hollywood Boulevard.

"Jerry Comes Back Home" is the James Horne production now being made. Victor Potel, an old-timer in the picture business, has been signed for an important role. He used to be with Essanay.

Miss DuPont has replaced Betty Francisco in the B. P. Schulberg production, "The Broken Wing," which Al Lichtman Corporation will release through co-operative exchanges.

Gus Miller, Warner Brothers' special representative, has been at the studio, investigating conditions and studying production methods.

"What Women Want" will be the title of the first big special William Fairbanks will be starred in by Phil Goldstone, who has put that star under contract for a series of independent productions.

"Main Street" to Open at Park for an Indefinite Run

BOSTON—(Special—It has been virtually decided to open the last of the Warner Brothers' 1922-23 productions, "Main Street," at the Park Theatre here at $1.50 top price. William Shapiro, head of Franklin Film Exchange, which is handling the Warner Brothers' product in this territory, has received word from Warner Brothers that "Main Street' is a bigger production than "Brass," which opened auspiciously at the Park Theatre, running there for three weeks.

The Modern-Strand theatres' interests in Providence, R. I., have booked the entire output of Franklin Film Exchange. "Brass" opens at the Modern Theatre in that city in two weeks. Sol Braunig, manager of the house, has been exploiting the feature for six weeks and expects to do a big business. "Main Street" is being advertised by the Strand Theatre. Both houses will divide the four Elaine Hammerstein productions between them.

There is a report here that Sam Grand of Federated Film Exchange and Harry Ascher of American Feature Films Corporation, handling the Universal and Al Lichtman product in New Eangland, are about to figure in a big exchange deal. This does not mean that the two organizations will merge. On the contrary, the deal involves another distribution agency in which the two are reported they will be actively interested. The report, however, has not yet been verified.

Sam Moscow of Moscow Films, Inc., has received prints of the latest C. C. Burr specials, "Luck," starring Johnny Hines, and the Edgar Lewis' picture, "You Are Guilty," both of which will be released within the next ten days. "Luck" will, in all probability, open at the Modern-Beacon within two weeks, according to reports in bookers' circles.

"The Woman in Chains," co-starring Jean Acker (Mrs. Rodolph Valentino) and Martha Mansfield, is playing Fay's in Providence, R. I. However, the picture is a mediocre affair, being the first and last heard of the much-touted Amalgamated Pictures Corporation franchise idea sponsored by Harry Grossman some time ago.

A number of Boston exchangemen will journey down to Providence, R. I., next week to attend the New England premiere showing of "Lost in a Big City," at the Rialto Theatre. It is understood that J. Charles Davis, who successfully exploited "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in that city for Arrow Film Corporation in December, 1921, is in Providence handling the advance on "Lost in a Big City," which is also down as an Arrow super-special. John Lowell, star of "Ten Nights," which made history in this territory, is the star. The fact that the same producers who made "Ten Nights" have turned out "Lost in a Big City" with the identical "Ten Nights" cast is attracting unusual attention in film circles in New England. The advance work on the engagement is good.

Boston exchangemen are looking forward to 1923-24 to be the greatest season in the history of independents. The demand for productions is great and in certain spots the first run situation is such that any sort of entertaining picture should have no difficulty getting paying dates.

Seek Receiver for Alexander

Application has been filed in the New York Supreme Court by Charles A. Brodek, through his attorney, Edgar M. Rosenstock, of 2 Rector street, for the appointment of a receiver for the Alexander Film Corporation. Brodek, in his petition, alleges that he obtained a judgment against the film corporation for $902 for professional services rendered. He avers that on March 1st last the defendant made an assignment of its business to the Aralma Film Corporation, but this, he says, was rescinded on March 23d last. Since then he avers he has learned that the Alexander Film Corporation intends making a transfer of its business to another film concern, and to avert this, and protect its creditors he claims a receiver should be appointed forthwith. The Alexander Film Corporation was served with the motion papers, through its president, A. S. Goldberg, at 1540 Broadway, on March 28th last.

New York Supreme Court Justice McCook has dismissed a suit by Texas Guinan Johnson against Nicholas Kessel for $36,200. She alleged that she made a contract with Victor Kremer, by which she was to appear in eight pictures and was to get 25 per cent. of the net profits, and have a drawing account of $300 for the first two pictures and $350 for the others. She alleged that Kremer broke the contract and damaged her in the amount sued for.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, New York, has denied the application of William Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and the Alcet Enterprises for an injunction restraining Stoll Films and the Educational Film Exchanges from distributing films bearing the name, "Sherlock Holmes" or the "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes." The plaintiff contended that they have a prior right to the use of the name.

Expect Business To Pick Up After Easter in Missouri

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Business in this territory insofar as independent exchanges are concerned is expected to pick up materially now that the Lenten season is over. Business during the past few weeks has been somewhat brisk in this city as well as in St. Louis. The situation in St. Louis and the eastern part of the State is unchanged with no indications of any betterment due to the circuit booking proposition prevailing there.

Al Kahn, president of the Crescent Film Exchange, returned from New York this week but he wouldn't say anything about anything. Al doesn't make an announcement until he is positive but when he does make an announcement you can rest assured it is authentic.

Syd Rosenthal, general manager of the Sydko Distributing Co., says that every exhibitor who has "determination" will succeed. Now, Syd, behave/

Two of the main characters in Daniel Carson Goodman's latest production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" which will be released in this territory by the Film Booking Offices, are Mary Alden, who plays an effective role of a wife who has given her best years to a husband who finds her "in the way" when he has finally reached social distinction and Elinor Fair, who plays the part of her daughter, who tries to stem the tide of catastrophe in her home by her father's foolish but complete aversion for her mother.

The Fine Arts Pictures Corporation headed by Walter Thimmig has taken charge of the Exhibitors Service Exchange. P. E. K. Collins continues as manager and no other changes are contemplated. The exhibitors organization had a contract to purchase the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation's business, paying for same from the receipts of the exchange. Under the new plan Thimmig will run the exchange during the balance of the period covered by the exhibitors contract, and at the end of that time the exchange passed back entirely to the Fine Arts organization. The exhibitors had an option to renew their contract but have decided not to exercise it.

The Motion Pictures Sales Association of St. Louis, the newly formed film salesman's club, plans to attend the baseball game between the St. Louis Browns and Cardinals at Sportsman's Park, April 7, in a body. The game will be followed by a dinner in the St. Louis Film Board of Trade rooms.

Barney Fegan and Sam Bromley were to open their new exchange in the 3500 block on Olive street by April 1. The offices are now undergoing alterations and a large concrete vault will be installed. In the meantime Barney is managing the Aubert theatre which is owned by Bromley and his associates.

"Wildness of Youth," for which Sam Werner of United Film Exchange, has the local territorial rights had its St. Louis premiere at the William Fox Liberty theatre on March 17. He reports many inquiries for the picture through the territory.

Seattle News

SEATTLE—(Staff Special)—Dave G Rodgers, a well-known figure in film circles here and throughout the Northwest, has joined the sales staff of Greater Features, Inc., and will cover Eastern Washington out of the Seattle office. Mr. Rodgers is remembered through his aggressive National fight against the Music Tax several years ago. He comes from United Artists.

At the office of Kwality Exchanges, Warner Brothers representatives it was announced that "The Beautiful and Damned" will play the Blue Mouse Theatre here, opening April 7. Prints of "Brass" have been received and at the initial screening, were received with enthusiasm.

Recognition—and Duty!

WHILE the current season bids fair to record the greatest independent year the motion picture has ever known, every indication, based on the demand plus prestige established by independent pictures in 1922-23, point to an even greater era in 1923-24. Just how great the new season will be depends entirely upon the calibre of product offered the theatre owners. But upon the co-operation—the material financial co-operation and support of the theatregoers—depends, too, the extent of the artistic greatness of these productions.

It is neither an exaggeration nor an undue outburst of enthusiasm that is demonstrated when this writer advances the claim that without the money-making first-class, artistically wonderful productions turned out by independent producers—the current season would not have been the financially great one that it has turned out to be for many exhibitors.

One thing the progressively energetic independent has earned this season has been prestige. And with prestige—a prestige established by giving the exhibitor good product, consistently good product—has come that for which independents have long been fighting and seeking—RECOGNITION.

To the dealer in independent productions that word means much. It represents years of struggling—fearless, troublous and gigantic struggling—struggling against seemingly impossible odds. It represents the reward for confidence, foresight, energy, co-operation between the producer and distributor, between distributor and exchangeman, between exchangeman and theatre owner—and last, but far from the least, a development of public demand for entertaining independent productions.

The confidence of the exhibitor in independent productions of material box office value, the confidence of the exhibitor in the ability of independent producers to turn out money-making productions has been won. It has brought recognition.

But that recognition, that confidence, must be carefully guarded against trespassers, against irresponsibles, against Wallingfordian promoters, against incompetents and against the dishonest intruder.

The independent man has not yet reached the height to which we believe 1923-24 will raise him—but he has hit the right trail. He has at last found himself.

The exhibitor has demonstrated his willingness to book good independent pictures.

The independent producer, encouraged by this support, has made meteoric advances.

Independent productions of quality ALL made money; they ALL are still making money.

But success is not yet complete.
We are today nearer our goal—nearer than ever before.
But our goal has not yet been reached.
It is in sight.
And 1923-24 will find it permanently and definitely.
With good productions the goal will be reached.
So—in passing—may we suggest the slogan:
"INDEPENDENTS WILL SAY IT WITH GOOD PICTURES."
Keep that in mind—and we can't fail.
And, incidentally, start working now.
The sun's shining now.
So let's make hay.

ROGER FERRI.

BOSTON — (Special) — 1924 will prove a banner year for independents in New England, judging from the rush for booking from exhibitors for the 1923-24 season. The circuitization of theatres in this territory is evidently causing the independent exhibitors considerable concern, the fear being that the tieup will be such that the independents will be left outside in the cold.

New York Looks Forward to Biggest Season in 1923-24

Anticipating the greatest year for independents, exchanges in New York and New Jersey are now seeking product for distribution during the 1923-24 season. Conditions for the independent distributor never have been better than they were noted this season, but with independent productions more popular than ever before and with producers announcing bigger and even better pictures for next season, exchanges report unusual demand from exhibitors who seek to tie up for product next season even at this early stage of the year.

Capital Film Echange of New York has taken over the distribution rights to "Robin Hood, Jr.," for northern New Jersey and New York City. The picture had its premiere at the Newark Theatre last week when it was enthusiastically received by press and public.

Sam Zierler and his entire staff at the Commonwealth Film Exchange are busy these days completing plans for the Commonwealth Month which starts April 12 and continues until the middle of May. Exhibitors in the metropolitan zone are giving excellent co-operation and bookings are coming in unusually fast, according to reports given out at the exchange.

The April-May drive that Merit Exchange started two weeks ago is meeting with splendid success. This period promises to establish a new record for bulk business for the popular New York exchange.

Merit Films Corporation has purchased the entire New York State and northern New Jersey rights to the latest Whitman Bennett independent production, "The Truth About Wives," starring Betty Blythe. Appearing with her are Tyrone Powers, William Carleton, Anne Luther, Fred Jones and John Daly Murphy.

Harry H. Thomas, general manager of the Arrow Exchange, Inc., reports unusual interest among New York exhibitors in the latest Arrow superspecial, "Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers," based on a James Oliver Curwood story, which Dell Henderson incorporated on the screen. At its Paterson, N. J., premiere this production broke records at the U. S. Theatre.

"Brass," the Warner Brothers' masterpiece of the current season, opened at the Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J., Saturday, March 31, for an extended run. The opening was one of the busiest experienced by that house and indications on Monday were that the picture would run away with all house marks for a week.

"After Six Days," Weiss Brothers' Biblical production, was the first attraction played at the Premier Theatre in Brooklyn, which opened on Thursday night, March 22. The picture was doing well Monday and Tuesday.

Foster Moore, formerly with Herman Jans and later special representative with Al Lichtman Corporation, is now with Commonwealth Pictures Corporation handling the sales in New Jersey.

Joe Forster and Harry Kaplan of the Manhattan Film Exchange, will release "Superstition" in the metropolitan territory.

CONSENSUS of PUBLISHED REVIEWS

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.)

The Prisoner

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,795 feet)

M. P. W.—There is considerable curiosity as to what comes next, and a buoyant quality in the directing that fastens the attention.

F. D.—Fairly interesting romance that starts off slowly but increases in interest toward the end.

N.—The picture is suitable for program houses.

E. H.—Furnishes a full hour's entertainment of romance, adventure and thrills.

T. R.—This picture provides pleasing entertainment.

The Famous Mrs. Fair

(Featured Cast—Metro—7,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Don't hesitate to book this picture, for it should immensely please any type of audience and echo in your box office.

F. D.—Undoubtedly carries strong audience appeal and as such should make first rate box office attraction.

N.—A picture which is certain to be appreciated everywhere.

E. H.—There is little doubt that most audiences will be gripped by this well made, convincing drama of American home life.

T. R.—The story is well developed and should afford first class entertainment wherever shown.

The World's a Stage

(Dorothy Phillips—Principal Pictures—Six reels)

M. P. W.—A knockout from a box office standpoint. As a production it is effectively strong in direction, action, photography, settings and light.

N.—The picture is effective in its human appeal and is one of the best audience attractions of the season.

E. H.—A state right offering away above the average.

F. D.—Very likely to please a majority, the "fan" crowd particularly, since it deals with Hollywood and its people. The usual Elinor Glyn philosophy, however.

T. R.—A good picture. Going far to make it so is the work of Dorothy Phillips and Bruce McRae and direction of Colin Campbell.

The Flaming Hour

(Frank Mayo—Universal—4,508 feet)

M. P. W.—In preparing for the final thrill there is a story of at least average suspense intensified by the magnetic personality of the star.

F. D.—A satisfying entertainment that has well sustained interest and good climax.

E. H.—Presents Frank Mayo in a story of ordinary merit, but Director Edward Sedgwick has put plenty of action into every scene and with the help of an excellent cast, the picture moves along to a stirring climax and pleasing finish.

T. R.—The sort of picture warranted to win a majority vote of appreciation wherever it is shown.

N.—An excellent program picture.

Catch My Smoke

(Tom Mix—Fox—4,070 feet)

M. P. W.—Wherever the star and his famous horse are admired, "Catch My Smoke" should be in favor.

F. D.—Up to the Mix standard with the customary action and incident.

E. H.—We advise you to flag the first Fox salesman you see and sign up for this one.

T. R.—Typical vehicle for this actor and in localities where he is popular it will most likely prove to be a winner.

N.—Tom Mix and Tony are back. Which means that picture-goers fortunate enough to see "Catch My Smoke" will take nearly as much delight in it as in earlier releases.

The Crusader

(William Russell—Fox—4,780 feet)

M. P. W.—Five reels of well-planned entertainment.

T. R.—A somewhat stereotyped story possessing some entertaining qualities.

E. H.—Presents William Russell in a Western story of moderate interest. The story drags in spots although some of the long shots are very beautiful and the love interest well handled.

N.—A certain slowness of action mars this story, but otherwise it is a highly satisfactory example of that type of Western film in which William Russell does good work.

Affinities

(Colleen Moore and John Bowers—Hodkinson—5,700 feet)

M. P. W.—Mary Roberts Rinehart has made light of the woes of the neglected wife, and the pictured version of her "Affinities" reflects her happy, frivolous view of the subject.

T. R.—"Affinities" is a farce with a lot of laughs and a lot of hokum too.

E. H.—It holds average interest, moves fast and as a whole proves satisfactory as light entertainment.

N.—There is some romance, as well as a bit of near pathos, but the principal vein of the picture is good, wholesome humor.

The Challenge

(Dolores Cassinelli—American Releasing—5,052 feet)

M. P. W.—A clever use of familiar material here should sell this picture to the average fan. The story of a triangular love affair has been entertainingly presented with a touch of novelty now and then.

T. R.—Taken on the whole it affords good entertainment.

E. H.—Thoroughly enjoyable little five-reel feature.

N.—The plot has been done before, but there are just enough new angles to wipe out the memory of any former theme.

Another Man's Shoes

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,251 feet)

M. P. W.—A feature of average interest, with a melodramatic story about the maneuvers of a Bolshevistic society. The treatment is humorous and thrilling by turns, with comedy as the dominating motive.

N.—Call it an average program feature and let it go at that.

F. D.—Very weak material that gives Rawlinson no opportunity to make good.

T. R.—There is a good bit of comedy and some exciting moments that should fulfill the requirements of an average entertainment.

E. H.—It is light but pleasing entertainment, and should be well received by any audience.

The Grub-Stake

(Nell Shipman—American Releasing—8,061 feet)

M. P. W.—Due to the acceptable story and the excellent animal stuff it is a picture that should please a majority of audiences.

F. D.—Highly melodramatic production staged in Klondike with plenty of thrills in last few reels.

N.—As a whole the production ranks with any of the star's recent releases and should go over especially well after the weather gets warm.

E. H.—Interesting animal stuff raises this feature out of the ordinary class.

T. R.—Although not exactly suited to the demands of the "big houses," ought to score a healthy box office record in all other theatres.

A Clouded Name

(Norma Shearer—Playgoers—4,885 feet)

M. P. W.—Somewhat lacking in action, this picture will appeal primarily to those who are sentimentally inclined.

T. R.—May be listed as an ordinary program attraction likely to "get by" in the cheaper class of theatres.

N.—A very fair program picture, which might have been considerably better had it been handled in a logical manner.

E. H.—A well told and interesting story in five reels.

F. D.—Fairly interesting and absorbing combination of situations that suffer from poor handling.

Lost and Found

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—Because novelty and picturesqueness and realism of location, its strong drama and several punch scenes, should prove welcome in any theatre.

E. H.—Is a thriller of the South Sea Islands filmed in Tahiti. It should please, especially audiences that like action and forceful drama.

T. R.—Exactly the sort of thing calculated to win popularity with the masses, nor will it fail to please even the critical souls among screen audiences.

F. D.—One of those pictorially beautiful, tropical island pictures that is good to look at but otherwise fairly weak.

N.—All very fine and we predict for it a real welcome at the hands of the public.

Back Home and Broke

(Thomas Meighan—Paramount—7,814 feet)

M. P. W.—Clean, refreshing and thoroughly enjoyable entertainment. Should find a welcome in practically every type of theatre.

E. H.—An American idyl for every-day Americans and its theatre history should be an unbroken record of financial and audience satisfaction.

T. R.—Despite its prosy beginning, makes good in the long run and registers as a very likely box office attraction.

N.—It is bright and must be called one of the most entertaining documents of the season.

F. D.—A good entertainment; fine audience appeal and sure-fire material despite rather obvious situations.

Boss of Camp 4

(Charles Jones—Fox—4,235 feet)

M. P. W.—Should be popular with men. More interest than the recent vehicles for the star because it presents something slightly different in the way of outdoor dramas.

T. R.—Should prove to be a thoroughly satisfactory box office attraction.

N.—It is a he-man picture—one of the best which the star has ever made. It will add greatly to his popularity.

F. D.—Fine actionful western that has more speed than a half dozen features put together.

E. H.—Plenty of action and not a few thrills. It affords good entertainment.

Thelma

(Featured Cast—F. B. O.—6,000 feet)

M. P. W.—Should prove satisfactory entertainment for the masses.

T. R.—Fulfills every demand of the movie patron.

N.—A splendid screen version of Marie Corelli's popular novel.

F. D.—A good box office attraction for certain exhibitors; first rate production.

E. H.—A well-made and very entertaining adaptation of Marie Corelli's book.

"Down to the Sea" Is Exploited by Crandall

Taking advantage of the contest idea in exploitation for Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships," which opens at Rowland & Clark's State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on April 9th, Milton Crandall has put over a good one in conjunction with the Pittsburgh Post.

Through the aid of the newspaper Mr. Crandall has opened a contest for all boys and girls in the elementary schools of Pittsburgh, inviting all to write an essay on whales, the one sending in the best to be awarded a silver loving cup 18 inches high. There are 20 other prizes that will be given to the next best winners.

Crandall's efforts resulted in plenty of front-page publicity. Photographs in the newspaper for days preceding the showing were in evidence. The Pittsburgh Post had to put on additional help in order to handle the essays coming in. Special advertising has been placed in the daily papers and nothing left undone that would in any way publicize "Down to the Sea in Ships."

To further increase the interest in whales, Milton Crandall kept a sharp lookout for all news material throughout the United States. These stories were capitalized and used in all of the Pittsburgh papers. Through Mr. Crandall's efforts, working in conjunction with the branch manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Exchange in Pittsburgh and the management of the State Theatre, the amount of interest created for Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" was amazing.

Slides Inform Patrons of State Tax Limit

Under the direction of H. H. Buxbaum, district manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the territory served by the New York, Buffalo, Albany and New Jersey exchanges, every exhibitor in New York State has received a post card reminding him that Monday, April 16, is the last day for the payment of the New York State income tax.

In co-operation with the State Tax Commission, Mr. Buxbaum has ordered a series of slides for distribution through the New York, Buffalo and Albany exchanges to all Paramount exhibitors in the State. These slides not only call attention to the last day of payment but remind audiences that, whereas the exemption for married men was $2,500 under the Federal tax, with $400 for each child or dependent, the exemptions under the State tax are only $2,000 and $200 respectively.

Dalton Takes Vacation

Dorothy Dalton has finished her work in "Fog Bound," her latest Paramount picture, and is taking a short vacation before beginning work in a picture which Ralph Ince will direct from J. Clarkson Miller's adaptation of a play by C. M. McLellan. Irvin Willat is finishing the sequences of "Fog Bound," in which Miss Dalton does not appear.

Cleveland Has Simultaneous Showing of Clifton Film

To Cleveland, Ohio, goes the distinction of being the first city in the United States to have a simultaneous showing in two theatres of the W. W. Hodkinson super-special, Elmer Clifton's film classic of whaling days, "Down to the Sea in Ships." Both Reades Hippodrome, one of the largest theatres in the world, in seating capacity, in the heart of Cleveland's downtown district, will present the widely advertised feature commencing Monday, April 9, with the Circle Theatre, at 102nd and Euclid avenue, having its premiere one day earlier, on Sunday, April 8. Both of the Cleveland engagements are indefinite, depending upon the business as to the length of their continuance.

The premiere showing in Ohio of "Down to the Sea in Ships" is set for Saturday evening, April 7, at the Alhambra Theatre in Toledo.

Elaborate exploitation and publicity campaigns are being waged in both the Northern Ohio cities for this sensation of the screen, with exhibitors throughout the entire state vitally interested and bidding against each other for the privilege of showing it first in their respective cities.

Eileen Percy Featured in "Children of Jazz"

Eileen Percy, well-known film star, has been signed by Famous Players-Lasky to appear in a featured roll in "Children of Jazz," a Jerome Storm production for Paramount.

Miss Percy has been a member of the film colony in Hollywood for several years. During that time she served a contract with the William Fox studios, where she was starred. Later she freelanced, appearing in several big productions. Previous to the contract she has just signed with Paramount she appeared in a special production at Universal.

"Children of Jazz" was started Monday, March 26. Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez and Robert Cain are also featured with Miss Percy. Beulah Marie Dix adapted the screen story from the play by Harold Brighouse.

Predicts "The Fog" Will Be Big Hit

With the completion of actual studio work on "The Fog," the second Max Graf production to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation, comes a report from Metro that this photoplay is destined to be one of the biggest box-office hits of the present motion picture producing season.

Winifred Dunn adapted the story to the screen. Paul Powell directed. The photography was done by John Arnold.

Triumphal Tour of "Four Horsemen"

The triumphal march through the United States and the world of Rex Ingram's production for Metro of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" continues.

Among the houses which recently put it over big is the Palace Theatre at Hamilton, Ohio, which heralded its showing of this magnificent screen classic with a full page in the Hamilton Evening Journal. The theatre itself took the greater part of the page and the remainder was divided among various merchants co-operating in advertising tie-ups. These hook-ups included a book store, music shop, clothing store and drug store.

Barbara La Marr in New Metro Film

Barbara La Marr has been awarded one of the leading roles in Reginald Barker's picturization of G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Law-Bringers," a drama of the great snow country. The photoplay went into production this week at the Louis B. Mayer studio. Metro will be the distributor.

Goldwyn Purchases "Three Weeks"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to Elinor Glyn's widely read novel, "Three Weeks," and will make a big feature production based upon it.

Strand Books Four from First National

Four pictures that promise to be among the biggest successes on First National's list are booked for early showing at the Strand Theatre. They are the Thomas H. Ince production, "What a Wife Learned," April 15; Jackie Coogan in "Daddy," April 22; Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law," April 29, and Ince's "Scars of Jealousy," May 13.

"What a Wife Learned" was directed by John Griffith Wray from a story by Bradley King.

Those who have seen "Daddy," it is said, agreed that in this simple and appealing story Jackie Coogan does the finest acting of his career. E. Mason Hopper directed.

Norma Talmadge's interpretation of the persecuted shop girl in Bayard Veiller's famous drama, "Within the Law," is brought to the screen for First National by Joseph M. Schenck with Frank Lloyd directing. It is doubtful if Miss Talmadge ever had a greater opportunity for emotional acting than in this stirring play, it is stated.

"Scars of Jealousy" is a drama of the Kentucky hills, a story of feuds, treacherous ambuscades and primitive loves. Lambert Hillyer directed.

Names Five Metros Among Month's Best

The National Board of Review, which publishes each month a list of selected photoplays as a guide to movie-goers, seeking the best in film entertainment, selected every one of the five Metro features viewed during February as worthy of a coveted place on the list. And the board remarks: "This is quite a collection of features by any one company to appear on one of our photoplay guides."

The photoplays to attain this marked distinction were "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Jassamania," "Success," "The Woman of Bronze," and "Your Friend and Mine." A remarkable feature of the selection of the five Metro features by the National Board of Review is that these pictures represent such a wide range of treatment and subject matter. They cover stories all the way from powerful heart appeal to light dramatic comedy.

Pick Cast for "Salomy Jane"

George Melford's forthcoming Paramount picture, "Salomy Jane," will have a cast of unusual strength. The name of Louise Dresser is the latest to be added to those of Jacqueline Logan, Maurice Flynn and William Davidson.

"Salomy Jane," one of the great classics of American literature, will be taken in the famous old mining district of Northern California, whence have come Bret Harte's greatest stories.

"Masters of Men" Is Completed

Prints of "Masters of Men," Vitagraph's picturization of Morgan Robertson's greatest sea story, have been shipped to the exchanges. It is a story of a boy who ran away to sea after accepting the blame for a petty theft and shows the cruel life of men before the mast contrasted with the wholesome conditions under which enlisted men live in the United States navy. David Smith directed the production and the picturization was made by C. Graham Baker. The cast is one of the strongest ever offered, four stars, Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Wanda Hawley appearing in the leading roles. The United States Navy Department critics have praised the sea action highly.

Music Score Highly Commended

"Down to the Sea in Ships" has received many favorable comments regarding the attractive musical setting aranged by Edward Kilyeni.

The Cameo Theatre has been in receipt of numerous letters commending them upon the attractive musical score and expressions of satisfaction have been heard from the audiences after every performance.

A number of popular American folk songs have been used, such as "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," "Home Again," "Midshipmate," "The Lass That Loves a Sailor" and "Sunday Morning." During the exciting whale chase McDowell's "Sea Song" was used. According to many who know music, it is said that the value of the music used in conjunction with "Down to the Sea in Ships" is due to the smoothness of the various themes so interwoven that the melodic texture did not seem interrupted.

Ship "The Barnyard"

Larry Seamon's coming release, "The Barnyard," is being shipped to Vitagraph's branches. Kathlyn Meyers who played the lead with Larry in "No Wedding Bells," will also be seen in "The Barnyard." Seamon has directed his ingenuity to the operation of new laugh stunts of domestic animals and has produced a hundred new gags.

New Thriller Arrives

William Duncan's new western thriller has arrived in the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn for final editing. In it will appear Duncan and Edith Johnson and a cast including Frank Beal, Francis Powers, Dick La Reno, Edmund Cobb and Bob Reis. Frank Beal directed the first photoplay that Duncan ever wrote or appeared in. It was called "The Brotherhood of Man" and these two have been personal friends ever since.

Building Big Sets for "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram was scheduled to start filming "Scaramouche" on Monday, March 19, but he advanced his schedule two days. Saturday was St. Patrick's Day and Mr. Ingram is Irish; so there couldn't be any doubt in the youthful director's mind as to the best day to launch what is said to be his most ambitious production for Metro since "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

The initial scenes of "Scaramouch" were made in and about the French town which has been constructed in the San Fernando valley for this picture. The village covers sixty acres and is entirely surrounded by a stone wall. About 1,500 people will participate in the scenes in this setting. Many other large sets are now under construction on the Metro studio grounds and stages.

The cast for "Scaramouche" will be headed by Alice Terry and Ramon Novarro. Lewis Stone, whose notable performances in "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Trifling Women," two of Mr. Ingram's recent productions, stood out so prominently, will enact the part of the Marquis, one of the outstanding characters of the story.

Ministers Interested in Ray's New Picture

Charles Ray, who is hard at work on the production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," has received the congratulations of the Congregational Ministers' Union of Los Angeles, with the best wishes of the clergymen for complete success. In Hollywood, it is declared no such endorsement of a motion picture undertaking not a strictly religious nature was ever before given by a ministerial body of any denomination.

It has been pointed out that the history of the Congregational church in this country is inseparably interwoven with the early colonial history in New England that the filming of such a picture as "The Courtship of Myles Standish. The Los Angeles Congregationalists did not give their endorsement to the project until production work was well under way, and they were assured by what they saw in visits to the Charles Ray studios that the production ensured historical accuracy.

Even the revelation that John Alden, of "Why don't you speak for yourself?" celebrity, was not a devout worshipper when he left England on the Mayflower, but a young business man intent on gaining his share of financial profit from the adventure, failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the Los Angeles ministers. Even though it may mean the shattering of many other fondly-cherished traditions, they feel that the photoplay will prove of value as a permanent historical document, from the preservation of which there is no chance that religious organizations can suffer in any degree.

One of "The Courtship's" enthusiastic fans is the Rev. Frank Dyer, pastor of the Wilshire Boulevard Congregational Church of Los Angeles. Dr. Dyer is giving tangible evidence of his interest. He has advised Mr. Ray that he is preparing a series of articles on "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for leading church journals. The Christian Science Monitor, of Boston, is another religious publication which has already published long articles concerning this picture.

From the interest manifested by churchmen and educators, the prediction has been made that in its exploitation this picture will have the aid of a far greater number of volunteers than have helped to put over any film.

Hodkinson Film Packing 'Em In

Owing to the success of the Hodkinson special, "Down to the Sea in Ships," which has just completed six successful weeks at the Cameo Theatre, New York, it has been held over for an additional four weeks.

Instead of dropping off as might have been expected after a run of this duration, the receipts, on the contrary, have maintained a steady high average week after week. It is reported that at 10 o'clock in the morning when the box-office opens it is not uncommon to find twenty-five or thirty people in line.

Beyond the four additional weeks which it is scheduled to run, the Hodkinson Corporation has taken an option of four more weeks, and there seems to be little doubt of the picture running for at least two months longer.

Even during Holy Week, when a falling off in attendance would not have been considered unusual, there was a substantial increase in receipts over any week since the opening.

MALCOLM McGREGOR who plays a fighting role in "All Brothers Were Valiant," but he assumes a less pugnacious part in the recently completed Metro picture, "A Noise in Newboro."

Clifton Special Gets New Bookings

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors for Elmer Clifton's whaling story, "Down to the Sea in Ships," announces that the Stanley Company of America has booked this romance of old whaling days to play the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., for an extended run, beginning April 23. It is understood that special advertising and exploitation is in preparation to give this production a big send-off for its Philadelphia run.

The Mishler Theatre, Altoona, Pa., is the first key town in the Pittsburgh territory to sign for "Down to the Sea in Ships" following its run at Rowland & Clark's State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa. The Mishler Theatre has a capacity of 1,900—50c top—and is considered to be one of the best leading theatres in Altoona.

Wilmer & Vincent, of the Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., have also signed to play "Down to the Sea in Ships" at some future date. This is just a few of the many contracts that are being received daily at the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation regarding Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships."

"Robin Hood" Sets New Record

To the George Eastman endowed theatre recently opened at Rochester, N. Y., goes the credit for having set a new six-day record for theatrical performances of any kind in cities of the size of Rochester. Douglas Fairbanks, now famous film "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" played one week at the Eastman theatre to 58,189 paid admissions, an average of 9,696 daily. A message of congratulation was sent to Mr. Fairbanks by William Fait, Jr., manager of the Eastman, upon the box-office merit of this attraction.

Goldwyn to Release "Backbone" April 30

"Backbone," the first of the twelve big 1923 specials of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, will be released on April 30 by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation under the terms of the new contract recently signed between Arthur S. Friend and F. J. Godsol.

"Backbone" is the first production of Distinctive since its expansion late in 1922. It had its private showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, recently. It is from the popular serial by Clarence Budington Kelland.

Alfred Lunt takes the male lead. Edith Roberts has a prominent part. Supporting Lunt and Miss Roberts is a strong cast, it is stated. Edward Sloman directed the picture.

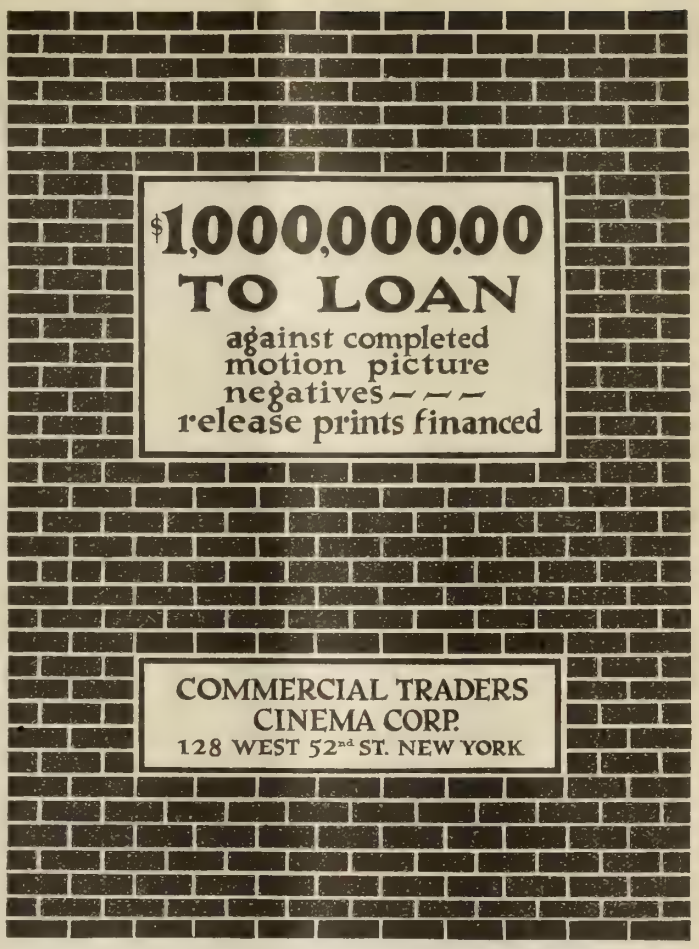
"Souls for Sale" a Hit in Los Angeles

Goldwyn's long expressed belief that it has in the new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale," a photoplay of enormous audience appeal and the biggest and most artistic motion picture the company has yet made, ranking with the finest the industry affords, is being proved correct in Los Angeles, it is reported. The picture was shown at the California Theatre in that city recently to the biggest and most enthusiastic audiences in the history of the city, it is said. Capacity audiences have greeted the photoplay at every performance.

The picture gives fans a chance to see their screen favorites at work actually making pictures—not alone those appearing in the cast of "Souls for Sale," but nearly fifty other screen luminaries from various companies.

The Chambers of Commerce of both Los Angeles and of Hollywood have arranged for special showings of the photoplay for their members and will send messages concerning the film to other chambers of commerce throughout the country.

"Souls for Sale" will receive its first performance outside of Los Angeles at the Capitol Theatre, New York, for the week beginning Sunday, April 8, with a S. L. Rothafel presentation.



Audiences Highly Laud Metro-S-L Production

"Received more compliments and favorable comments on 'Quincy Adams Sawyer' than anything else we have played for a year. A treat to play such a splendid production."

The foregoing was contained in a telegram sent by A. R. Anderson, who owns and operates The Twin Falls Amusement Company, Twin Falls, Idaho, to the Salt Lake exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of this photoplay.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," the Metro-SL special production, based on the New England novel by Charles Felton Pidgin, has been the subject of thousands of uniformly commendatory messages which have been and are still being received at the home offices and the branches of Metro.

Praise for Ray's "The Girl I Loved"

Quick and unstinted praise is said to have followed the world premier showing of Charles Ray's latest photoplay feature, "The Girl I Loved," a United Artists Corporation release, at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. The public flocked to see it, and talked about it and praised it; the critics were unanimous in their verdict in favor of it, it is reported.

"Place this latest Charles Ray production, a reverent conception of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, in the list of the best photodramas of the year," said the review of the Los Angeles Evening Express.

"Dramatically, photographically and histrionically 'The Girl I Loved' is a triumph for Charles Ray," said the critic for the Examiner. "Charles Ray may have done better things on the screen, but I doubt whether any of his portrayals will cling longer to the memory," said the reviewer of the Evening Herald.

"Charles Ray has effected a work of art which may have its place in the history of pictures," said the critic for the Record.

Seastrom to Direct "Master of Man"

Victor Seastrom, Swedish actor-director, has selected Sir Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man," to translate to the screen as his first production under his long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

First National's "Dulcy" Reported Under Way

Constance Talmadge and the players appearing in her support in "Dulcy," under the direction of Sidney Franklin, left for location at Barstow, Calif., where a number of the big scenes will be made. It is on First National's schedule for release late this spring.

Particular care was taken by Director Franklin in casting this picture, for the story is rich in opportunities for effective characterization. The roster of the company now reads, Jack Mulhall, Ann Wilson, Johnny Harron, Ann Cornwell, Gilbert Douglas, Andre Deberanger and Milla Davenport, all of whom accompanied Miss Talmadge to Barstow.

William Beaudine, who is directing Booth Tarkington's story, "Penrod and Sam," finished the school room sequence a few days ago and expects to have the picture completed by April 10.

Director James Young has started shooting "Trilby," Du Maurier's famous classic, which Richard Walton Tully is producing for First National release. Andre Lafayette is playing the title role, while others in the cast include Creighton Hale, Arthur Edmund Carew, Wilfred Lucas, Philo McCullough, Francis McDonald, Rose Dion, Max Constant and Maurice Canon. Director Young's last production for First National, "Wandering Daughters," is being edited and titled.

Production on Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance" was started last week under the direction of Frank Lloyd. It is estimated that this picture, to be distributed by First National, will be six months in the making. The costumes and props will cost not less than $80,000. Sixty sets will be made for the picture, including an exact replica of the world's famous Louvre, the largest interior set ever constructed. Twenty-five hundred people will be used in this set which will cost $200,000.

"Poor Men's Wives" Nearing Record

"Poor Men's Wives," Gasnier's recent production for Preferred Pictures is approaching the record set by "Rich Men's Wives," according to the Al Lichtman Corporation which reports heavy bookings for the feature everywhere.

After its Broadway premier of two weeks at the Criterion, "Poor Men's Wives" has completed a successful round of the Keith, Moss and Proctor houses and is now being shown in ten Loew theatres. It is scheduled to play in more than forty other metropolitan houses at early dates.

Twenty-four Hours Schedule Is New Policy at United Studios

Three shifts are employed at the United Studios in Los Angeles working twenty-four hours a day constructing and tearing down sets for the seven productions now under way there. They will be busy many weeks, for there is much work ahead for them.

"We are speeding up as the industry never before has been sped up," declared M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, in a recent interview. "Organize—systematize—supervise! Those are our watchwords and they enable us to do three times the amount of work done at most studios."

"Though other studios, in times past, have worked day and night to complete a set or a series of sets this is the first time that a twenty-four hour day has been inaugurated as a permanent policy by any studio," Mr. Levee declares.

"Like other studios, we have in the past put the construction of sets into the hands of a foreman—one man who had entire charge of the work and had to be there to supervise it. Now we lay it out in the office, give six sets of blue prints to six different departments and tell them—'This work must be done by 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. If you can't do it, let us know in time and tell us why and we will have it done by outside contract.'

"Then we forget about it, until we get a report that it is done. The blueprints are handed over by the day shift of the plastering department, say, at 4:30 to the night shift and at midnight to the morning crew. The work goes forward continuously."

Thirty-two sets for First National pictures will be completed on the United lot in the next few days. There are 102 sets to be made for one production on the lot, the Norma Talmadge production, "Ashes of Vengeance."

Other First National productions under way on the United lot include Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle"; Richard Walton Tully's "Trilby"; Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust"; Constance Talmadge's "Dulcy"; Sol Lesser's "The Meanest Man in Town," and Edwin Carew's "Girl of the Golden West."

Goldwyn Has Many Films from Great Novels on Hand or in the Making

In its search for motion picture plots and ideas that are out of the ordinary and suitable for big super-features, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation states it has been delving into the world's output of fiction, novels, plays and original scenarios, but principally novels.

Fifteen of its productions now ready, in the making or purchased for early productions are from novels. In addition to its own product, Goldwyn will distribute many other pictures based upon novels from the product of Cosmopolitan Pictures and Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

Four Goldwyn pictures based upon novels which are now completed are: "The Strangers' Banquet," by Donn Byrne, produced by Marshall Neilan, with a cast of twenty-three stars; "The Christian," by Sir Hall Caine, directed by Maurice Tourneur; "Vanity Fair," by William Makepeace Thackeray, produced by Hugo Ballin, starring Mabel Ballin, and "Souls for Sale," by Rupert Hughes, directed by the author himself.

Two famous novels are now in production. One is the late Frank Norris' realistic story of California, "McTague," to be known as "Greed." It is being directed by Erich von Strohelm as his first production for Goldwyn. The other, which Lambert Hillyer is directing, is a new film version of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," a Jesse D. Hampton production, which Goldwyn will distribute.

Sir Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man," will soon go into production at Goldwyn studios, with the famous Swedish actor-director, Victor Seastrom, in charge. Thomas Hardy's story, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," is on the schedule as a Marshall Neilan production, with Blanche Sweet in the stellar role.

F. Marion Crawford's popular novel, "In the Palace of the King," will be Emmett J. Flynn's first Goldwyn picture. Arthur Somers Roche's novel, "The Day of Faith," will be directed for Goldwyn by Tod Browning, recently placed under a long-term contract.

Honore de Balzac's famous novel, "The Magic Skin" ("Le Peau de Chagrin"), will be produced for Frank Mills by George D. Baker. Work will soon begin. Edgar Wallace's "Captain of Souls" is listed for early production.

A Joseph Hergesheimer story, "Wild Oranges," has been bought for a screen special. Elinor Glyn's famous "Three Weeks" will be screened. Also General Lew Wallace's novel, "Ben Hur," one of the most widely read novels in the world, is going to be elaborately produced.

A number of well-known novels are being produced by Distinctive Pictures Corporation and will be distributed by Goldwyn, according to the terms of the agreement made last week between the two corporations. Among these novels are Sir Gilbert Parker's dramatic story of Eygpt, "The Weavers"; I. A. R. Wylie's "The Inheritors"; three novels by Clarence Budington Kelland, "Backbone," "Steadfast Heart" and "Hearts and Fists"; Anzia Yeziarsk's "Salome of the Tenements"; Harold MacGrath's "The Ragged Edge," and others.

Novels of great importance will figure in the list of Cosmopolitan productions which Goldwyn will distribute.

Fox Foreign Office Signs Big Houses

The two leading first run theatres in Cuba are showing the current releases of Fox Film Corporation, according to Manager H. H. Pollack, of the recently established Havana offices of the organization.

These are the Campoamor and the Capitalio, Havana's largest and most modern picture palaces. Among the programs of the past few months have been included beside many Fox program features the following five specials: "The Queen of Sheba," "My Friend the Devil," "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court," "The Fast Mail" and "Nero," the J. Gordon Edwards spectacle.

Paramount Film Makes Record

Paramount's "The Covered Wagon" achieved the remarkable distinction of setting a new box-office record at the Criterion Theatre, New York, during Holy Week, recognized by showmen everywhere as the toughest week of the year for theatrical business. The figures submitted by the Paramount statistical department show that the total receipts for Holy Week exceeded those of the preceding opening week, which had set a new record for the Criterion, by $139.50, the respective figures being $10,873.50 and $11,013.00.

With the single exception of Easter Saturday, when the receipts fell under those of the preceding Saturday by $2.50, every day of the week beat the corresponding day of the previous week, the biggest gain being registered on Good Friday, exactly $36.00.

Every one of the 608 seats in the Criterion is sold out in advance, the fluctuation from day to day being accounted for by the number of standing room admissions sold.

Meighan Completes "Ne'er-Do-Well"

Alfred E. Green has completed the production of Rex Beach's "The Ne'er-Do-Well," starring Thomas Meighan, at the Paramount Long Island studio. It is expected that this picture will surpass any of Mr. Meighan's former starring vehicles. The company spent six weeks in Panama making the exterior scenes and many gorgeous interiors also will be shown. An excellent cast supported Mr. Meighan in this production, including Lila Lee, Gertrude Astor, John Miltern, Jules Cowles, Sid Smith, Laurance Wheat, Gus Weinberg and George O'Brien.

Mr. Meighan has gone to White Sulphur Springs, Va., with Mrs. Meighan for a short vacation before starting his next picture which will be a sea story, the title of which has not yet been announced. While at the resort Meighan will confer with George Ade on a new story which Mr. Ade is writing for him.

Edwards Working in Eastern Studios

J. Gordon Edwards, veteran director of many screen spectacles, among which are "Nero" and "Queen of Sheba," the Fox specials, is at work again at the New York studios of Fox Film Corporation on another special production to be released in the fall.

Edwards returned from Panama early last week after a four-week sojourn filming many of the exteriors of the new picture.

In the cast of the new production, title for which has not been selected, are Edmund Loe, Bela Lugosi, Carl Harbaugh, Martin Faust, Jack Edwards and Bryon Douglas.

The scenario was written by Anthony Paul Kelly.

This will make the forty-eighth feature-length photodrama handled by the Fox director.

Quits Serial Leads for Features

Esther Ralston, popular leading woman of many Universal serials, will have the leading feminine role in "Pure Grit," a Hoot Gibson starring vehicle, now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

This is her first appearance as the feminine lead in Universal's feature attractions. Elinor Fair, who was originally cast for the role, has been assigned to another production.

Miss Ralston has just completed her work as the leading woman in "The Phantom Fortune," a William Desmond starring serial, when she was chosen to play in this adaptation of Gene Markey's "Blinky." The picture will afford Miss Ralston her first feature lead since her appearance as Mary Jane in "Huckleberry Finn."

Educator Praises Fox Films

Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual aids to instruction of the Board of Education, has written to Louis Rosenbluh, executive of the New York Exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, commending some of the classical features, and educational and instructional films produced by William Fox.

Among those he mentions are "Evangeline," "If I Were King," "Connecticut Yankee," "Volcanoes of the World," and "Japanese Housewife."

"Shadows" a Hit

Dave Bershon, booking manager for the West Coast Theatres, was so gratified with "Shadows," the recent Preferred release through Al Lichtman, that he insisted on paying an additional rental over the contract price.

Viola Dana to Star in New Series of Six Metro Films

A new series of six special photoplays, starring Viola Dana, will soon be produced at the Metro studios, stories having already been selected for the star. In addition, work on six new productions will be begun with celebrated casts in stories by widely-read authors. Technicolor Pictures Corporation, makers of the first natural-color picture, "Toll of the Sea," will soon undertake another photoplay, using the same new color invention.

The foregoing program of activities was announced upon the arrival at the Metro studios in Hollywood of Milton B. Hoffman, Metro production manager, who recently returned to the Coast after an extended visit in New York, where he conferred with Metro executives regarding further production. According to the present schedule, work on the first Viola Dana release will be undertaken about April 1.

Although "The Toll of the Sea" already has won the highest commendation both as a technical achievement and as a dramatic photoplay, its makers have gone even further in perfecting the new process which brings out flawlessly every tint and shade in natural colors. Several important improvements which have already been adopted, make this invention even more remarkable.

Negotiations for the stories to be used for Miss Dana's productions are now being conducted with several nationally known authors. The most recently completed photoplay which the star has made is "Her Fatal Millions," based on a story by William Dudley Pelley. William Beaudine directed it.

"The Pilgrim" Making Records Everywhere

Charles Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" is now in its fifth week at Balaban & Katz's Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and, according to the present strength it will run for two additional weeks, thereby equalling the first run record of "The Kid," which played for six consecutive weeks at the Randolph Theatre. With enthusiastic press criticisms as an impetus, "The Pilgrim" achieved instantaneous popularity.

Chicago exhibitors are manifesting keen interest in the new Chaplin release as reflected in the record-breaking business pouring into the First National Chicago Exchange. Although "The Pilgrim" will not be officially released in the Chicago territory until April 16, already 175 of the 350 theatres within the city limits have contracted for showings.

"There is every indication," says C. E. Bond, manager of the Chicago Exchange, "that 'The Pilgrim' will be played by at least 75 per cent of the Chicago theatres. Following the close of its run at the Roosevelt, the picture will be given a week at each of the houses on the Balaban and Katz circuit and will then be released generally. In practically every city where it has been shown, the newspaper critics have pronounced it as one of the most entertaining and artistic of the great comedian's productions. First National exchanges are receiving an unprecedented number of requests for return bookings.

A report just in from Louisville states that the Chaplin film has completed its run in that city and in Lexington, setting up new records for attendance at both engagements. The attendance record at the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, was formerly held by "East Is West," but "The Pilgrim" surpassed this figure by 1,800 more admissions. The Lexington showing likewise proved a tremendous success and arrangements have already been made for a return engagement.

I. Libson of Cincinnati stated that never before in the history of his theatres has a picture met with more favorable comment than "The Pilgrim." It broke all records in Columbus, Dayton and Cincinnati.

Ben Cowan Congratulates Pathe

Enclosed in a recent report to the Pathe export department from Proprietor Ben Cowan of the Express Film and Cine Agency, Dublin, on the first trade showing of "Dr. Jack" to Irish exhibitors, was a personal note of congratulations to Harold Lloyd which Producer Hal Roach will deliver to the comedian on his return to the Pacific Coast. The note reads in part:

"This last film was trade-shown by me in Dublin yesterday. I have never spent a happier hour than in watching you and Miss Mildred Davis rendering your parts so beautifully in a story full of subtle humor, pathos and fun."

Torrence Initiated On United Lot

Ernest Torrence, who is scoring a sensational success in "The Covered Wagon," made his debut on the United Studio lot in Los Angeles, last week in Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle."

The first appearance at this studio of Mr. Torrence was made the occasion of the day. Headed by M. C. Levee, president of the United, and Maurice Tourneur, Torrence was greeted by all the players working on the lot, including Harry Myers, Tully Marshall, Bert Lytell, Helen Lynch, Marion Aye, Charlotte Merriam and others, and initiated into the fold. After riding "Jazzbo," the trick mule appearing in "The Brass Bottle," the actor was put through a series of other initiation stunts which he survived with all limbs intact.

In "The Brass Bottle," Mr. Torrence will portray the leading role of Jinee who causes all the trouble.

"Covered Wagon" to Open in Chicago

James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," which is proving such a sensational success in its premiere engagement at the New York Criterion, will open in Chicago April 22 at the Woods Theatre. John C. Flinn is in Chicago this week making the preliminary arrangements for the presentation.

Leonard S. Sowar, the new owner of the Strand, Muncie, Ind., has signed for the first engagements of the following Lichtman pictures in his city: "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "The Hero," "Poor Men's Wives," "Are You a Failure," "The Girl Who Came Back" and "Daughters of the Rich."

Williamson, Producer of Undersea Films, Has Had Adventurous Career

J. Ernest Williamson, producer and director of "Wonders of the Sea," the undersea picture now being distributed by Film Booking Offices, has had a most adventurous career. He holds the distinction of being the pioneer producer of undersea motion pictures, and in the ten years devoted to this work he has invented and perfected many devices in the field of scientific photography.

One of the great inventions of the age has been the method that has made possible the photography of submarine views as originated and developed by Mr. Williamson.

It was in 1913 that he conceived the idea of photographing under water. As in many another case, Mr. Williamson's achievements were made possible almost by accident, and by means of apparatus designed for a totally different purpose. His father, Captain Charles Williamson, a noted marine architect and inventor, realized the necessity for devices for salvaging sunken ships, and designed a practical apparatus for the purpose. This consisted of a heavy steel chamber, which was lowered into the sea and connected with the surface float or ship by means of a flexible, sectional steel tube. Descending through this tube to the water-tight chamber, the salvager could locate wrecks through the heavy glass windows through which the beams of a powerful searchlight were cast. Instantly, it was constructed, his son, then a news photographer, saw other possibilities in the apparatus.

After much experimenting with his father's submarine tube system, he developed a method of producing clear, still picture photography under water with the aid of artificial light. In his experimental work, he made many descents under the sea, sometimes to great depths, until he had finally worked out a practical method of submarine photography that gave the idea a commercial value.

The wiseacres, of course, scoffed at his ideas. They claimed that no light penetrated to the ocean's floor, that the beams of the searchlight would be diffused by the water and would be inadequate to cause an impression on the film, and that long time exposures were necessary even at moderate depths in order to get photographic records under water. But Mr. Williamson thought differently, and a month later in association with his brother, he organized an expedition to the West Indies, where, with improved submarine apparatus, he produced the first undersea motion picture, known as "The Williamson Submarine Expedition."

His next accomplishment, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," was greeted by critics, producers and the public with great commendation. Under the same firm name, he has produced several other super-photoplays, each of which has been greeted as a production of the highest rank in setting, photography and performance.

Mr. Williamson is now at work on a new undersea picture, "Undertow," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, which will be produced in the Bahama Islands in April.

Mr. Williamson expects this production to prove a revelation on the screen, in that, for the first time, scenes of marine life will be reproduced in natural color. It is said that some of the tropical fish are as highly colored as the plumage of a parrot. The waving sea gardens are scarlet, purple and old gold, and thousands of gorgeous colored fish dart among forests of living pink and white coral.

Paramount Names List of Players Taking Part in Cruze's "Hollywood"

With James Cruze's production, "Hollywood," nearing completion at the Lasky studio, Paramount has announced the complete list of players who will appear in the picture. Among those who will have conspicuous parts in the unfolding of the drama is Mr. Cruze himself, but the producer of "The Covered Wagon" will not be the sole representative of the directorial profession, for Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of Paramount, and Alfred E. Green, producer of all of Thomas Meighan's recent pictures, who recently completed the production of Rex Beach's "The Ne'er-Do-Well," both make their debuts as screen actors.

The list of prominent players eclipses even that of Cecil B. De Mille's "The Affairs of Anatol," which set a hitherto unapproached record in the way of all-star casts. "Hollywood" includes Thomas Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Betty Compson, Leatrice Joy, Walter Hiers, Lila Lee, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Nita Naldi, J. Warren Kerrigan, Elliott Dexter, Charles Ogle, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor Hope Hampton, Will Rogers, Gertrude Astor, Laurence Wheat, Ben Turpin, Kalla Pasha and Jim Finlayson.

In no sense propaganda nor, on the other hand, a travelogue or "trip to the movie studios," this picture, Paramount states, is a straigh human-interest drama, adapted by Tom J. Geraghty from Frank Condon's absorbingly interesting novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Child." The theme undoubtedly carries the most widely popular appeal for the average picture audience that could be conceived, for it is the intimate drama of the hopes and aspirations and the trials and disappointments of a girl whose consuming ambition is to gain fame and fortune in the movies—the prototype of perhaps a million screen-struck American girls not only of the small town but of the big city.

The four or five dominant characters are played by people unknown to screen audiences but all carefully chosen for type by Director Cruze. All of them, moreover, have had previous stage experience. These considerations were necessary on account of the inherent character of the story.

Baggot to Direct Rawlinson Film

King Baggot, who directed the Universal-Jewel productions, "Human Hearts" and "The Kentucky Derby," and who has directed Gladys Walton in many of her most popular features, has been chosen by Universal to direct Herbert Rawlinson in his next starring vehicle, "Thicker Than Water."

Milton Sills in a New Universal

Milton Sills, hero of numerous successful screen productions and himself a star, has been assigned by Universal to play the leading male role in "A Lady of Quality," a forthcoming Hobart Henley-Universal-Jewel production, starring Virginia Valli.

Shirley Mason's Next "Lovebound"

It is announced by Fox Film Corporation that Shirley Mason's latest feature, "Lovebound," will be released April 15. The picture was previously known as "Inside the Door," then changed to "Balance Due," and finally "Lovebound." The story, an original from the pen of George Scarborough, was especially written for the little star. Henry Otto directed and the cast includes besides Shirley Mason, the star, Albert Roscoe, leading man, and Richard Tucker, heavy.

The story is one of intrigue and dramatic crises, concerning the uncompromising situation in which the charming secretary to the district attorney was placed. To save her father, an ex-diamond crook, the girl helps his ex-partner. She marries the district attorney, who refuses to listen to protests. After an accumulation of dramatic situations, justice gets its balance due.

"The Red Lock" for Universal

Universal has just bought a western story, "The Red Lock," a novel by David Anderson, of recent publication.

It is likely that the picture will be used as a vehicle for Hoot Gibson, although it may be selected as a Jack Hoxie feature.

Miss Field in Two Universal Films

Elinor Field is appearing in two pictures at Universal City at the same time. She has the leading feminine role in the third series of "The Leather Pushers," the comedy-drama two-reelers starring Reginald Denny, and also will appear as Hoot Gibson's sister in "Blinky," Gibson's latest starring vehicle, now being filmed under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

New Editions Issued

Grosset & Dunlap, publishers of "best sellers," are bringing out new editions of "Truxton King," by George Barr McCutcheon, and "The Custard Cup," by Florence Bingham Livingston, illustrated by scenes from the famous screen productions of those books by Fox Film Corporation.

The Fox star of "Truxton King" is John Gilbert, while Mary Carr is featured in "The Custard Cup."

The new additions of these stories will provide a wider scope for exploitation and publicity tie-ups where these productions are presented. Much of the Fox paper has been so arranged as to make these stunts easily linked with the various publicity angles already prepared.

"Silas Marner," Feature at Circus Frolic

Associated Exhibitors' "Silas Marner" was the feature attraction last week at the Palace Theatre, Indianapolis, in connection with the Circus Frolic of the Indianapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce. The picture program was made up entirely of Associated and Pathe offerings.

On Monday there was a huge parade, Gov. Warren T. McCray heading a delegation of state and city offcials. The opening at the Palace that evening was a gala occasion, at which, the Indianapolis Star says, "Governor and Mrs. McCray, Senator Samuel M. Ralston and Mayor and Mrs. Lew Shank were greeted with an ovation when they entered boxes reserved for them."

I. Libson of Cincinnati, who owns the Indianapolis Palace, contracted for "Silas Marner," and ran the feature when the spring vacation was on so that it might cater to the young folks of the city.

A special showing of "Silas Marner" was given March 17, when 600 leading residents attended on invitation of Mrs. Fred L. Pettijohn, president of the Indianapolis Indorsers of Photoplays. Every person present was asked to express his opinion of the picture on an enclosed blank. The comments were unanimously complimentary. Following the special showing, 4,600 Boy Scouts called at the homes of the city, leaving at each a card, which they asked the "lady of the house" to sign, and on which she agreed to visit the Palace during "Silas Marner" and Circus Frolic week.

Costello As Villain

Maurice Costello, the first male movie star, is playing a villain in Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount picture, "Fog Bound," which Irvin Willat is directing at the company's eastern studio.

"March with Metro" Is Exchange Slogan

"March with Metro" was the effective slogan adopted by Charles E. Kessnich, manager of Metro's Atlanta Exchange, for his big March drive, and exhibitors in his territory heeded the slogan and "Marched with Metro" in fine style, it is said. The exchange was flooded with orders for bookings of the remarkable array of Metro's 1922-1923 pictures.

"I just told them what I had, and they did the rest," Mr. Kessnich remarked with a broad grin of satisfaction.

And he told them in an attractive manner. A pamphlet program of the photoplays on the Metro schedule so far this season was mailed to exhibitors.

"There is little wonder," says Mr. Kessnich, that the exhibitors "Marched with Metro" when they were shown a list including such pictures as the Rex Ingram productions of "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Trifling Women" and "Where the Pavement Ends"; Mae Murray in "Jazzmania," "Broadway Rose" and "The "French Doll"; Viola Dana in "A Noise in Newboro," "Crinoline and Romance," "Her Fatal Millions," "Five Dollar Baby" and "June Madness"; the Fred Niblo production of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," Clara Kimball Young in "Hands of Nara," "The Woman of Bronze" and "Enter Madame"; "The Forgotten Law"; Laurette Taylor in "Peg O' My Heart"; "All the Brothers Were Valiant," with a notable cast including Lon Chaney, Billie Dove and others; "The Toll of the Sea," the first and only picture ever photographed in natural colors; Reginald Barker's production of "Hearts Aflame"; "Quincy Adams Sawyer" with a notable cast; "Forget-Me-Not," with a special cast; the Max Graf production of "The Fog"; "Success," a Ralph Ince production; and several comedies featuring Bull Montana and Stan Laurel."

More features have been added to the schedule since this formidable list was sent out.

Manager Kessnich also sent out a giant postal card bearing the message, "March will be my month if you make it your month. To do this crowd our office with every date for March and join the procession of profit making exhibitors." A drawing on the card pictured great crowds, carrying banners with the names of Metro stars, flocking into a theatre on which "Metro" was emblazened. Mr. Kessnich pointed the way in.

Exhibitors Eager for "Alice Adams"

Florence Vidor, in "Alice Adams," is set for release April 8. To the home office of Associated Exhibitors has come an avalanche of reports from branch sales offices in every part of the country, the branch manager in every instance expressing unbounded enthusiasm over the sales possibilities of the feature, it is reported. It is noticeable, too, say Associated officials, that from every key point where exhibitors have had previews, have come voluntary demands for bookings at as early dates as can be arranged.

Associated Exhibitors says "Alice Adams" has been received by the experienced salesmen with a degree of enthusiasm such as is seldom manifested. These men are declaring that as both a box-office and an entertainment attraction "Alice Adams" has everything that a picture should possess.

Vivid Exploitation for New Pathe Film

When Pathe, in the near future, releases its Solomon Islands "Head Hunter" feature, "Black Shadows," interest in this strange drama of the savages and sirens of the South Seas, will be stimulated in a way similar to that which earned for "Nanook of the North" its tremendous success of popularity and esteem, Pathe reports.

This promise is made in connection with the receipt by Pathe of a large collection of "Head Hunter" curios which the producer of "Black Shadows" brought back from the tropical Pacific island scenes in which the barbarous human drama was photographed. These curios—war weapons, canoes and implements of various kinds—will form rare and interesting theatre lobby exhibits, as in the case of Robert J. Flaherty's great Eskimo epic.

They illustrate conditions of human life in every way almost directly opposite to those of the frozen North.

Proves a Big Hit

"My Wild Irish Rose," Vitagraph's special picturization from Boucicault's drama, "The Shaughraun," proved so popular at Tally's Theatre in Los Angeles that the run was extended a second week.

Writes Song for "Gimme"

One of the many exploitation aids for the Goldwyn-Rupert Hughes picture, "Gimme," is a song number of the same name written by Eddie Bonns, director of exploitation for Goldwyn, Lou Marangella and George Fairman.

The song is described as a "fox-trot" melody, and it is being successfully used by exhibitors throughout the country in advance of and during the showing of the picture.

Goldwyn exploiteers are securing tie-ups with local music dealers in their respective territories, and a sweeping publicity and exploitation campaign is being carried on by the publishers in order to make it one of the outstanding song hits of the year.

"Gimme" is published by Jack Mills, Inc., New York.

"Tents of Allah" at Grauman's Theatre

"The Tents of Allah," the big Encore feature in which Monte Blue and Mary Alden are starred, has been playing this week, April 2d, at Grauman's Four Million Dollar Theatre, in Los Angeles. The contract is said by Associated Exhibitors to be a big one.

The demand for this Edward A. MacManus production, which is from the intriguing story by Charles A. Logue and was directed by the author, has been heavy ever since the release on March 4 and has won enthusiastic reviews. The picture offers unusual opportunities for novel exploitation stunts, and full advantage is being taken of these, according to reports to the Home Offices of Associated.

Constance Wilson Leading Woman

Constance Wilson, younger sister of Lois Wilson, has risen to leading woman. She will play opposite Walter Hiers in "Fair Week," so titled temporarily, a Paramount comedy-drama on which shooting will soon start. Rob Wagner here also makes his debut as director.

Clubwoman Praises Pathe Picture

Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, for several years chairman of the motion picture committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, is quoted by Pathe as among the most recent writers of letters in praise of "Nanook of the North." Mrs. Chapman writes as follows:

"I cannot begin to tell you how much I and my friends enjoyed 'Nanook of the North' the other afternoon. There were scenes in that picture which I am sure will never leave my memory."

"Safety Last" Breaking Records

Pathe reports that business booked on "Safety Last" prior to release date exceeds the record made by any Harold Lloyd or other picture on its lists. Hal Roach, producer of all the Lloyd comedies, who is on his second visit to New York in the last sixty days, says that this triumph for "Safety Last" was anticipated both by himself and his star.

Extended runs of the new Lloyd comedy, Pathe says, are an outstanding feature of contracts with exhibitors in all of the larger cities.

"Robin Hood" Makes a New House Record

"For more than a year we have been striving to break our house record and have at last accomplished it with 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood,' which set a new high mark over $400 in excess of our previous record," writes Harry C. Brown, Jr., owner and manager of Scott's Opera House, Galt, Ontario, to United Artists.

"It is true that I paid more than double for this picture and the highest price that was ever paid for a film in this city, but aside from the money paid out and the money taken in, the satisfaction of showing such a satisfying picture to my patrons would have overshadowed even a loss on the presentation—had there been one."

Notable Gathering Applauds Ince Film

Before a distinguished gathering of professional women, including writers, musicians, painters, physicians and actresses, "What a Wife Learned," a Thomas H. Ince production which is being distributed by First National, was privately screened on Monday evening, April 2, with a special musical accompaniment.

This Bradley King play, in which Marguerite de la Motte and John Bowers take the leading parts, deals with the problem confronting a woman writer whose husband insists that she abandon her career and devote her time to their home. Those present were enthusiastic over the picture, it is reported.

The showing took place at Wurlitzer Hall, 120 West 42nd street, and was given especially for the Woman Pays Club, an organization of woman writers, of which Rita Weyman is president. Among those present, besides members of the Woman Pays Club and their friends, was the motion picture committee of the National Federation of Women's Clubs.

"What a Wife Learned" opens at the Strand Theatre, New York, April 15.

Many Cleveland Houses Showing Fox Special

"The Town That Forgot God," the spectacular flood special on the current Fox release program, opened this week in 23 Cleveland theatres. This engagement establishes a new mark for the simultaneous showing of any picture in Cleveland, and from early reports leads to the prediction of a mammoth total in receipts.
